After I came here to Washington I was struck with the fact that the letters which I received from Boston, Chicago, and other points had a perfectly smooth surface upon the flap of the envelope; whereas letters received from New York frequently presented this corrugated appearance. It so happened that meeting a gentleman who was on this floor yesterday who brought on the electoral vote of the State of New York, Mr. Parke Godwin, who is a friend of the postmaster of New York City, I handed him one of these envelopes and said "Look at that, has not that been opened?" He said that it looked so. I said, "You are going down town and will see Mr. James; take that and show it to him." Now I have the most entire confidence in Mr. James, and believe him to be a model public officer. And I have heretofore said on this floor that whatever mutations of politics may come to pass I trusted his valuable services would be retained. And I wish gentlemen here to understand now that I do not think Mr. James could be or would be a party to any tampering with letters that were addressed to me or to anybody else. The anonymous note that came to me stated that it was done in a private place in the post-office.

I have had letters in this House, and one morning I showed two of them casually to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE] and pointed out to him the corrugated appearance presented by the flap of the envelope. He said to me, and very properly, "You ought to call the attention of the House to this matter, if you think these letters have been tampered with." I replied to him that from the nature of the case it would scarcely be possible for me to bring any other evidence than the letters, showing by their appearance that they had been opened.

I do not know that these letters have been opened, and therefore I have not stated as a fact that they have been tampered with, nor do I now state it as a fact. But I do say that I have a suspicion which amounts to a belief that my letters have been opened, and I have acted upon that belief, so far as to send special letters by express, and to request gentlemen who have special letters to send to me to send them by express. It may be that I have been taking unnecessary precautions, that my eyes have deceived me, and on the other hand that a committee of investigation may get at facts of which I have no knowledge.

I have myself no objection to the appointment of a committee of investigation. I think that probably no good will come of it, that no facts will be discovered. Hence it is that I myself have not been willing to put the country to an expense of an investigation of this matter. If gentlemen, however, think it would do any good, I certainly will cheerfully assent to it.

Unfortunately I threw my anonymous letter into the waste-basket, as I always do with such letters. I receive from ten to twenty such letters in the course of a week, and I throw them all away. And so with these envelopes, the peculiar appearance of which I have described. I have shown them to gentlemen and those gentlemen can be produced before the committee, but the envelopes themselves have been thrown away.

It is a most remarkable thing that this morning my letters present a marked difference in appearance from those which I have heretofore received. Not a single letter in my package this morning presents this corrugated appearance. I do not know how to account for it; I simply state the facts to the House. Having stated the facts, I am perfectly willing to have a committee of investigation appointed, and I will furnish whatever evidence I have in my power to furnish; but I do not believe that any evidence can be furnished to this House or to the committee that will be at all satisfactory.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. PLATT. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. KASSON. I have but a word to say to the House on this subject. I have myself favored the introduction and adoption of a resolution of this sort, not merely because it concerns the administration of an officer whose reputation is of the very highest in the country and an office of the last importance to the country, but for the reason especially that the public confidence should not be destroyed without cause in the Post-Office Department anywhere in the United States. The importance of the transactions of communications through the New York post-office is of such vast consequence that perfect, absolute secrecy and inviolability should be secured, every member of the House feels deeply.

I wish to say, sir, that during my connection with the Department at the opening of the late war, so sacred was this rule even in time of war that, when repeated applications were made by local postmasters of the importance of ascertaining hostile proceedings through letters deposited in the war districts of the country, an order issued from the Department prohibiting the slightest detention, delay, or tampering in any manner with such letters. And everything was required to be sent to the Department in Washington, and in that Department not a single officer or clerk was permitted to touch any returned letter or to open it, except those who had the sanction of law in what is known as the Dead-Letter Office. And in view of what I know to be the record of that Department in respect to the inviolability of letters under the most provoking circumstances, now at this time, when no such circumstances exist, it is with pain I learn that the confidence of myself or any of the people of the country should be assailed in respect to the security of the correspondence passing through the Department.

The only alternative suggested is that the Postmaster-General should make the investigation. He has not the power a committee of the House has to make such investigation. He can send special agents, but the power to summon witnesses and take testimony does not exist as it does exist in a committee of the House. Unless, therefore, the gentleman from New York will satisfy the public mind by stating that he has not sufficient ground for his charge, I do not see how the House can withhold their assent to the resolution that an investigation may be had, and so long as the charge stands from a responsible member upon this floor it seems to me to be the duty of us all to so investigate it that the public may be satisfied one way or the other that their correspondence is or is not safe. If there were any other way of arriving at the result except that suggested by the gentleman from New York I would be glad to take it, but for myself I see no other way.

Mr. PLATT. I yield now to the gentleman from Maine, [Mr. HALE.]

Mr. HALE. Now it is very clear, Mr. Speaker, that this is a matter which the House should not let drop. The inviolability of the post-office is a thing which should be maintained, as I hold, by every power of the Government. It is of more importance now that this channel should be undisturbed and unmolested because yesterday this House took from one branch of communication between man and man all that it has ever had of inviolability. The post-office remains, and this House, sir, can do nothing better, in the exercise of its highest power, than to probe such a matter as this to the very bottom. I would have investigation made the most searching and complete to let us know whether there has been any interference with the correspondence of any gentleman, and more especially of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] who bears the high relation he does to one of the political parties of the country and who has held so foremost a place here. He believes that his correspondence has been broken into, and he has lost his confidence in a great Department of the Government. Catching his eye the other day when some of those letters were in his hands, he showed me at the desk here two, which I examined, and I became convinced as I looked at the envelope upon this side of it—as I am now looking upon this one I now hold up—that the letter had in some way been opened—had been torn apart. Whether the two which I saw had been torn apart in the post-office or had been torn apart by the writer, as is frequently done, and then resealed, neither he nor I then knew. I said to him at that time, "There is no proof as to how this is done," and he said frankly, "I have no proof." And I do not believe, (as he has said this morning,) I do not believe that the postmaster of New York has had any complicity or knowledge, provided they were surreptitiously opened. But I saw, Mr. Speaker, that he really believed that his correspondence had been tampered with, and that is enough for this House to set at work every power of the House we have to see whether this great Department of the Government is safe for citizens to send their correspondence through. Under the circumstances, therefore, I hope there will be no objection to making an investigation. When it is done let it be done thoroughly.

Mr. PLATT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. HOLMAN. While from the statements made by gentlemen who have addressed the Chair it is not probable that any very satisfactory light will be thrown on this question, if it is still deemed important and desirable that this investigation should be made, I suggest to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PLATT,] on the score of economy, at least, if nothing else, that this duty be devolved on the committee of which Mr. COX, of New York, is chairman, which is already prosecuting investigations in that city. The committee is now there, and I therefore, unless the gentleman from New York shall object, move to amend the resolution as follows——

Mr. PLATT. I do not yield for any amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman will allow it to be read.

Mr. PLATT. I will allow it to be read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

Strike out the words "a committee of five members of this House be appointed," and insert the following in lieu thereof: "the committee now in New York, of which Mr. COX is chairman, be authorized and directed."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be no objection to that amendment.

Mr. PLATT. I do not yield for that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will seek to introduce this amendment if the House will vote down the previous question.

Mr PLATT. I call for the reading of the original resolution, and will then move the previous question.

Mr. HALE. If the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] will allow me, I desire to say that I hope he will not consent to any such modification of the resolution as is now suggested, putting the duty upon another committee which is charged with the investigation of an entirely distinct matter.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The committee of which Mr. COX is chairman will hardly have time enough to accomplish the work it has in hand now.

Mr. PLATT. I ask that the resolution as now modified be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas ABRAM S. HEWITT, a member of this House, on this floor in public speech used the following language: "I wish to say that during the last month my attention has been called to my own letters passing through the New York post-office, and according to the best judgment I can form and the best judgment of gentlemen to whom I have submitted my letters, they are apparently not infrequently opened in the post-office and reclosed by the use of mucilage, but so affected that the steam used is shown upon the envelope, which has a puckered appearance."

Resolved, That a committee of five members of this House be appointed to investigate said charge, and whether the same be true or false, and by whom, if by any person, said criminal act or acts were committed, and report thereon to this House as early as practicable; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, with leave to report at any time.

Mr. PLATT. I call for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope it will be voted down.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 92, noes 81.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PLATT and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 79.

So the previous question was not seconded.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now offer the following amendment:

Strike out the words "a committee of five members of this House be appointed," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The committee now in New York, of which Mr. COX is chairman, be authorized and directed."

Mr. BUCKNER. Is it in order to move to lay this whole subject on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. BUCKNER. I make that motion.

Mr. HALE. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] listen to me for a moment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the gentleman, if there is any objection to the framing of the resolution as drawn by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PLATT,] (and I understand that there is some verbal objection to it,) that that be corrected, so that it may be satisfactory, in every way, both to him and to the gentleman who called the subject up yesterday; and that then he shall not insist upon this important question going to another committee which has already in its charge very grave and important matters that must occupy all the time it can give to them previous to a date when it ought to report. I do not think the gentleman himself wants to cripple the investigation. He must see, as I do and all of us do, that this is a very serious charge; that it ought to be gone into carefully, and that it will take several days. And I do not believe the gentleman from Indiana with his usual fairness wants to put this in a condition or a place where it will be in limbo and nothing come out of it. Let me repeat, then, the suggestion that I made when I rose, that the language of the resolution be made satisfactory to both sides and that then this proposed substitute be withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I recognize the fairness of the proposition of the gentleman from Maine; and my answer is that it is manifest, from the statement of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. HEWITT,] that the facts that will be obtained from any investigation will be of no great practical moment; that the real investigation will be that which will take place at the suggestion and by the act of the Postmaster-General in regard to a charge affecting one of the important branches of his Department. The important investigation will be there, and undoubtedly, from the publicity which has been attached to this transaction, that investigation will be made.

The committee of which Mr. COX is chairman is intrusted with a comparatively small duty; the investigation is confined to a very narrow range and to a comparatively small number of persons, from the necessities of the case. That committee, now in New York, is a very efficient committee, and, like the gentleman who makes this motion, the chairman of it is a citizen of the State of New York, and of course familiar with the localities and with the persons who might be called upon to testify upon such a question. The investigation cannot be an extensive one, and I submit to my friend from Maine that an efficient committee right there on the ground, in the absence of any prospect of valuable facts being eliminated, even on the score of economy, with due regard to efficiency also, should make the investigation; and I feel very confident that so far as subserving the public interest is concerned it will be as effectually accomplished through this channel as by the expensive organization of a committee with the powers conferred by this resolution.

Mr. HALE. The committee need not be an expensive one. I think the gentleman is losing sight of the importance of this question when he says that a bare investigation is all that is necessary. This is something more than an ordinary case of tampering with the mails. It is a breach of the privileges of this House through one of its members. His correspondence has been broken into. At least that is the charge. And this House cannot afford, Mr. Speaker, to let this matter drop when the correspondence of one of its members has been tampered with. It is not a matter for the Post-Office Department to investigate, the very Department found fault with. It is a subject which we should lay our strong hand on and investigate ourselves, and not stop at what little expense may be incurred, because it is an expenditure that could be well afforded.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly the subject-matter is sufficiently important to justify any committee that may be suggested by any member of the House, if it were possible for anything beneficial to result therefrom. But with an efficient committee right there on the ground, it seems to me that the public interests will be subserved by referring the matter to that committee. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. HALE. Upon that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 53, nays 143, not voting 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bell, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Buckner, John H. Caldwell, Candler, Carr, Cate, Chapin, John B. B. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, Wike, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, and Woodburn—93.

So the motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PLAISTED said: My colleague, Mr. FLYE, is absent on account of sickness; if present, he would vote "no."

The question recurred on Mr. HOLMAN's demand for the previous question.

Mr. HOLMAN. To enable the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CAULFIELD] to submit a substitute, I withdraw for a moment the call for the previous question.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I offer the following as a substitute for the resolution:

Resolved, That the committee now in New York, of which Mr. COX is chairman, be authorized and directed to investigate whether any letters passing through the New York post-office have been tampered with, and, if so, by whom, and to report to this House as early as practicable; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers in the prosecution of this inquiry.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now call for the previous question.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. Is that a substitute for the original proposition?

The SPEAKER. It is a substitute in the nature of an original proposition.

Mr. HALE. Suppose that it occurs that the committee is ready to go to Philadelphia or Jersey City?

Mr. HOLMAN. They are right there.

Mr. HALE. But is not the gentleman from Indiana defeating his own object, as this resolution refers to the committee in New York? Suppose the committee has left New York and is in Philadelphia, or Jersey City, or Brooklyn?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, there will be no difficulty about that.

The question was put upon seconding the previous question; and upon a division there were ayes 83, noes not counted,

So the previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. HALE. I now ask that the resolution of the gentleman from New York, for which this is attempted to be substituted, be read, including the language of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read the resolution, and the language of Mr. HEWITT, of New York, as follows:

I wish to say that during the last month my attention has been called to my own letters passing through the New York post-office, and according to the best judgment I can form, and the best judgment of gentlemen to whom I have submitted my letters, they are apparently not infrequently opened in the post-office, and reclosed by the use of mucilage, but so affected that the steam used is shown upon the envelope, which has a puckered appearance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state that this is a substitute only for the resolution, not for the preamble; the preamble will stand.

The question was put upon agreeing to the substitute; and there were 94 votes in the affirmative.

Mr. HALE, (before the negative vote was taken.) We may as well save time. I therefore call for the yeas and nays upon the substitute.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 114, nays 69, not voting 106; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ashe, Atkins, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. Caldwell, Campbell, Carr, Cason, Cate, Caulfield, Chapin, John B. During the roll-call the following announcements were made:

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. I desire to announce that upon all political questions Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, is paired with Mr. SAVAGE.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to announce that Mr. HARRISON is paired on all political questions with Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS, of Michigan. If they were here Mr. HARRISON would vote "ay," and Mr. WILLIAMS would vote "no."

Mr. CONGER. I desire to announce that Mr. WALDRON is paired upon all political questions with Mr. CANDLER.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Upon political questions I am paired with Mr. WILLIAMS, of Alabama, and therefore will abstain from voting.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the resolution as amended; and, being put, the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 97) directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue certificate of relocation for six hundred and forty acres of land in the Territory of Missouri, to legal representatives of Samuel Ware;

An act (H. R. No. 1026) for the relief of Thomas Van Duzen and his assigns for lands; and

An act (H. R. No. 3504) for the relief of Thomas Day.

APPOINTMENT OF A CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed as the managers of the conference committee on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas Mr. SCALES, Mr. MORGAN, and Mr. SEELYE.

CONTINGENT FUND OF THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting, in compliance with the act of June, 1872, a statement of expenditures from the contingent fund of the Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department.

COAST SURVEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the United States Coast Survey Report for the year of 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4124) to provide for the expenses of certain special committees.

Served personally with a copy of the within at one and one-half o'clock p. m., December 13, 1876.

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms.
By J. W. POLK,
Special Messenger.

NEW ORLEANS, December 18, 1876.

Committee met at eleven o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment. Present, the chairman, Mr. MORRISON, Messrs. JENKS, MCMAHON, BLACKBURN, MEADE, PHELPS, NEW, ROSS, BEEBE, TOWNSEND, DANFORD, HURLBUT, CRAPO, and JOYCE.

Said E. W. BARNES appeared as a witness before the committee on the 18th day of December, 1876, and, after being duly sworn according to law, was interrogated as follows:

By Mr. MORRISON:

Question. Where do you reside?

Answer. In New Orleans.

Q. How long have you resided there?

A. Two years at the present time, but I have lived here before about ten or twelve years.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Manager of the Western Union Telegraph office in this city.

Q. Have you been subpœnaed to appear here before the committee?

A. I have.

Q. Have you a copy of the subpœna with you?

A. I have. [Witness produced copy of subpœna.]

Q. Have you in your possession any dispatches sent by or received by the persons named in this subpœna?

A. I presume I have some.

Q. In relation to the late election or the counting of the votes?

A. I am not in the habit of reading all of them, but there have been dispatches sent during the canvass to these persons.

Q. In relation to the election and counting of votes for presidential electors?

A. I cannot speak as to the contents of the telegrams. It is very seldom that I read them.

Q. As a matter of fact, have you not looked over them since you were subpœnaed?

A. No, sir; I have not looked over them.

Q. You say you have knowledge that telegrams have passed, and from some of these parties, concerning the election?

A. I assume that there is; but I have no personal knowledge.

Q. You may state to the committee whether it is true, after you were subpœnaed, that you made any arrangement about producing these dispatches; and, if so, with whom, and what it was.

A. I had an interview with you after being subpœnaed. A sergeant-at-arms called on me and asked me to see the chairman at seven o'clock and speak to him in regard to it, which I did. I introduced myself and asked what he wished. He told me he wished copies of the dispatches mentioned in the subpœna. I think I told him it was great labor to get them and our employés were very busy and we could not well take them off for this purpose, but that I could engage others. He asked me what it would cost. I said probably it would cost $30. He said he had no money appropriated for that purpose, but that it was an object to get them quickly, and he thought the committee would agree to expend the $30, and asked me what time I thought I could get them, and told him by Monday next. That is to-day. I mentioned that in these cases we always resisted an order to produce telegrams as far as we could. I had had no communication from the company at that time in regard to the matter.

Q. State whether, as a matter of fact, you did not promise me upon my agreeing to pay the expenses that you would furnish the dispatches to-day?

A. No, sir; I did not understand it so.

Q. Was not the agreement made that I was to pay expenses; that you would put on clerks, and furnish them to-day?

A. I did not understand it so. So far as I understand the matter I had telegraphed our company that such demand had been made, and at seven o'clock I had not received an answer, and I did not know whether I would be prevented from producing these dispatches or not; but I was careful in my mind not to say anything only what I could do and not what I would do.

Q. Did not you agree that I was to pay the expenses?

A. If you would pay the expenses that I could furnish them, not that I would. I had no power, without instructions, to furnish them, and we always try to evade these demands upon the telegraph office.

Q. You did not tell me that you would not furnish them to-day?

A. No, sir; I could not have told you, for I had to get the power myself from the company.

Q. You did not say anything about that to me?

A. No, sir; I had telegraphed to the company, but not received an answer up to seven o'clock that evening.

Q. Have you any of these dispatches with you?

A. No. With me? No sir.

Q. Have you been instructed by the president of the company not to deliver them?

A. Yes sir; not directly by the president, but by our general superintendent.

Q. Are your instructions similar to this? [Letter shown witness from President Orton, of Western Union Telegraph Company, to the chairman.]

A. I should have acted on these instructions without any others on this letter to you.

Q. Have you any?

A. I have only instructions from Mr. Orton to do nothing in the matter; that Mr. Orton would relieve me from all responsibility.

Q. Your instructions from Mr. Orton are not to produce the messages?

A. I understand that is my instructions from Mr. Van Horne, the division superintendent. I consider these instructions confirmed by this message to you.

Q. Then you refuse to produce these telegrams?

A. Yes, sir; I must do so according to my instructions.

Q. What did you say was the name of the division superintendent?

A. Mr. Van Horne.

Q. Where does he reside?

A. In New York.

Q. You say this is the notice you received to appear, the subpœna?

A. Yes, sir; this is the one.

Q. You answer that you were subpœnaed to appear and produce telegrams sent by and received by parties named in this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether William Pitt Kellogg is named in this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. S. B. Packard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. J. R. G. Pittkin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Henry C. Dibble?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. H. C. Warmoth and others?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You now still refuse to produce the telegrams?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. HURLBUT.) I understand you were served with a subpœna. At what time?

A. At about two o'clock on the 15th.

Q. Did you report the fact of such service to your superior?

A. I did.

Q. Have you instructions from your superior officers in the telegraph company not to furnish the messages?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any written instructions, any formal instructions?

A. I have no other instructions than what I have mentioned.

Q. Telegraphic instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of that instruction?

A. No, sir; but that is the purport of it, a dispatch from Mr. Orton saying he would assume the responsibility.

On motion of McMAHON,

Resolved, That for the efficient prosecution of the inquiry ordered by the House the chairman of the committee communicate to the House for its consideration the refusal of E. W. Barnes to produce before the committee the telegrams referred to in the subpœna upon him December 13, 1876, his refusal being in contempt of the Representatives.

The above is a true copy of the proceedings in relation to E. W. Barnes, manager of Western Union Telegraph Company, a recusant witness, with letter of President Orton referred to in testimony of said Barnes annexed, dated New Orleans, Louisiana, December 19, 1876.

W. R. MORRISON, Chairman.

Attest: R. D. HUNTER, Clerk Special Committee.

LETTER OF WILLIAM ORTON, PRESIDENT WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.

NEW YORK, December 15, 1876.

SIR: Subpœnas have been served upon several employés of this company directing them to produce before the congressional committee of which you are chairman all messages in possession of the company sent and received by the persons named in the subpœnas during several months of the present year. I have delayed a reply to these demands in the expectation that similar applications would be made by a committee of the Senate also charged with the investigation of matters connected with the presidential election in canvass in several States, so that the action of the company being the same in respect to the messages of both political parties could not be attributed a desire to prejudice or promote the interest of either. No subpœnas have yet been served upon us by order of the Senate committee, and as further delay might appear to be a discourtesy to yourself and your committee, it does not seem proper to further to postpone this answer. The subpœnas were served before the investigation which the committee had been directed to make was begun and therefore evidence had been presented to the committee either that persons named in the subpœnas had sent any messages whatever or that any messages sent by them related to the subject-matter of the investigation.

It appears to have been assumed that persons holding high official positions under the Federal and State governments and others prominent in public offices were in the habit of sending messages by telegraph, and without attempting to ascertain if any of these messages were material to the investigation the officers and agents of this company have been commanded to lay aside the business in which they are engaged to become spies and detectives upon and informers against the customers who have reposed in us the gravest confidence concerning both their official and their private affairs. I have never believed that the Congress of the United States, with this subject fairly before them, would permit committees to violate the secrecy of the telegraph in this manner; and it seems to me the present is an opportunity which it would be unwise to forego for obtaining a decision directly from the representatives of the people. In the messages of persons connected with one political party are spread before the public, a like course will be taken in respect to those of the other party; both parties therefore have the same interest in publishing to the world the secrets of the telegraph offices or of preventing such publications.

It has therefore been decided to decline very respectfully to permit the employés of this company to produce before any committee of either House of Congress messages sent or received by the representatives of either the democratic or the republican party, at least until after Congress shall have approved the subpœnas of the committees and directed that their demands be enforced.

I am, with great respect, &c., &c.,

WILLIAM ORTON, President.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman, &c., New Orleans, Louisiana.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read, and upon it I call for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask if this telegraphic communication that has been laid before the House——

The SPEAKER. The Speaker received this late last night at his house.

Mr. GARFIELD. By telegraph?

The SPEAKER. By telegraph.

Mr. GARFIELD. And there is no signature to it except that made by the telegraph operator?

The SPEAKER. The paper is signed "WM. R. MORRISON," and a subsequent paper is signed "Wm. Orton."

Mr. GARFIELD. The signatures on the paper which is now in the presence of the House are signatures made by the telegraphic operators, are they not?

The SPEAKER. It comes exactly as all telegrams come, in the handwriting of the telegraphic operators, of course.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no handwriting of any officer of the House?

The SPEAKER. It is duly authenticated; the Speaker has the official envelope here with the telegraphic charges. No officer of the House has had anything to do with it.

Mr. GARFIELD. All I wanted was to show that the paper now before the House was not signed by any officer of the House, but was signed by the telegraphic operator as from an officer of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit to the House the question whether——

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not make any question upon that. I only wanted it spread upon the record that the paper which has been laid before the House was not signed by Mr. MORRISON, the chairman of the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is in every respect the same as other telegraphic dispatches.

Mr. KNOTT. I desire to say that the paper is signed by WILLIAM R. MORRISON, and his signature has been read. I call the previous question upon the resolution.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House issue a warrant under his hand and the seal of the House of Representatives, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, either by himself or his special deputy, to arrest and bring to the bar of the House without delay E. W. Barnes, to answer for a contempt of the authority of this House and a breach of its privileges, in refusing to produce to the special committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, now sitting in the city of New Orleans, certain telegraphic dispatches in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, served on him on the 13th day of December, 1876, and to be dealt with as the law under the facts may require.

The question was upon seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his inquiry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is the Chair aware whether it is the well-settled practice of this House or of any deliberative body that a telegram can be properly construed as the report of a committee? Does the Chair hold that this is a privileged report from a committee?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that this communication is a privileged one, involving the dignity of this House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That feature of it I do not question. But is it well settled that a telegram, without the actual signature to the paper of the chairman of the committee delegated by the House to make certain inquiries, is sufficiently well authenticated and proved to be regarded as the report of the committee?

The SPEAKER. Reports of committees are not usually signed by members of the committee; they are presented to the House by the chairman or by some other member of the committee. This comes to the Speaker——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. But the Chair will observe that reports made by committees are made in person. This is presumably the report of a committtee. But is it sufficiently well known to the House that this is a report of this committee and of the action of the committee to justify the extreme step that is now proposed to be taken? That is what I want the Chair to say.

The SPEAKER. The report of a committee comes through a member of the committee, and his word is taken for it that it is a report from the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes.

The SPEAKER. This communication comes through the Speaker of the House. The Speaker of the House is satisfied as to its authenticity, and therefore presents it to the House.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. One word more, if the Chair pleases. I do not question the manner in which the Speaker of the House received this report. But are we justified in arresting an American citizen and depriving him of his personal liberty on a telegram that may possibly not have emanated from a committee?

The SPEAKER. That is a question for the House to determine. It is not a question of order, neither is it a question that calls for any expression of opinion on the part of the Chair.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The criticism of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON]——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] will permit the Chair to state that debate is not in order pending the call for the previous question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I do not propose to debate this question; I merely desire to correct some erroneous statements which, as I understood, were made by the two gentlemen on the other side who have spoken upon this question. This communication contains an extract from the minutes of the proceedings of the committee in session in New Orleans, attested by the clerk of the committee, those proceedings being participated in by all the members of the committee.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How does the gentleman from New York know that?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. It is stated upon the face of the document as it has been read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Suppose that I should telegraph to the Speaker of the House a statement of this kind and should sign myself "WILLIAM R. MORRISON," who would know whether it came from him or not?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The other members of the committee would have notified their friends, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] was notified the other day, if there had been any dispute about this matter.

Mr. HOLMAN. Authentication by telegraph is now universally recognized in this country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has stated that this is an authentic dispatch. The question is on seconding the call for the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I appeal to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] to allow some debate on this very remarkable proposition.

Mr. KNOTT. I think the House understands it.

The question being taken on seconding the call for the previous question, there were—ayes 113, noes 11; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa and Mr. KNOTT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 7; no quorum voting.

During the count by tellers,

Mr. GARFIELD said: If we can have a reasonable time for debate there will be no delay. All we ask is that an hour be allowed for debate. I hope there will be no objection to that.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not consent to that.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. KNOTT. I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following-named members failed to answer:

Messrs. Abbott, Bagby, Banks, Bass, Beebe, Blackburn, John Young Brown, Samuel D. Burchard, Burleigh, Cannon, Caswell, Cochrane, Cox, Crapo, Crounse, Danford, Darrall, DeBolt, Denison, Dunnell, Eden, Egbert, Ellis, Flye, Gibson, Glover, Gunter, Harrison, Hays, Henderson, Hill, Hoge, Hopkins, House, Hubbell, Hurlbut, Hyman, Jenks, Thomas L. Jones, Joyce, Kelley, Kimball, King, Lane, Lapham, Lawrence, Lord, MacDougall, McMahon, Meade, Miller, Money, Morrison, Nash, New, O'Brien, Odell, Phelps, John F. Philips, Poppleton, Purman, John Reilly, Rice, Robinson, Miles Ross, Sobieski Ross, Savage, Sayler, Schumaker, Sinnickson, Slemons, Smalls, Strait, Stephens, Stowell, Teese, Thomas, Thompson, Washington Townsend, Turney, Waddell, Waldron, Charles C. B. Walker, Walling, Walsh, Ward, G. Wiley Wells, Wheeler, Wigginton, Wike, Jeremiah N. Williams, William B. Williams, and Woodburn—93.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. WIGGINTON] is absent by leave of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I was requested by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] to announce that he was compelled to leave the Hall on account of sickness.

Mr. PLAISTED. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. FLYE] is confined to his house on account of sickness.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER in the chair.) One hundred and ninety-six members have answered to their names. There is, therefore, a quorum present.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I understand the Chair to announce that a quorum of the House is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I wish to say that, so far as this side of the House is concerned, there is no disposition to prevent any gentleman from discussing this proposition. I suggest therefore that, after the previous question shall have been sustained, one hour be allowed for debate, to be divided equally between the two sides of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is all we have been insisting upon.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I believe my friend from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] agrees that after the previous question has been seconded an hour be allowed for debate.

Mr. HALE. Will there be opportunity for submitting amendments?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Amendments will not be in order after the previous question is sustained.

Mr. HALE. But the gentleman's proposition is that by unanimous consent the previous question shall be considered as ordered and then an hour allowed for debate. Now is it not fair, as an accompaniment of that proposition, that an opportunity should be given to this side of the House to offer amendments?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I have made this suggestion with a view to debate only, and not for the purpose of permitting amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the previous question should be sustained, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] would be entitled, under the rule, to one hour.

Mr. KNOTT. I have no objection to yielding half of the time to gentlemen on the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would suggest that the first motion in order is that all proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. HOAR. I think the Chair fell into an inadvertence in the announcement which he has just made. This is not the report of a committee, and therefore under the rules no hour is allowed for debate after the previous question has been seconded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By unanimous consent, it was agreed that there should be an hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. The unanimous consent granted was that there should be an hour for debate before the vote was taken, that hour to be equally divided between both sides of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. That was the proposition which was agreed to, as I understand it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection that the previous question shall be considered as seconded and the main question ordered, and that one hour shall be allowed for debate, to be divided equally between one side and the other? The Chair hears no objection, and it is ordered accordingly.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I desire, Mr. Speaker, to present a point of order before the debate proceeds. I have reduced it to writing and I ask the Clerk to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

It appearing to the House that the resolution is based upon a mere telegraphic copy of an alleged report of a committee, without any official certificate of its accuracy and without verification of the signatures to the alleged copy, all the signatures being made by an alleged telegraphic operator, and without any other verification, I make the point of order that there is no legal or proper parliamentary ground for adopting an order of arrest of an American citizen; and that therefore the resolution is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. Only a single word. I desired to put it in such shape as would go upon record without designing to appeal from the decision of the Chair. It is the view which is taken on this side of the House that the proper ground does not exist for the adoption of such an order. In my experience, and so far as I can learn in that of others the action of the House has never been asked upon such a telegraphic dispatch, and I desired it might go upon record that we upon this side of the House find no justification for such a proposed order.

I supposed both sides of the House were waiting a properly signed and verified report before adopting this order.

I agree with gentleman that prima facie disobedience of a witness to a subpœna under these circumstances justifies an order of arrest when the proper ground is laid, and that the proper time for debating the propriety of punishing for contempt and the validity of the ground laid is when the party arrested for prima facie contempt is brought before the House. At this time I desire to say this on behalf of my associates, as a point of order, that this may not be regarded as an undisputed precedent for the action of future Houses of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to say this communication to him comes through the usual channel of telegraphic communication. He believes it to be authentic. He believes therefore there is a proper verification for the facts set forth, and again overrules the point of order made. But it is for the House to determine as to the arrest, which is not within the province of the Chair. The point of order is overruled.

By unanimous consent, one hour is allowed for debate, to be divided equally between the two sides. The gentleman from Kentucky is entitled to the floor.

Mr. KNOTT. I will yield to any gentleman on the other side for half an hour.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish the House to understand in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that there is on this side no purpose whatever to resist any thorough and complete investigation which has been ordered by the House touching the late election. We are more desirous, if possible, than they can be, that the investigation now being prosecuted in the State of Louisiana shall be thorough and complete. The deeper they get down into that subject, and the more truth they bring out by their investigation, the more I shall hail the result of the inquest; for I have myself looked far enough into this question of the late election in Louisiana to know that any investigation carried on honestly and thoroughly can but be valuable to the cause of truth in this country. We have of all men, therefore, the least reason either to see obstructed or to aid in obstructing any legitimate investigation.

I say this without expressing any opinion, at present, upon our constitutional right to go behind the action of any State, under its own laws, in reference to its electoral vote.

But, Mr. Speaker, there are some things in this country that perhaps are even more valuable than the ends to be reached by any investigation. Methods are sometimes more important than ends; and the methods of doing things are frequently the instrumentalities by which a country is ruined. Now in all I shall say in the few moments I may speak, I shall not refer at all to the subject-matter of the investigation. I hope at some time, not far distant, to speak of Louisiana affairs and of the absorbing question agitating this country; but to-day what I shall say will relate to the methods of this House, in reference to which there ought to be no party difference; methods which to-day you may employ, and which next year we may employ, and which the year after another party may employ; methods which ought to be a part of the immortal forces playing alike upon all parties and all political proceedings.

In the first place, it is very important, when we are about to adopt a new method of conducting business before the House, when, for the first time, a telegraphic dispatch, and in this one case containing twenty-four hundred and ninety-nine words, has been received by the Speaker, and which purports to represent the authentic proceedings of an authorized committee of the House, that we consider carefully the consequences of the precedent we are making. This dispatch may be a perfectly correct report of what transpired yesterday in the city of New Orleans; but it is attended by all the possibilities of failure in transmission, all the accidents of mistakes by being repeated through three or four hands. And we are called upon now, for the first time, so far as I know, in the history of America, to take so grave a step as to act upon a dispatch which has come through alien hands, not those of officers of the House, and to treat every word of it as a genuine authoritative document. And upon such statement, coming in such a way, it is proposed to arrest a citizen of the United States and bring him as a prisoner, more than a thousand miles away from his home, under the cloud of the heavy displeasure of this House, and arraign him at the bar of the House to receive its sentence.

Now, shall we make the first break in the old barriers of personal security in this new way, without a moment's reflection, without referring the question to a committee of the House, without taking any of the usual precautionary steps which it has been the uniform habit of this House to take, and proceed at once, on the mere reading of a telegram at the Clerk's desk, and act upon it as if it were entirely accurate and genuine? I remember very well when, during the war, I was a member of a court-martial, and for the first time, I believe, in the history of courts-martial, a stenographer took the testimony, recorded the questions and the answers, that a careful, thoughtful member of the court raised this question. The articles of war provided that all questions propounded to a witness shall be written, and should be reduced to writing and submitted by the judge-advocate to the court, so that the witness might have the opportunity to see the written question before him; and that his words in answer should be carefully written down, so that thus the whole proceeding might be made certain and authentic. Now, a member suggested that never before had the use of the phonographic art been employed at a trial by court-martial, and raised the question whether it would not be a violation of the law and an infringement of the rights of witnesses to conduct the examination by the phonographic report alone. After a full discussion it was agreed that in order to prevent a breaking down of the protections of the law, the phonographic clerk should himself take down a question, and, before it was answered, should read it out from his phonographic notes, and the answer should then be made. I give that as an example of the carefulness with which those who believe in following law watch their steps when any innovation is proposed.

Now a marked innovation on the usual methods is proposed in the case of this paper; and we ought to pause and refer it to our law committee, that they may carefully inquire whether this paper can properly and rightfully be treated as though it were the authentically signed report of the committee of this House. But no such action is to be taken. Everything is taken for granted. No mistakes are assumed to exist in this paper.

That is the first point I urge upon the consideration of the House as a reason why we ought to refer this to a committee. Again, it appears from the paper, assuming it to be as it may be, entirely authentic, that our committee in New Orleans, out of their fancy or from their information, I do not know which, have draughted a resolution assuming that dispatches had passed over the wires to New Orleans since the 1st of August last; and wanting to get hold of some testimony of whose existence they know nothing, they picked out seven conspicuous politicians at New Orleans, all republicans, all officers of that State, or candidates for office, the governor of the State, who was also a candidate for elector, the gentleman who ran as the republican candidate for governor, a gentleman who ran for the office of representative in the Legislature of Louisiana, another who ran for Representative in Congress, but was defeated, and several others. All the seven thus selected are members of one political party, and on the general presumption that they may have received telegrams during the time of registration and election and since, without laying any foundation in fact that any dispatch had been received by any one of them, a resolution was adopted by our committee in New Orleans commanding the managers of the Western Union Telegraph Company to come before the committee and bring all dispatches, public or private, political or commercial, that may have gone over the wires during the months of August, September, October, and November, and until the date of the subpœna, in December, upon all subjects whatever. There was no limitation of subject-matter in the subpœna. I am not sure but in some of the cross-examination reported in the dispatch it was confined to political subjects, but the subpœna is general and sweeping. And these seven citizens are all selected from one political party, not according to the principle announced here yesterday, that it should be made general and embrace all political parties, for the majority of this committee can select their men, and we see they have selected only republicans.

Now this manager of the telegraph in New Orleans is required to bring every dispatch that for a period of more than four months may have been sent to all those seven citizens, and lay them upon the table of the committee, to be made public for any use or any construction that political passion may require. I beg the attention of gentlemen to this consideration: Suppose the case had been reversed; for if this thing can be done a similar course can be taken by the Senate committee, and all the magnates of the democratic party may be named in a subpœna, and every dispatch sent to them for four months, or five months, or ten months, may thus be seized and made public.

I beg gentlemen to reflect how great and how dangerous a step we are proposing to take under the previous question and upon telegraphic dispatches. If it may be seven citizens, why not seven hundred or seven thousand? Why not all the population of America? The right to demand this, under these circumstances, is the right to demand everything everywhere about every man in the United States.

I do not say that we cannot properly, under the old guards of the law, take public or private dispatches whenever a proper foundation has been laid for taking them in the course of judicial or legislative investigations. I have no doubt we can. But I deny that we can justly do so upon the naked, foundationless demand which has been made for these dispatches. There is no evidence before us that either of these citizens, Warmoth, Kellogg, Packard, General Augur, or any one of them, have appeared anywhere in the testimony in the proceedings as having received any particular dispatches relating to the subject-matter of legislative inquiry. It is not even pretended that the slightest foundation is laid for this proceeding. The bolt was launched out of a clear sky. These gentlemen are struck merely because somebody thought it possible that such a course might possibly lead to the discovery of secrets which the committee would like to know. If this rule prevails, all that any committee will need is to suspect that somewhere an American citizen possesses a secret, and they may call upon the Western Union Telegraph Company to become the great national informer against every citizen who has ever been conspicuous enough to receive a telegraphic dispatch.

I do not know how it may strike the Anglo-Saxon minds around me; but I must say that since I entered public life I have never heard a proposition advanced that was so far-reaching in its consequences, so unjustifiable by any of the maxims of the old common law or practice of our courts in its influence upon private rights, as the pending proposition.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as this side of the House was awarded thirty minutes, I suggest that whatever gentlemen on the other side desire to say should be heard now, and that the remainder of the time allotted to our side be occupied at the conclusion of the debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] will be entitled to close the debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let him reserve his right so as to allow some gentlemen on this side to be heard after the views of the other side have been stated.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman from Ohio can make what disposition he pleases of the half hour allotted to him.

Mr. GARFIELD. All I desire is that some gentlemen who want to take part in this debate later shall have an opportunity of doing so, so that the debate may be in alternate order.

Mr. KNOTT. I do not know whether I want to say anything or not, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has twelve minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY;] but I think it would be just that gentlemen on the other side shall go on and make their remarks, so that he can speak in reply. But, as there seems to be no disposition to adopt the alternate order, I will now give a portion of my time to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY.]

Mr. MCCRARY. Mr. Speaker, I have neither the time nor the disposition to enter into a discussion of the very important question that is now before the House. I do not place my opposition to the adoption of this resolution upon the question of order that has been raised regarding the authenticity of the dispatch. I take it for granted that the dispatch is genuine, and at least substantially accurate, and I prefer that the House should stand upon that, and that we should meet fairly and squarely the other, and to the American people the exceedingly important, question that is presented. I speak not of this particular investigation, but of the powers and duties of the House in investigations generally.

By reference to the subpœna which is embodied in the papers before the House two things will be observed; first, that there is no pretense in any of these papers that the committee at New Orleans had any reason to believe that there were any dispatches in the possession of this witness that were material to the investigation then going on. There was no inquiry upon that subject prior to the issue of the subpœna duces tecum. No foundation whatever was laid for the seizure of these papers, much less for the arrest of anybody. A subpœna has been issued for the purpose of ascertaining whether there might not be in that telegraph office dispatches addressed to these seven gentlemen touching the subject-matter of investigation.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the gentleman to the subpœna duces tecum. It does not even contain what the House yesterday put into its resolution, that the committee deemed this testimony necessary to the investigation with which it is charged.

Mr. McCRARY. There is nothing whatever of that character in it. It fails utterly to make a case under the resolution of yesterday. But there is another thing that I beg the House to consider. This is a proposition to call upon the telegraph officers of a certain company to produce the telegraphic correspondence of seven citizens of this country during a period of four months and to lay it before an investigating committee of this House. Mark you, the call is for all dispatches upon all possible subjects, without any limitation whatever as to the subject-matter of the telegrams.

In other words, we have to meet this question whether an investigating committee can call upon any number of our fellow-citizens to bring before that committee all of their private correspondence, all of their private papers, upon all imaginable subjects, to be examined by the committee in order to ascertain whether there may be among those private papers anything that may possibly be pertinent to the subject-matter of their investigation. That is precisely what this House is called upon to-day to decide, for there is not one word in all these papers touching the subject-matter of the telegrams which are called for. The operator of the telegraph company is called upon to produce all the telegrams received by a certain number of citizens within four months of time, whether they relate to their private affairs, whether they relate to their domestic relations, whether they may be telegrams between husband and wife; whatever they may be, this telegraph officer is called upon, is commanded under pain of imprisonment by the order of this House, to bring everything that either of these gentlemen may have sent or received within this period of time by telegraph, and to lay it upon the table of the investigating committee. It is the instinct of every freeman to resist to the utmost such a demand. It is a scandal to the American name that such a demand should be made and be enforced by this House under the pains and penalties of imprisonment.

Now if this be a proper course of proceeding, if this be allowable under the laws of this land, if this be within the proper jurisdiction of this House, then there is no security for the citizen in regard to his private papers. The provision of our Constitution which declares that "the right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated" may be rendered nugatory by an investigating committee of this body. The proposition, when seen and considered in all its length and breadth and possible consequences, is simply monstrous.

I ask the House to look at the principle involved in this resolution which we are asked to adopt. If you may select these seven gentlemen and issue your subpœna duces tecum to a telegraph officer, commanding him to bring to the room of one of your committees all the telegraphic dispatches which these seven gentlemen may have received within four months, then there is no rule of law that limits you to seven citizens nor to four months, nor to one telegraph office. If you can name seven men, you may name seven hundred or seven thousand. If you can command one telegraph operator to do this, you can command every telegraph operator in this country to bring every dispatch upon every imaginable subject upon which any number of our fellow-citizens may have sent or received dispatches and lay them before an investigating committee so that they may look them over and hunt them through and see if they can find anything that may by any possibility have a bearing upon the subject-matter of their investigation or that may gratify curiosity or feed scandal. If you can go back four months you can go back four years. The principle is the same.

Some gentlemen yesterday spoke about the inquisitorial power in the hands of an investigating committee. I do not like that word. And if this is what these gentlemen meant by "an inquisitorial power," then it is time that the American people understood it, and that the American Congress understood it.

There is no need of going to this extent; there is no need of establishing such a dangerous precedent as this; there is no necessity for it. If your committees have good reason to believe that there are telegrams of importance that are material, let them name the persons who have sent them and the persons who have received them, and the subject-matter of them, or otherwise describe them so that they may be identified. Lay your foundation properly by making an inquiry as to their existence and materiality, but I beg of the House not to assert the right to issue a drag-net subpœna to bring before a committee of this House all the twenty-five millions of private dispatches sent in this country, to be handed over to that committee in order that they may see if perchance something may not be found among the private correspondence of the American people pertinent to the inquiry they are making. That is what is involved in the principle of this resolution, and that is what I object to; and I can assure gentlemen on the other side, that in my humble judgment the time will come when the madness of these times is past, when sober reason resumes its sway, when it will be acknowledged on all hands that our safe course is to be found in following lawful methods, in respecting the rights of the citizen, and in avoiding the exercise of powers not given us by the Constitution or laws, and which are unwarranted, assumed, arbitrary, and not even excused by the presence of any overshadowing necessity.

Mr. KNOTT. I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentlemen from New York, [Mr. WOOD.]

The SPEAKER. The time allowed for the other side has not yet expired.

Mr. GARFIELD. How much time have I left?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. GARFIELD. If gentlemen have no objection we will use those five minutes a little later.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that this whole question, so far as the law is concerned, is not under some statute regulation. I regret that there is no law which may be made to apply to the question now under consideration, so far as the privileges of telegraphic communications are concerned.

So far as I am personally concerned, I would violate no great principle of individual right, not even under these circumstances. I am opposed to either legislation or congressional action as a mere matter of expediency to meet any particular case or emergency that may arise. I believe that we should have general laws, passed at a time when there is no public excitement as at present, which laws may be made applicable to these dispatches which are now claimed to be sacred and so private, in order that hereafter we may have no trouble or difficulty.

I differ very much, however, with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. McCRARY,] especially in their idea of the private, sacred character of these telegraphic communications. I believe these gentlemen are wrong in their assumption of facts. A letter that passes from myself to another person through the mails is known only to the writer and to the receiver. Not so with a telegraphic dispatch. It is known not only to the writer and to the receiver, but to two subordinates of the telegraph company at the two ends of the line. They are persons clothed with no particular authority except that which a private corporation may confer upon them. They are subject to no law, to no punishment for any violation or betrayal of confidence. They are restrained by no considerations of any kind, character, or nature whatever. Therefore in my judgment telegraphic dispatches do not partake of that particular private character which attaches to letters which are transmitted through the mails.

Again the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will remember, and we all remember, that during the late civil war many of our military operations were conducted by means of telegraphic dispatches emanating from the War Department in this city. Many of the most important military movements were undertaken in consequence of arrangements and programmes and plans which originated in this capital. We know that for many, many years persons were arrested, incarcerated, and imprisoned, not only for criminal but political offenses, simply by a telegraphic dispatch.

We know moreover that whenever a person guilty of crime in this country seeks to evade American justice and go abroad we constantly telegraph (as we did in the case of Tweed recently) and hold him a prisoner there till he can be reclaimed by our own country for trial and conviction.

Moreover at this very moment the important political affairs of Europe, upon which hangs the question of a general European war, are being conducted to a large extent, if not altogether, by telegraph. This agency has become an open, practical means of communication. It has lost all privacy and secrecy—so much so that every important communication of every character even in commerce and trade is conducted in cipher, not by the ordinary language.

I will say just here that, in my judgment, it would be very difficult indeed to trace in any political communication that may have recently passed in this country from one party to another anything to criminate anybody. Hence my position on this question does not arise from any anxiety to procure or any belief that we can procure in this way for our committee anything that will be substantially important in determining any great event.

But, sir, here is the practical question. Gentlemen on the other side are discussing certain great principles in regard to the arrest of an individual simply in consequence of a telegraphic dispatch sent here from the committee at New Orleans. Such considerations should have been presented and discussed yesterday, because we then determined this whole question. We discussed the question on both sides of the House; we voted upon it by yeas and nays, and we finally laid down certain principles to guide the conduct of this House in every case that might arise. Our action was then made applicable directly to the case of Mr. Orton; it is now made applicable directly to the case of the subordinate of Mr. Orton in New Orleans; to-morrow it may be applicable to a case in New York; the next day to a case in Columbia, South Carolina, or Tallahassee, Florida. In the substitute adopted yesterday, upon yeas and nays, by a very large majority, we laid down certain principles; and what are they?

Resolved, That there is nothing in the law rendering a communication transmitted by telegraph any more privileged than a communication made orally or in any other manner whatever; that this House has the power through its subpœna, under the hand and seal of its Speaker, to require any person to appear before any committee to which it has given authority to examine witnesses and send for persons and papers, and bring with him such books or papers, whether the papers be telegraphic messages or others, for the inspection of such committee, as such committee may deem necessary to the investigation with which such committee may have been charged; and that such committees may order and direct any witness who may be brought before it to produce to the committee any book or paper, whether such paper be a telegraphic dispatch or other, which may appear to be in his possession or under his control, which said committee may deem necessary to the investigation with which it may have been charged; and that any person—

This has direct reference to the case now before the House—and that any person upon whom such subpœna shall have been served, who shall disobey the same, or having appeared as a witness shall disobey the order of such a committee to produce any book or paper which he shall have been ordered by such committee to produce, should be brought to the bar of the House upon a report of the facts by the committee to answer for a contempt of the authority of the House, and dealt with as the law under the facts may require.

The statement communicated by the Speaker from the committee at New Orleans presents all the facts. It gives the questions put to this witness and his answers, in which he refused peremptorily and positively to answer satisfactorily to the committee. He denied practically the authority of the committee and the authority of this House. He refused to produce these dispatches. He has thus placed himself in contempt, and that is the whole case. If the House carries out the rule which it laid down for its own action and government yesterday, it has nothing to do but to bring before it the body of this recusant witness, that he may show cause why he should not be held to answer for contempt.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from New York will allow me to say that the action of the House yesterday was after the alleged contempt; and therefore the refusal of the witness cannot have been in contempt of our action yesterday. The refusal was before the action of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will recollect that the action of the House yesterday virtually determined this and every other like case. This witness brings himself within the rule established by the House; and he is in contempt.

Mr. CONGER. But the House never promulgated such a rule until yesterday.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. But the committee of the House had full authority; they have proceeded regularly and in order according to the usage in this House from time immemorial.

Mr. HOAR. If the gentleman from New York will pardon me, I wish to put to him an inquiry for my own satisfaction. I am inclined myself to agree with the decision of the Speaker that this telegraphic communication to us is reasonably satisfactory evidence of the facts; and I do not make objection on that ground. What I desire to know is whether this subordinate (the question of law being deemed somewhat doubtful) did not make this original refusal under the direction of Mr. Orton, his principal. Mr. Orton, I understand, has addressed to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee a statement expressing his desire to know the opinion of the House and his purpose to submit to that opinion when declared. It was declared yesterday. Now as the principal officer under whom this subordinate is acting has said "I wish to do just what the House thinks I should" and as the House said yesterday that he should produce these dispatches, I submit whether the House should now send down to New Orleans a peremptory order to arrest the subordinate until he has had an opportunity, after this expression of the House as made yesterday, to go again before the committee and make his answer. I understood Mr. Orton's letter to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee to declare in substance "As soon as the House expresses its judgment I will direct my subordinates to obey." Now if that be true, should not this resolve, instead of providing for a peremptory order to arrest this subordinate, provide merely for his arrest unless, upon the communication of our resolution, he should answer satisfactorily? The gentleman must easily see that a subordinate telegraphic operator down at New Orleans cannot be expected to understand all these propositions of law.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. Mr. Speaker, under the principles established by this House there is no difficulty in the case presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.] Even after the House has taken a peremptory order for the arrest of a witness and his production before the House it is entirely usual for him to say, "I will answer." This witness in New Orleans has nothing to do except, under the direction of Mr. Orton, to say "I will answer." Then of course the order of the House would not be operative. Hence the difficulty which the gentleman from Massachusetts sees cannot possibly arise.

Mr. HOAR. If that be true it is a good answer; but I ask the gentleman to reflect whether the order of the House should not be that the arrest take place unless the witness shall in the mean time have answered to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I would not change the phraseology of the order. I think there will be no difficulty in case the witness chooses to put himself in a position of readiness to answer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] for the five minutes remaining of his time.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will yield whatever time remains to me to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I have only partially examined the alleged report of the committee laid before the House by the Speaker, as to the foundation which has been laid by the committee for this order of arrest; but I have examined it so far as to find that there is no proof presented in that report of the existence of the dispatch for the non-production of which it is proposed to arrest this witness. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] and myself had a great deal of service, he will remember, in connection with the rights of the House and the rights of witnesses in a very famous examination some three years ago. I do not think that he can refer me or the House, and I certainly cannot refer the House, to any case in which we have arrested a witness for the non-production of papers, the existence of which papers have not been shown. I ask the gentleman from New York if he has within his memory any instance in which the House has arrested a witness for the non-production of papers the existence of which is not shown prior to asking an order of arrest. Does the gentleman remember any such instance?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. This witness admits he has possession of the dispatches.

Mr. KASSON. That is where I differ with the gentleman. I have been examining the record to find that fact and he does not state as to a single person the fact that he has in his possession any such paper or book.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I think he admits he has telegrams from Kellogg and Packard and to them. And, moreover, I remind the gentleman that at the last session of Congress a witness admitted he had possession of certain books, which he declined to produce because they contained other peoples' accounts.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman is right where the existence of the papers or books is shown; there is no difference between us on that. But so far as I have read this report, and gentlemen who are more familiar with it will turn to it and read the evidence, the witness says that he does not know that there are any dispatches between those parties relating to the elections. In the latter part of the examination it may be shown, and I have not had time to read it through; but where the questions are first put to him he cannot say that there are any such dispatches within the terms of the questions put to him. Under these circumstances, unless the evidence can be found in this report that these telegrams exist, I submit to every legal gentleman on that side, there is no precedent or reason for arresting a witness for the non-production of a paper the existence of which is not shown.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman from Iowa yield to me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. TUCKER. How could the committee know the existence of a telegram without asking the witness whether one had been sent.

Mr. KASSON. They did ask the witness, and the witness did not answer it existed.

Mr. TUCKER. Then how can they ever find that out?

Mr. KASSON. Of course if they want evidence they have to produce it. They must ask the witness summoned, who is alleged to have the papers. That is the best evidence whether he has them. If not, they can summon another witness who knows where they are. And the gentleman as a lawyer will not affirm that we can arrest a man for contempt in not producing a paper where there is no proof of the existence of the paper. That is the point where a new precedent is about to be established by the House, if they adopt this resolution.

It is for these reasons, among others, I agree with my honorable friend from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] that we had better ask the Committee on the Judiciary to carefully examine this report, and the authorities for it, to see whether the ground is laid for the issue of this warrant of arrest. In all the observations, and the various debates we have had upon the report of the Committee of Ways and Means in reference to a celebrated case when I was a member of it, we never carried the doctrine so far that when a witness does not deny he had a paper, or in other words does not admit he had a paper, therefore we can arrest him for the non-production of it.

I think we are carrying the precedent of the House dangerously far in the proposed action of the gentleman from Kentucky. I desire to maintain all the privilege of the House in respect to the duties of witnesses and the obtaining of evidence. I am not willing, however, now more than I have ever been before, to carry it to the extent of the unwarranted arrest of a citizen without a legal foundation being laid for that arrest. It is a dangerous precedent for the House, and it is a dangerous precedent for the citizens of the United States.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call the attention of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] to the fact that this communication certainly shows that the witness admitted the fact of having possession of a portion of the telegrams referred in the subpœna duces tecum.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say to the gentleman that I have not seen that, so far as I have read the report. I cannot speak in regard to what appears in the rest of the report, because I was called to my feet before I had finished reading it. But if that is so, then I think the recital of the refusal should be limited to correspond with the evidence in the case. We cannot be too careful in this business of arresting citizens. The House owes it to itself and the country to be careful and prudent; and I think it would be better if the Judiciary Committee would make a careful examination of this report before the House is called upon to act on it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KNOTT] has thirteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. KNOTT. The House on yesterday, very correctly in my judgment, laid down the doctrine that there was nothing in the law making a communication transmitted by telegraph any more privileged than a communication made orally or in any other manner whatever. In order to show that that principle is correct, and that there is no ground for supposing that there is any unusual sanctity about a telegraphic dispatch, I desire to call the attention of the House to an adjudication directly upon that point in the State of Pennsylvania arising under a statute which made it a penal offense for a telegraphic operator to disclose the contents of any dispatch in his possession. The operator was brought into court upon a subpœna duces tecum, and the objection was made that there was a peculiar sanctity, by reason of this express statute, about a telegraphic dispatch, which precluded the witness from testifying as to its contents or exhibiting the message. And here is what the court said:

> It must be apparent that, if we adopt this construction of the law, the telegraph may be used with the most absolute security for purposes destructive to the well-being of society—a state of things rendering its absolute usefulness at least questionable. The correspondence of the traitor, the murderer, the robber, and the swindler, by means of which their crimes and frauds could be the more readily accomplished and their detection and punishment avoided, would become things so sacred that they never could be accessible to the public justice, however deep might be the public interest involved in their production.

And the court goes on further to say:

> The law is jealous of extending the circle of persons excused or interdicted from giving testimony. Parents are required to testify against children, children against parents, brothers against brothers, friends against friends. Communications by letter made under the deepest obligations of friendship, affection, or honor still must be produced, if deemed necessary to the ascertainment of truth and the administration of justice by the public tribunals.

The language here used by this learned tribunal seems to me to be sufficient to dispel forever this curious and new sentiment that there is something about a telegraphic dispatch that makes it more sacred than the holy name of Deity, which formerly could only be pronounced, I believe, once a year, and that by the high priest in the sanctum sanctorum of the temple. The fact is, sir, there is no such distinction, and none such should be made.

Now to the point directly before the House. I yield to no member here in my veneration of the safeguards which our Constitution and laws throw around the liberty of the citizen. But to protect the liberty of the citizen the law as it is must be enforced. What then is the question? It has been communicated to the House that a witness has been legally summoned before the committee at New Orleans, that he has been legally required to produce telegraphic dispatches before that committee, and has contumaciously refused to produce them. These are the facts communicated to the House, and the question is not how they have been communicated, but does the House believe them to be true? Now if there is a solitary gentleman on the other side of the House who doubts the authenticity of these facts, why has he not stated it? Who has expressed a doubt of the existence of the facts as stated in this dispatch? The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] with his usual candor admits that he believes the dispatch to be authentic and that the facts as therein set out actually transpired, and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] admits the correctness of the Speaker's ruling, that the matter has been correctly brought to the attention of the House, and I venture to say that there is not a member upon this floor who doubts the facts as communicated to the House in the report just read; and, sir, if these facts are true, the recusant witness is in contempt of the authority of the House, and has been guilty of a breach of its privileges. This is the naked conclusion, stripped of all new-fangled sentimentality about the sanctity of telegraphic messages; and you cannot escape it.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MCCRARY] says that he objects to ordering this mandate because the terms of the original subpœna were too broad. The House on yesterday very properly refused to lay down a Procrustean rule as to the terms to be employed in framing a subpœna duces tecum, and very wisely did it, as this very case shows. Now look at the testimony of this witness, and you find him prevaricating from beginning to end. Suppose you limit your subpœna duces tecum to such terms as the gentleman would prescribe; that it should command the witness to produce only such communications as bear upon the subject under investigation. The witness appears, and he says: "O, I know I have got the dispatches," just as this witness says; "but whether they relate to the subject under dispute or not, I do not know; I have not read them." And he never will read them, and you cannot compel him to do it. Or he may say, "I have got the dispatches and I have read them, but in my judgment they do not relate to the subject." There you make the witness the judge of the relevancy of the testimony that the committee is commanded by the order of this House to procure for the enlightenment of its judgment. Do the lawyers upon the other side contend that an investigation should be thus trammeled, and that the object of any investigation, however important, may be defeated by evasions and subterfuges such as these? I imagine not. Now, sir, I repeat that this very case is an ample verification of the wisdom of the House on yesterday in refusing to define the precise terms in which a subpœna duces tecum should be couched.

Now according to the report just read the subpœna commanded this witness to appear before the committee, and to bring dispatches that had been sent and that had been received by certain named persons within a certain prescribed period of time. He came before the committee and testified that he had the dispatches, but that he had been ordered by the superintendent not to produce them. Can that excuse him? Who made the superintendent his master? Who gave the superintendent the right to abrogate the law of the land and to exonerate or excuse this witness from bringing before the proper tribunal the papers he was required to produce? So far from that order being binding upon the witness, it simply renders the superintendent liable to be arrested and brought here for a contempt of the privileges of the House, in thrusting himself between a committee appointed by this House to ascertain facts for its information and the discharge of their legitimate duty, and tampering with a witness summoned before them. So far from the subordinate being excused by any such order his obedience to it presents a double offense to the consideration of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KNOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. GARFIELD. Has the gentleman any evidence that the witness has received or has any knowledge of the order of the House that he is to answer? The House has never ordered the witness to deliver these dispatches to its committee.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman has on several occasions spoken very confidently about Anglo-Saxon law, so confidently that one would imagine him as familiar with it as with his alphabet, and I beg him to remember that the same Anglo-Saxon law for which he has such a profound veneration presumes that every man knows the law, and that when he is summoned to appear as a witness and produce papers in his possession he is bound to do so, no matter who may order him to the contrary. I tell him further that the Anglo-Saxon law presumes that the witness knew little more than even that, namely, that in refusing to obey a subpœna of the House he lays himself liable to proceedings for contempt. The gentleman must know that it did not require the enunciation of the principles laid down on yesterday to establish them as law. They were law before the resolution of the House passed, as much so as they are now.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether we punish a witness for refusing to answer a committee or for refusing to answer the House? Now, if the House commands a witness to answer a certain question and he refuses to do it, punishment will follow.

Mr. KNOTT. The gentleman's question calls to my mind a quatrain in Hudibras:

> In logic he's a mighty critic,
> Profoundly skilled in analytic.
> He could distinguish, and divide
> A hair, 'twixt south and southwest side.

Does not the gentleman know that the committee is the organ of the House—simply its agent? That the process by which a witness is brought before a committee is the process of the House issued under the hand of its Speaker by its authority and authenticated by its seal? Does he not know that disobedience to such process is a disobedience of the authority of the House itself, and that when a witness refuses to obey the mandate of the House he is then in contempt of the House and should be brought to it to answer for that contempt and show why he has not obeyed the subpœna of the House, as the law requires him to do? It is a very plain duty, sir, and as easily performed as understood, especially in this instance, where the witness is only required to produce telegrams which he admits that he has in his possession.

Mr. BUCKNER. I ask that an amendment that I desire to offer may be read.

Mr. KNOTT. It is too late.

The question was taken on the resolutions, and they were agreed to.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Indiana, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, communicated the proceedings of the Senate in regard to the death of Hon. Allen T. Caperton, late a Senator from West Virginia.

DEATH OF SENATOR CAPERTON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following resolutions, received from the Senate:

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of ALLEN T. CAPERTON, late a Senator from the State of West Virginia, business be now suspended that the friends and associates of the deceased may pay fitting tribute to his private and public virtues.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate this resolution to the House of Representatives.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the first time since the State of West Virginia was organized as a separate State are we called upon to mourn the death of one of her representatives in the national councils.

We are told in the sacred writings that:

It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

May it prove so in this instance. May we lay this visitation of divine Providence to our hearts, and leave this Hall better men, better citizens, and better legislators, legislating for the whole country and the continued peace thereof.

ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON is no more. He was born in Union, Monroe County, Virginia, (now West Virginia,) November 21, 1810; after having attended the schools in his native village, he went to the University of Virginia and Yale College, graduating with honor at the latter institution in 1831; after which he studied law with Judge Briscoe G. Baldwin, at Staunton, Virginia; he was admitted to the bar and up to his death practiced his profession in his native county and several adjoinining counties. Having all the advantages of a thorough education, and being of studious habits and fond of his profession, he soon ranked among the very ablest lawyers in the State. He had a mind peculiarly adapted to the law, its catholic spirit, the broad principles of even and exact justice he found in the pages of the law library were in perfect consonance with his own nature. His lofty spirit disdained the arts of the pettifogger. In his practice he was never guilty of deception. He deceived neither client, court, nor jury, retaining to the last the confidence and respect of each. He took peculiar delight in the companionship of his brother members of the bar, as all can attest who ever met him professionally, or under his hospitable roof; but he did not confine himself exclusively to the labors of his profession. He took great interest in developing the material interests, the agricultural and mineral resources of his State; he was a director of the Thames River and Kanawha Canal, in which he took a great interest up to the time of his death; he had a great and life-long desire to see by the construction of this magnificent work the waters of the mighty West connected with those of the East.

He was for several years a member of the State house of delegates and of the State senate of Virginia, his last senatorial term being from 1859 to 1860. During his service in the Legislature, enabled as he was by his store of knowledge, he assisted very materially in molding the code of laws of that State. He was also a member of the constitutional convention of that State in 1861. At the breaking out of the late war he was originally opposed to extreme measures, believing with many others that the rights they claimed could be more certainly obtained by battling for the right within the Union; but when his State decided otherwise he followed. During the war he was elected to the confederate senate, which position he held at the close thereof. As soon as hostilities ceased he turned his face to the future, and from that time to the day of his death he did all in his power to restore peace, harmony, and fraternal feeling to this distracted land.

As long as the whig party was in existence he was one of its strongest and ablest supporters; he defended its principles and devoted himself to its success with knightly courage and devotion. Oft and again in earlier days has his manly form been seen going from county to county, along valley and over mountain-heights, for the purpose of addressing his fellow-citizens in stirring and eloquent appeals to rally them to the standard of Henry Clay. Wherever the white plume of his great captain, Harry of the West, was seen, there was he.

On February 17, 1875, after a protracted struggle he was elected to the United States Senate to succeed Arthur I. Boreman. How short his career on that theater! Truly hath the wise man said:

Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth.

During the last session of Congress we had rooms in the same building, and it was my fortune to see more of him in his last sickness than any other person. It was my lot and sad pleasure to minister to his varied wants in his last days on earth. His suffering at times was very great, after which he was easy and very cheerful. He bore his paroxysms of suffering with heroic fortitude, never repining. A short time before the critical moment his only son and eldest daughter, with other relations, were summoned to his bed-side; his noble and devoted wife being too feeble to travel. He was not aware his end was so near. On the last morning of his earthly existence, thoughtful as he always was of the pleasure of others, he suggested to his son and another gentleman near and dear to him who was in attendance to go to the Hall of the House of Representatives to hear a certain discussion that was to take place in which he felt a great interest. They yielded to his request, and only returned an hour or two before he had another and his last paroxysm. About four o'clock p. m. of that day, July 26, 1876, he was sitting up in his bed conversing with his son. All at once he said quickly to him, "Raise that window," which was done, and he immediately expired.

"Raise that window!" How typical! how suggestive! As the window of his earthly mansion was raised that of the eternal was opened to receive his spirit into the "House not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

His remains now lie buried amid the mountains where he was born, and over which he delighted to ramble in his boyhood days and riper years.

If any one had ever doubted the high esteem in which he was held at home, they would have doubted no longer if they had been present on that last sad day when his remains were lowered into the grave. For miles around his friends came from their mountain homes to mingle their tears with his weeping family—men and women of all stations in life, the rich and poor, white and black; among the latter of whom were many who once were his slaves. That was a sad, sad day for the little village of Union. Sadness and silence reigned over that mountain village as if they had lost their last and dearest friend.

But a few weeks preceding this scene a similar one had been witnessed. Augustus A. Chapman, a former member of this House for two terms, had paid the debt of nature. CAPERTON and Chapman in one brief summer. A. A. Chapman was also a man of mark and distinction, beloved by all, disliked by none—a noble and generous soul. Both have left behind them fond, devoted wives, noble specimens of true womanhood, and each a son worthy to bear the names of their respective fathers, and each several daughters inheriting all the nobler and finer traits of character of their fathers. Mr. CAPERTON was of pure and spotless character, public and private.

If it be true, as has been said, that public men are the true reflex of their constituents, then indeed may West Virginia take high rank among the great sisterhood of States.

Cicero tells us that in his day—

The senators, that is, the senes or old men of the state, dwelt in the country and lived on their farms.

So did Mr. CAPERTON; and to its fullest extent did he adopt the sentiment of Cicero when he said:

There is nothing more profitable, for there is not in nature, in my opinion, anything more beautiful or affecting than to behold a plantation with all the parts of it in complete and perfect order.

He delighted in horse-back exercise. He was devoted to his home and his State. He delighted in natural scenery, and at times he seemed to be enchanted.

Well do I recollect one bright, beautiful morning, when we were returning from Charleston on horseback, just as the sun was gilding the eastern horizon, we reached the highest point of Sewell Mountain, when suddenly he called to me to halt, and said, "Behold the beauty, grandeur, and sublimity of this view." Below us lay the morning fog as one broad sea, with here and there some peak taller than the others rising through the fog and presenting the appearance of so many islands, covered with the most beautiful emerald, in the midst of the ocean.

Again he burst forth in his ecstasy and exclaimed—

See yonder mountains, the everlasting mountains; how peerlessly they rise
Like earth's gigantic sentinels discoursing to the skies.

He could not tolerate tyranny or oppression either in the individual or state; he was a noble specimen of truest manhood, most eloquently and happily illustrated in that expression of George W. Summers, West Virginia's most gifted orator, when, describing the State and her people, he said:

Her people are a bold, daring, liberty-loving people; they are lulled to sleep at night by the roaring of her cataracts and awakened in the morning by the scream of the eagle as he takes his flight sunward.

He had a kind, tender, and grateful heart. Well do I remember on another occasion, when again traveling on horseback over our lofty mountains, when arriving at a certain spot he pointed to a farm some distance from the road and said "There lives a generous, kind-hearted man; I shall never forget him; directly after the war as I was passing that point he came out to me and said: 'Mr. CAPERTON, you are going to Charleston; although you are a rich man in this world's goods I know you can have no money, for the war has just closed; here are a few dollars in silver that I had buried; take it.' I thanked him, but declined his generous offer."

He was a man of scholarly attainments, a fine lawyer, a man of enlarged views on all subjects, a devoted husband and father, a warm friend, a generous neighbor, and a worthy example to old and young, at home and abroad, in public and private. He scorned everything like duplicity.

In the selection of men to fill the offices of our State, from the highest to the lowest, he always urged that none should be elevated to position but men of ability and spotless character, both in public and private, having an eye single to the good of the State and all the people thereof.

But I must detain you no longer. He is gone, gone to his long home. Who will dare say the world was not better by his having lived in it? No more shall we look upon his manly brow and delicately chiseled features; no more will we hear his merry laugh or words of encouragement and sound wisdom.

His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixed in him, that Nature might stand up
And say all to the world, "This was a man!"

Mr. GOODE. Mr. Speaker, the representatives of the American people are again called upon to pause in their deliberations for the public good, to recognize the hand of death and to render a just tribute of respect to the memory of a worthy compatriot and faithful public servant in the other end of the Capitol.

On the 26th day of July, 1876, ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON, a Senator from the State of West Virginia, was suddenly stricken down in the midst of an honorable and useful public career, and his mortal remains were borne hence to his beautiful home in the mountains of West Virginia, where they were tenderly consigned to the grave by his bereaved neighbors and friends who had known him long and loved him well. As one of the Representatives from the State of Virginia, I feel that I would disappoint the just expectations of my constituents if I failed to utter their voice of sympathy on this memorial occasion and to give some expression, however inadequate, of the respect and esteem in which they held the distinguished dead. Virginia claims the mournful privilege of laying a simple wreath upon the tomb of her departed son. Mr. CAPERTON was born upon the soil of Virginia. He was educated at her great university. He was identified with her works of internal improvement. He was for many years an active member of her General Assembly in both branches. He was a conspicuous member of her convention in 1861, and served her with fidelity and zeal in the senate of the Confederate States until the close of the war in 1865. He loved his native State and all her traditions. He cherished with filial devotion the hallowed associations and historic glories which cluster about her honored name. When that mother Commonwealth, so rich in historic treasures, shall stand up in after years and point with maternal pride and tenderness to her long line of devoted and illustrious sons, the name of ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON will not be forgotten.

My personal acquaintance with him commenced in the Virginia convention of 1861. He had come into that body earnestly opposed to the separation of the States. He was ardently and devotedly attached to the Federal Union. He was bound to it by the strongest and closest ties of affection. He was exceedingly reluctant that Virginia should attempt to dissolve her connection with it. He remembered with pride that the Union was in a great measure the creation of her own hands; that it was her son who had penned the Declaration of American Independence; that it was her son whose heaven-born eloquence had first kindled the fires of the American Revolution; that it was her son who was confessedly the father of the American Constitution. When the Union was dissolved he exerted all his great powers and exhausted all his persuasive eloquence in an effort to bring about its restoration. He was instrumental in inaugurating the peace congress here at Washington. He advised that commissioners should be sent to the seceding States of the South. But after the war had been commenced, and Virginia had been fired upon while bearing the olive-branch of peace, he felt that every consideration of duty and of honor required that she should take her position with her southern sisters, and, with a full knowledge of all the fearful odds against her, he deliberately voted to adopt her ordinance of secession. While the war continued, Virginia was swept throughout all her borders by the besom of destruction. Her sleeping cities were awakened by the music of bursting bombs. The thunder of hostile cannon echoed and re-echoed along all her coasts, and her green fields were made red with the best blood of her children. But in that trying ordeal through which she was called to pass the great heart of ALLEN T. CAPERTON never quailed and his heroic spirit never faltered in devotion to that cause which he believed to be the cause of civil liberty and constitutional government.

As a Virginia Senator he supported all the war measures of the confederate government with alacrity and zeal, and never withheld a man or a dollar until the confederacy had fallen prostrate, bleeding and exhausted before the victorious legions of the Union. Such was the intrepidity of his nature and such the cheerfulness of his courage that he moved steadily forward in the path of duty unawed by danger and uninfluenced by any consideration save those which concerned the honor and welfare of his people. But, when the war had terminated and the long night of agony and of woe had been spent, Mr. CAPERTON, as an acknowledged leader of public opinion in his section, was one of the first to come forward and advise his countrymen that it was the dictate of wisdom and patriotism to submit manfully and cheerfully to the logic of events. He believed with Edmund Burke that true statesmanship consists in a proper adjustment of the conditions in which we find ourselves placed. He indorsed the sentiments of that eminent British classic who said that "to the future and not to the past looks true nobility of soul." Instead of indulging vain regrets over the issue of our unsuccessful struggle, he felt that it was a high and patriotic duty to extinguish the bitter memories of the war and with uplifted brow to look bravely and hopefully to the future. He felt that it was no reflection upon southern manhood to imitate, in all respects, the great example of our immortal chieftain whose watchword was duty and who from the day of his surrender at Appomattox to the day of his death at Lexington never failed to inculcate the doctrine that having renewed our allegiance to the American Constitution, we too had duties to perform as American citizens. His heart's desire and prayer to God was that we might have peace—peace between the sections and peace between the races. He well knew that without a lasting and enduring peace there could be no development of our material resources, no revival of our prostrate industries, no restoration of hope and of confidence to our distracted and afflicted country.

As one of the results of the war, the State of West Virginia was carved from the side of old Virginia and the county of Mr. CAPERTON'S residence was embraced within the limits of the new State. Notwithstanding the fondly cherished associations of a life-time were thus rudely sundered, he did not, like the captive Israelite of old, hang his harp upon the willow and sit down by the waters to weep, but, like a true man as he was, he immediately addressed himself to the task of developing the untold wealth and the magnificent resources of that young and highly favored State. Nowhere else upon this continent can be found a more fertile and productive soil or a more genial and delightful climate. Her beautiful blue mountains abound in iron, copper, coal, lead, and other minerals. Her magnificent rivers murmur, as they roll, the music of her power. Mr. CAPERTON fully appreciated her great capabilities and her immense natural advantages, and instead of calling upon Hercules for help, he advised the people to go to work and help themselves. They have gone to work with an unfaltering purpose and an indomitable will worthy of the heroic race from which they sprang. They have exhibited recuperative energies which have not been surpassed by any people in any age.

Such was the high estimate in which Mr. CAPERTON was held by the people of West Virginia that they embraced the first opportunity to send him as one of their representatives in that august body, the Senate of the United States. It is a sufficient eulogy to say of him that he was equal to the occasion and worthy of the exalted station. He was not a brilliant orator but a wise and safe counselor. He was not a fierce gladiator in debate, but a modest, dignified, prudent Senator. Descended from an ancient stock, he was always and everywhere a gentleman of the old school. He was a man of such lofty character and incorruptible integrity that he would have felt a stain upon his personal honor like a wound. What a happy day it would be, Mr. Speaker, if every position of honor and of trust in our land could be filled by a man of character, who would avoid corruption in office as he would flee from the "pestilence that walketh in darkness and the destruction that waiteth at noonday." But, sir, our true and noble and gallant friend has gone from among us forever. No more will his manly form be seen in these Halls. No more will we receive the friendly, cordial grasp of his hand. No more will we hear his words of sympathy and of cheer to comfort and to strengthen us in the great battle of life.

The mighty flood that rolls
Its torrents to the main,
Can ne'er recall its waters lost
From that abyss again.
So days and years and time,
Descending down to night,
Can thenceforth never more return
Back to the sphere of light.
And man, when in the grave,
Can never quit its gloom,
Until th' eternal morn shall wake
The slumber of the tomb.

Mr. Speaker, when the Forty-fourth Congress first assembled the Representatives of the people found the Capitol draped in mourning for the loss of Henry Wilson, the favorite son of Massachusetts and the second officer of the Government. During the existence of this Congress they have paused amid the bustle and turmoil of legislative life to chronicle the deaths of the lamented Starkweather of Connecticut, the gifted Parsons of Kentucky, the high-toned CAPERTON of West Virginia, and our late beloved Speaker, Michael C. Kerr of Indiana, whose genius and virtues have illustrated the grandeur of American institutions and lent additional luster to the American name. What mean all these dispensations of Divine Providence? What mean all these habiliments of woe which now surround the Speaker's chair and meet the eye of the Representative of the people as he enters this Hall? The solemn lesson which they convey to each one of us is "Be still, and know that I am God."

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, one of the most beautiful traits of the human character is that the living mourn the loss of the dead. When relatives or friends or acquaintances are removed from earth, it forces upon us a renewed realization that man is born to die, that life is but a span, and eternity hath no end; it arouses in our breasts the feeling of man's obligation to his God. How impressive and sorrowful the reflection that from the prime of life and the vigor of manhood we may, under the providence of God, be stricken down in the twinkling of an eye. It verifies the teaching of divinity that in the midst of life we are in death.

At an early hour upon the morning of the 27th of July last I was shocked with the intelligence, communicated by a friend, that Senator CAPERTON was dead. How sad that solemn announcement! Sadder, perhaps, to me than to any other member on this floor, for the thought rushed upon my mind that but a few brief weeks before that time, when a protracted, dangerous, and wasting sickness had carried me almost to death's door; when my family, physicians, and friends had well-nigh ceased to hope for my recovery—even when the announcement of my death had flashed along the wires to my constituents—I remember, ah! well and gratefully do I remember, the deep and anxious solicitude with which the distinguished dead whose loss we mourn here to-day lingered at my bed-side; well do I remember the words of comfort he whispered in my ear, and the tender care with which he administered to my almost dying wants. Under the providence of a merciful God I have been restored to health again, but my friend, O, my friend! where is he? Gone! gone to that bourn whence no traveler returns. I fellow him with my prayers and beseech for him grace and pardon from a just and righteous God.

At six o'clock in the evening of the 26th of July, 1876, ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON, Senator from the State of West Virginia, departed this life, in the sixty-sixth year of his age, in the city of Washington. His disease was that technically known as angina pectoris. His last illness was of brief duration, and was at no time regarded dangerous. His devoted wife was then unhappily confined to a sick-bed, at Richmond, Virginia, and for that reason was unable to attend her husband in his last hours. His son and daughter, assisted by other relatives, kept faithful watch over their fond father and were flattered by the hope of his speedy recovery. Upon the morning of the day of his death he was feeling so comfortable that he advised his son to attend the session of the House to hear the speech of an able friend. When the son returned he found his father sitting up in bed, brushing his whiskers. He suddenly called to the son to hoist the window, and immediately sank back on his pillow, and expired without a groan. We can better imagine than describe the anguish of those children, and the untold grief and agony that entwined itself around the heart of that wife when the startling, crushing news fell upon her ear that one whose very existence formed part of her own was called to lie down in the cold damp ground to sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

Mr. CAPERTON was born near Union, Monroe County, Virginia, now West Virginia, November 21, 1810. He attended school, first in Virginia, then at Huntsville, Alabama, next at the University of Virginia, and graduated at Yale College in 1839. He afterward studied law with Virginia's distinguished jurist, Judge Briscoe G. Baldwin, at Staunton, was subsequently admitted to the bar, and practiced his profession with ability during the remainder of his life. He served as a director of the James River and Kanawha Canal, and was for several years a member of the Virginia senate and house of delegates. His last senatorial term in the Legislature ended in 1860, and in 1861 he was elected a member of the State constitutional convention which passed the ordinance of secession, and was afterward elected by the Legislature of Virginia a member of the Confederate States senate, in which body he served until the close of the war.

After the close of the war he returned to his home in the mountains of his nativity, where, borrowing the idea from another, it may be said, the air is pure, heaven serene, and God is near. Here he intended to spend the evening of his life in his professional and private pursuits and in the enjoyments of his home. He engaged actively in presenting to eastern capitalists the vast and superior coal and timber regions of the southwestern portion of his State, and to his energy and ability perhaps as much as to those of any other gentleman are the citizens of the East and West indebted for that development which gives cheap fuel, cheap lumber, and promises of cheap transportation. But his mission had not yet been fulfilled; his people had further need of his talent, his experience, his learning, and his purity, and after an exciting and somewhat bitter contest between other gentlemen for a seat in the United States Senate in the winter of 1874–'75 the Legislature of his State conferred that high honor upon him. He was an element of compromise acceptable to all, and the honor was the more thankfully and graciously received because it came to him unsought.

In early life he was a whig in politics, was an admirer of Henry Clay, Josiah Randall, and their compeers, and a co-worker with them. The most cordial personal relations existed between himself and Mr. Randall, and the visits of the latter gentleman to the mineral springs of Virginia, and to his landed interests in the coal regions on the Great Kanawha, brought them into frequent association. Upon the disintegration of the whig party Mr. Randall was prominent in heading the movement to unite the whigs with the conservative-democratic party. His great speech, delivered at Chambersburgh, Pennsylvania, on the 6th of August, 1856, at the request of the democratic convention of that State, defined the policy of the wing of the party who aided the democrats in achieving the victory of that year. In this movement he was ably seconded by Mr. CAPERTON, and during the remainder of their lives they co-operated in carrying out the policy thus inaugurated.

Mr. CAPERTON discharged the duties of the various positions he was called upon to fill with honor to himself and benefit to his constituents. It was in the constitutional convention of Virginia, in 1861, that I became intimately acquainted with him. He there, as always before and since, displayed the fine culture, high character, and conservative views that drew around him the love and confidence of his people. He was a conservative-union man, opposed to secession, and declared that it was not the remedy for the evils of which his State complained—that secession would lead to coercion, coercion would produce war, and war would result in distress and desolation. It was not until his State had taken the fatal step that he determined to follow, but, being of that school which regarded the doctrine of paramount allegiance to the State, when his mother, Virginia, cast her fortune with the confederate government, he threw his influence for weal or for woe with that mother and determined to share her fate, whatever that fate might be. Upon the close of the war he accepted the situation, and acquiesced in the abandonment of secession and the overthrow of the institution of slavery.

He also acquiesced in the validity of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States, giving to them the broadest interpretation placed upon them by the courts of the country; but he also tenaciously clung to those other familiar provisions of the Constitution, one of which guarantees to every State in the Union a republican form of government, and the other reserving to the States respectively, or to the people, the powers not delegated to the United States nor prohibited by it to the States. His earthly career is ended, and his friends in their grief point with satisfaction to his life as one well spent—upon which neither spot nor blemish can be found. The chief feature of his character was its purity and unbending integrity; he lived and died an honest man—the noblest work of God. Sorrow for such a one is an affliction we cherish and brood over in solitude; we would not wipe out from our recollection if we could the memories of the man. "The love which survives the tomb is one of the noblest attributes of the soul." "There is a voice from the tomb sweeter than song—there is a recollection of the dead to which we turn, even from the charms of the living."

> Let me mingle tears with thee,
> Mourning for him who mourned for me.

Mr. TUCKER. Having known Mr. ALLEN TAYLOR CAPERTON, late Senator from West Virginia, intimately for more than a quarter of a century, it is fit that, as his friend and as a representative of his mother-Commonwealth, I should speak of his public and private character to-day.

He sprang from a race which removed from the south of France to the north of Ireland; and thence his great-grandfather, Adam Caperton, came to America.

His grandfather went to Kentucky, in its early history, and was killed by the Indians in a battle known as Estill's defeat.

His father, Hugh Caperton, began life in Monroe, then Greenbriar, County, Virginia. He was a prominent man, was esteemed a gentleman of honor, and was a citizen of great public spirit and wide influence, and full of good deeds to the people among whom he lived and died.

He was a member of the State Legislature and for several terms a Representative of his district in this House of Congress, in which body he established a cordial and permanent friendship with such men as Henry Clay and Daniel Webster.

His distinguished son, whose death we now deplore, was liberally educated at the University of Virginia and then at Yale College, being graduated at the latter institution in 1831. He studied law at Litchfield, Connecticut, and afterward under the late eminent Judge Briscoe G. Baldwin, of the court of appeals of Virginia.

He began the practice of the law in his native county, and rose rapidly in public confidence as a counselor, advocate, and man. He was successively a member of both houses of the Legislature of his native State, of her constitutional conventions of 1850 and 1861, and was elected by her Legislature in 1863 to the senate of the Confederate States, in which he served honorably to the close of the war. Two years ago he was elected to the Senate of the United States by the State of West Virginia, and died in July last while faithfully doing his duty in that body.

His career, so full of manifestations of public esteem, gives evidence of rare mental and moral endowments, and justifies me, who knew him well, in attempting to portray them as they were grouped in his noble character.

His intellect was active, acute, and vigorous, with a substratum of shrewd and masculine common sense, which constituted him a wise and sagacious counselor. He had imaginative powers superadded, which gave fervor and earnestness to his convictions and made him an able and often an eloquent advocate at the bar, on the hustings, and in the Senate. His culture was liberal, and, while his study of his profession and of political science did not rank him with the most learned and profound lawyers of the country, yet he was most efficient in the conduct of his cause, very successful in the management of business, eminently safe as an adviser, and an able public servant.

In the very depths of his soul he was brave, disinterested, generous, and true. He was sincere and constant in his friendships; open, manly, and magnanimous, though stern and resolute to his foes. Deceit could not cross the confines of a heart whose inmost citadel was held by honor and truth. He was frank and candid, and in his word absolute reliance was reposed; for as his sincerity was undoubted, so his courage was a pledge to make it good to his friend, or against his opponent.

To these sterling and manly virtues were united all the gentleness of a tender and loving nature. To his friends his society was a genial sunshine. Good sense, with wit and humor; earnestness of purpose, with perennial pleasantry; the manly activities of a firm and resolute nature, with a taste for poetry and music; gentle loves and ardent friendships in the midst of the fierce struggles with adverse fortune or malign influences—these were mingled in beautiful proportions on the page of his history.

His mountain home was the seat of a hospitality where his guest forgot it was not his own, or only recalled it as he admired the easy freedom and graceful dignity of a host who banished all formality in the nobleness of his welcome and the simplicity and generosity of his entertainment.

He had the warmest sympathies for his own people. "The short but simple annals of the poor" ever found his ear attentive. Their early traditions, their homely thoughts, their sturdy and healthful sentiments, he heard, appreciated, and cherished. To his equals he seemed proud and reserved, until friendship melted the surface, beneath which was the warm current of his affections; but he was never haughty to the lowly, the poor, or the helpless. To these he was gentle, tender, and sympathetic; so that popularity followed him unsought. He charmed childhood by his playfulness; won the esteem of the gentler sex by his attractive manners, his cordial deference, his genuine respect, and his chivalrous courtesy and manhood paid homage to his liberality, his courage, his honesty, his magnanimity, and his good sense.

In his own household—I pause upon its sacred threshold but to utter one word: As husband and father he merited the grief which can only be assuaged by Him whose promise is sure, to be the husband of widowhood and the father of orphanage!

I have spoken of Mr. CAPERTON as a man adorning society by his presence and as a citizen blessing his people by his beneficence.

I must speak of him as a public man. He was animated by a high public spirit, lending his aid to all schemes which would benefit and advance the interests of his community, his State, and his country, in its largest sense.

He was a whig in politics in early life, and adhered to that party until 1860 with consistent and unshaken fidelity. After the presidential election of that year he was elected to the convention of 1861 as a Union man. He was a patriot, who loved the Union of our fathers with a depth of devotion which was only surpassed by his veneration for Virginia. And he adhered to the Union until the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln of April 15, 1861, summoning Virginia to assist in the war upon her southern sisters, when he decided to follow her into the southern confederacy, and was faithful and true to its cause until it perished by war in 1865.

But Mr. CAPERTON was no visionary or dreamy abstractionist. His mind was sagacious and practical. In the overthrow of the confederacy he saw the divine decree that the future fortunes of the South were bound up in the restored Union under its constitution, and that duty demanded of him to devote his future life to building up the waste places of his own loved land, to repairing the breaches in the Federal system, and to promoting the liberty and the progress of the people of these reunited States.

I know that such was his patriotic purpose and has been his earnest effort. He fell at the post of his duty, and has left to his friends and to his countrymen a name without a stain, a character for spotless and lofty integrity, and the perpetual memory of a noble and honorable life.

Mr. CAPERTON and our late Speaker died within a few weeks of each other. Mr. Kerr passed away amid mountain-scenes in Virginia resembling those familiar to the eye of Mr. CAPERTON. Virginia may well mourn them together: the one her faithful son, the other who, drawing the inspiration of his opinions from our State, ever held her in a reverence which merits the tribute of her sorrow, as his eminent virtues and abilities won the esteem of her Representatives. In this Hall, where lately eloquence lent its voice of praise to the memory of Kerr, we may speak, above the graves of both, our sincere conviction that in their death the country has lost the sagacious counsels of two patriot-statesmen, never more needed than in this critical period of her history to guide her in the path of prosperity and honor and an enduring peace.

Mr. Speaker, I have thus endeavored to delineate the character of my friend in simple words and with fidelity to truth. I dare not trust myself to speak of the personal relations which bound us for many years nor of the beautiful memories of the past which crowd upon my mind.

In this desperate battle of life, as we near its close, so many who began the march with us have fallen like leaves in wintry weather, that we naturally feel as if the friends who are gone were more numerous than those who remain. What we are meant to learn from these providential events is not merely the trite lesson of the uncertainty of our life, but that as death ends so life must be filled up with duty. Duty is indeed the whole of our life, the sublimest word as it is the grandest thought of our race. As we look in the face of our honored dead, where passion's flush has yielded to perpetual pallor—

> Before decay's effacing fingers
> Have swept the lines where beauty lingers,
> And marked the mild, angelic air,
> The rapture of repose that's there, we feel how solemn it is to die and close forever the book of human purpose, and human activity, and human obligation. But life is more solemn than death, and of deeper import. It is our only opportunity for responsible work, to make up that record which must stand of duty done in the fear of God and for the good of our race.

Brother Representatives, we have buried one who, with us, represented the voice of the people of these States in our Federal Union. We stand to-day at the grave of one of the representatives of an organic State, in its equipollent relations to its sister Commonwealths. Each in our respective Houses have solemn relations to this great system of government, and fraught with momentous results in the near future of our history. May we be endued with wisdom from on high so to perform these important functions that when our summons comes, as soon it must come, we may render our dread account without fear; and, life's weary warfare done, and well done, may sink peacefully and honorably, with firm faith and humble hope, to our welcome rest from all the work that wearies, and enter with immortal energy upon the activities and the aspirations of an eternal life in the presence of our Father and our God!

Mr. KASSON. Mr. Speaker, I regret that I cannot adequately contribute another to the fitting tributes already rendered to a character so respected and so amiable as that of the late Senator CAPERTON. His life here in Washington was so quiet, his public service in the American Senate so short, that comparatively few of us on this floor had the pleasure of even a personal acquaintance with him; but so many of us as did know him—and I am glad to have been one of that number—most sincerely unite with the delegation from his own honored State in a common regret at his departure from these scenes of his official duty, and in a common grief that his presence will never again brighten the hours of our social intercourse.

Sir, there has always been, both in the Senate and House of Representatives, a body of useful men, rarely claiming the attention of the public press, rarely consuming the hours devoted to debate, but sound in their judgments, attentive to the duties of committees, patient in labor for their constituents, and conscientious in their votes. The applauding clamors of the public never fall to their share, never quicken their vanity, or give them a deceptive pleasure. No wreaths of earthly glory are woven for their brows. No eager, selfish ambitions induce them to provoke or to participate in popular tumults, in the turbulence of which they may rise to temporary distinction. They love peace for themselves and peace for their country. Their reward is not sought in popular applause, but in an approving conscience. The God who speaks in a "still, small voice," not He who speaks amid the rending winds of tumultuous praise or in the earthquake of civil strife, is the object of their worship. Faithful to duty as they see it, their lives pass, giving and receiving blessing, tranquilly to their end.

To this class of useful men and trustworthy public servants Senator CAPERTON belonged during the period of my acquaintance with him, faithful to his constituents, faithful to his own convictions of duty, giving to his country the benefit of his large experience in affairs without conceit and without ostentation. In social life his quiet nature gave an illumination to the circle in which he moved. Even his presence served as a bar to discord and an invitation to conciliation. Elected to a position in the confederate senate during the years of our national trouble, it might have been expected that he would enter the Senate of our reunited States with prejudices which would mar his record or impair his usefulness. But his character was too true, direct, and sincere to admit such a result. From the moment he took his official oath as a member of that exalted body charged with the vast interests of this Republic, he seemed to have no thought which was at discord with his patriotic duty. He became a true son of his united country, and not a word from his lips ever fanned the dying embers of civil strife. His action in the Senate, in committees, and in society was an assurance of returning fraternity. So far as we have any knowledge, no angers, personal or political, remained to be buried in his grave. No one there had need to suppress a frown. Only those who bore to him the sentiments of kindness and affection could be found in all the range of his social relations.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, this House knows no distinction of party names as we gather to this memorial service. We all reluctantly bid farewell to our late associate in Congress. We all honored him living; we all revere his memory, dead. We all wish to lay some fond tribute upon his tomb. All of us deeply sympathize with those who were nearest to him in the ties of kindred and with his congressional associates from his own State. We all are to see his face no more on earth. We all pray for a meeting in the other and happier world to which he has gone.

Mr. HARDENBERGH. Mr. Speaker, death's hurricane again has passed and a stately tree has fallen, rich in the foliage and fruits of its gathered years, at once an ornament, a beauty, and a blessing.

A stricken family bewails its loved one lost; a sovereign State mourns an illustrious son, called away in the maturity of his power; the Senate drapes again with the devices of mourning a Senator's chair, and we attest by our spoken grief that another member of the Forty-fourth Congress has passed through the portals of the tomb and a spirit ascended to the bosom of its Father and its God.

It is right that we should pause in our avocations, and while laying our garlands upon his tomb give fitting expressions to the thoughts which instinctively well up in the heart. It is also right that as representatives of the people we should bear our testimony to the virtues which gave dignity to and adorned his character, for he was true to his high trust, and the sentiment is at once chaste and beautiful that marks an immemorial custom when death enters here, as State joins with State, to attest the common sorrow as mourners at the grave of an associate and a friend. We cannot repress our grief when the "good man" dies. Society feels the vacuum when an educated mind is withdrawn forever from its service and a ray of broadest light expires, light furnished by that inward and immortal lamp which when its mission upon earth has ended is trimmed anew by angel hands to shine forever in the land beyond.

The mind of man in its sphere and destiny is essentially immortal. It is true it has its periods of youth and age; its rise, its progress, its decline; yet, like the oak whose withered branches have withstood the storms and gales of centuries, when its leaves are strewn by wailing winds and angry blasts, from the small but gradual unfolding of that vital substance spring forth into life and beauty as a new creation the buds and blossoms of another year.

There have been many vacant seats since first we gathered at our country's call. Massachusetts weeps still at Wilson's grave, for he was her gifted son, reared from toil, and the record of his useful public service in times that gave development to greatness will alike forever adorn her own and the nation's annals.

Connecticut has lain away with tender hands a gallant Senator and a faithful Representative once of us here. Kentucky's tears fell thick and fast as the manly form of Parsons was borne away to repose beneath her generous sods. A few days since and all the eloquence of woe was heard within this Hall, as we rested from our pursuits of legislation at Indiana's and the nation's loss that our Speaker, her sturdy son of Roman type, lay buried from our sight; and now West Virginia, virgin State, born into the Union amid the mightiest of earth's great warfares, has veiled her temples in mourning as the sad procession again was formed to bear her departed Senator o'er her hills and through her vales at once to his home and to his grave. Born upon her soil, with gifted powers early trained in academic groves, he gave to her his noblest services. And for these she loved him and crowned him with her highest civic honors. It was right it should thus be. That country best honors itself as it confers its dignities upon its worthiest and most illustrious sons, for the record of their lives will mark the noblest pages of its career.

There was a period in Grecian history denominated the "heroic age." The mystic spirit of that classic race had invested men with the dignity of gods. So wonderful had been their achievements, so exalted their career, that the mere attributes of ordinary humanity were not sufficient to account for the virtues they possessed. Their names were inscribed upon the warrior's shield, lifted up as the silent guardians of the public weal, adorned the temples dedicated to justice; for in all places and on all occasions where patriotism sought example the heroes of classic Greece claimed the reverence and affection of the people.

Mr. Speaker, may not the intelligent inhabitants of a hemisphere unknown to the ancient kingdoms of the world when truth was veiled in fiction and before the revealment of a superior wisdom to mankind, as we cross the threshold of our new centennial, give higher witness to our own "heroic age" as memory reverts amid such touching scenes as this to the long list of minds of giant mold from those who founded to those who in the providence of God may preserve this best of human governments? Standing as we do by the new-made graves of Wilson, Ferry, and of Starkweather, of Parsons, Kerr, and CAPERTON, shall we not learn lessons anew of the patriot's duty and the legislator's high responsibility, that passion and prejudice and envy shall be quenched in that nobler spirit of endeavor whose patriotism is the love of country, whose code of morals is the love of man? Then the pillars of our Republic will be the firmer set, its destiny the surer be, and then indeed shall be given a purer emphasis to the language of the Roman bard:

> Ye have raised monuments more lasting than brazen statues—higher than the royal pyramids—which cannot be destroyed by wasting rains or the fury of the winds, by the series of countless ages, or the flight of the eternal years.

Mr. FAULKNER. Mr. Speaker, my colleague who sits near me, [Mr. HEREFORD,] having, as it was altogether appropriate for him, given a somewhat detailed sketch of the life and services of the individual whose death has just been announced, it will only be expected from me to give my personal recollections and impressions of the deceased, as derived from my occasional official and private association with him. Although we were both natives and citizens of the same State, and of the same grand division of the State, yet we were widely separated by distance from each other, and rarely met except when engaged in the public councils of our State or of the nation. This is not an occasion, in my view of it, for indiscriminate or exaggerated eulogy, but a very fit and appropriate occasion to portray the real character of the deceased, and to let the story of his life suggest such reflections as the facts may fairly warrant.

Mr. CAPERTON was not among the most distinguished men of either of the two States which have honored him with their confidence; but he was a fair and honorable representative of a high-toned and educated class of country gentlemen who gave a character to Virginia society and exercised a salutary influence upon the particular neighborhoods in which they lived. Inheriting a large landed estate from his immediate ancestor, he was removed above the necessity of pursuing any profession as a means of livelihood; and yet, as was not uncommon among youths similarly situated with himself in that State, he received the benefits of a liberal and classical education, and passed through the curriculum of Yale and the University of Virginia with credit and distinction. Such an education at that period usually embraced a course of municipal, constitutional, and national law, and was sought after by our young men of inherited fortunes, not as a means of gain or profit, but as a source of intellectual enjoyment, and as a stepping stone to political preferment. Blessed with a sound constitution, a handsome person, frank and engaging manners, an easy flow of language, an ample fortune, and animated by noble but modest aspirations for public service, no young man could have commenced life with promise of a more useful and honorable career.

His mind was quick, sprightly, penetrating, and accurate, but not of the highest and most robust order. It had not been disciplined by habitual labor nor invigorated by the stern collision of intellectual gladiatorship. His memory was tenacious and his fancy occasionally brilliant, while a suppressed and gentle humor gave a peculiar charm to his conversation. His literary taste, naturally acute and delicate, had been assiduously cultivated and improved by a careful study of the best English classics.

As a statesman he was essentially conservative in all his views. He was a sincere believer in the superiority and value of free institutions and an inflexible advocate of all the just rights of the people; and yet he was no demagogue. His appeals were always to the reason, not to the passions or prejudices of his hearers. He never flattered popular follies, but often exhibited a peculiar pride in avowing an unpopular opinion if he had himself full faith in its soundness. He looked with intense admiration upon the wisdom and sagacity displayed in the Constitution of the United States, and was disposed especially in his earlier life, to give too broad and liberal a construction to its implied powers. He was the stern and inflexible supporter of what he believed to be the right; and perhaps treated with too much levity and harshness what was deemed by others expedient in morals and politics. His maxim in life was Nihil vero utile, quod non idem honestum.

There was one quality which strikingly distinguished Mr. CAPERTON, and which all will recognize who enjoyed the pleasure of his acquaintance, and that was an elevated tone of mind and morals, which rendered him incapable of countenancing a low or mean action. He shrank from all humbuggery, imposture, and false pretension as something vile and contaminating. He was a stranger to the gnawings of envy; he stabbed no man in the dark; he took no unmanly advantage of an opponent; he was modest in the assertion of his own merit; disdained to appropriate credit or honor to himself which he had not fairly and honestly earned, but did full justice to all who were associated with him in joint labors of any kind. He never sought to impress himself upon the world as something greater or better than he really was. In other words, he was throughout life a sincere, truthful, honest and honorable man.

My acquaintance with Mr. CAPERTON commenced at Richmond, in 1841. He was then a delegate from the county of Monroe, one of the transmontane and western counties of that State. The agricultural interests of his constituents were at that time suffering severely from the want of a cheap and convenient transportation of their products to market, and he, keenly sympathizing with their necessities, became soon recognized as an ardent and earnest friend of a liberal system of internal improvements. At that time the great scheme which absorbed the attention of the State was a continuous line of water communication between the seaboard and the Ohio River by the valleys of the James and Kanawha Rivers—an enterprise suggested by the unerring foresight of the Father of our Country—shown to be practicable by the engineering science of McNeil, Ellet, Fisk, and Lorraine, and pushed forward in its construction by the labors of Cabell and the eloquence of McDowell. Mr. CAPERTON attracted attention by his earnest advocacy of this great national thoroughfare, a work which now challenges the attention of Congress and ranks among the public works best entitled to its consideration and patronage.

My next association with him was in 1850, as a member of the reform constitutional convention of Virginia.

The people of Virginia for half a century after the close of the revolutionary war lived under a State constitution which would hardly be regarded as republican in these advanced days of democratic progress. Population as the basis of representative power in the Legislature was wholly ignored. The smallest counties, with a population of a few hundred inhabitants, had the same weight in the Legislature with the largest and most populous counties numbering from twenty to thirty thousand; suffrage was restricted to freeholders alone; not an office in the State was elective by the people except members of the Legislature. Election precincts were unknown, and if a voter lived twenty or thirty miles from the court-house, it was there, and there alone that he could declare his viva voce vote in the presence of the assembled voters of the county. These defects, with many others in the constitution of that State, were sought to be remedied by a convention which assembled in 1829, composed of a body of men as illustrious as ever met together in council upon this continent. Among the persons composing that body were James Madison, James Monroe, Chief-Justice Marshall, John Randolph, Littleton Waller Tazewell, Benjamin W. Leigh, and a host of others scarcely less distinguished for ability and statesmanship. Some of the most glaring defects in the then constitution were remedied; representation was somewhat more fairly apportioned and suffrage partially extended. But the instrument, though protected from severe criticism by the illustrious names which framed it, and which recommended its adoption, fell far short of meeting the popular demand for reform. Accordingly another convention was called in 1850, of which Mr. CAPERTON was a member. The results of that convention gave entire satisfaction to the popular mind of Virginia. Representation upon the basis of the free white population of the State was recognized, although, in a spirit of compromise, the period was suspended for a few years when the principle was to be carried into full operation. Suffrage was extended to all free white male citizens of twenty-one years of age and upward. All offices were made elective by the people, with many other changes of an important and interesting character. In all the proceedings of this convention Mr. CAPERTON bore a useful and prominent part as a friend of constitutional reform, earning the respect and confidence of his colleagues by his good sense, sound principles, and practical suggestions. The constitution was adopted by an overwhelming majority of the people, and an impulse given to the active energies of the State which soon became perceptible in its rapidly increasing prosperity.

Mr. CAPERTON was an ardent admirer of that great and accomplished statesman Henry Clay, who gave evidence in three of the most memorable acts of his life of a devotion almost passionate for the perpetuity of the Union. This sentiment was enthusiastically responded to by his supporters and disciples throughout the country, who, indeed, made it almost the shibboleth of party faith. But the Union which Mr. Clay so eloquently depicted was one of choice, of conciliation, and compromise; not of armed despotism and force. This opinion was largely shared by Mr. CAPERTON, and in all the movements preceding the breaking out of hostilities he was a firm and inflexible adviser of a policy that sought to preserve Virginia to the Union. But when the proclamation of President Lincoln was issued, calling upon that State, among others, to contribute her quota of troops and to become an active party to the war then about being inaugurated to crush the seceding States, and to imbrue her hands in the blood of her brethren of the South, a change came over him, as in one night it did over fifty thousand of the freemen and voters of Virginia. That proclamation boldly presented, on behalf of the Northern States, the stern ultimatum of war, and the alternative was then precipitated upon Virginia either to become a party to a war to conquer and subdue the seceding States or a party to a war to maintain and defend rights which she had held sacred from the foundation of the Government. Mr. CAPERTON and the great mass of the people of that State arrayed themselves on the side of the rights and sovereignty of the States. From that moment his heart and his services were freely given to the confederate cause.

I met with Mr. CAPERTON frequently after he took his seat in the Senate of the United States. I had occasional conferences with him upon measures pending before the two bodies, and it became my duty from time to time, as a member of the House of Representatives, to call his special attention to the personal claims of my constituents and to the local interests of my district. I found him a frank, courteous, intelligent, and attentive colaborer in the work of legislation, ready at all times to guard and protect the interests and to promote the just claims of the citizens of his State. In not a single instance did I observe any procrastination or inattention on his part to any of the several matters to which I invited his attention. His service in that elevated and dignified body was brief, too brief to enable him to exhibit to the country many of those sterling qualities of head and heart which would have reflected credit on his State. But he is now gone forever from among us; his place may be filled by successors of greater brilliancy and of more dazzling talents; but it never can be filled by any man of more virtuous and generous impulses, nor by one more loyal to the true interests and honor of his native State.

Mr. Speaker, I submit the resolutions which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read the resolutions, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives has received with deep sensibility and profound sorrow the intelligence of the death of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON late a Senator from the State of West Virginia.

Resolved, That the proceedings of this House in relation to the death of Hon. ALLEN T. CAPERTON be communicated to the widow and family of the deceased by the Clerk of the House.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect for the memory of the deceased this House do now adjourn.

The resolutions were adopted; and accordingly (at five o'clock and thirty minutes) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BANNING: The petition of John A. Lynch, acting quartermaster for the western department, under the command of Major-General John C. Frémont, for compensation while acting as said quartermaster, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FENN: The petition for a post-route from Kilton, Utah Territory, to Rock Creek, Idaho Territory, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 22, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present the joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they represent in substance and effect that the Columbia River, forming the boundary in part between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington, and draining the Territories of Idaho and Montana, west of the Rocky Mountains, ranks, among the rivers of the United States, next in importance to the Mississippi River, and is the largest river flowing into the Pacific Ocean from the American continent, its tributaries, watering about 220,000 square miles of territory; that the Columbia is the only river in the United States admitting deep sea-going vessels and ocean steamers one hundred miles into the interior from its mouth; that the channel of this river affords first-class facilities for the navigation of river steamers of large size, and for barge transportation for the distance of five hundred miles or more, obstructed only by two principal rapids and a few reefs and rocks removable by ordinary engineering. The rapids at the Cascades of the Columbia River have already been surveyed and favorably reported upon by the military engineers and an appropriation has been made of $90,000 for beginning the construction of a canal and locks to overcome the obstruction of the rapids at that point; surveys of the rapids called The Dalles have been made and favorably reported upon as feasible for improvement for a canal and locks at a limited expense, in comparison with the great commercial advantages which will result from such improvement. They further represent that the commerce already developed on that river is quite important and every year increasing at a rapid rate; that a very great extent of country bordering upon the Upper Columbia River is adapted for the growth of cereals in the highest perfection, and no undeveloped region of our country offers better advantages to agricultural settlers than this region. The great problem to be solved in opening this country to early settlement and great productiveness is cheap transportation to the sea of the great future agricultural exports which will follow the occupancy of the country. The Columbia River, when cleared of obstructions and opened to free navigation, will furnish the channel for this cheap transportation. They therefore pray, in the interest of the future development of this country, as well as in the interest of the general commerce of the United States, that Congress will grant liberal appropriations for the opening and free navigation of the great Columbia River. I move that this memorial be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and I desire to state that yesterday a bill was introduced having reference to this matter and referred to the Committee on Commerce. I desire if it be in order to move another reference of that bill. I move that the vote be reconsidered by which it was referred to the Committee on Commerce, in order that it may go to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. No. 1100) making appropriations for the improvement of the Lower Williamette and Columbia Rivers from Portland, Oregon, to the sea, and that it be referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. It is so ordered.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 1638) for the relief of Robert H. Flavell, sergeant Company F, Seventh Missouri; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4258) to provide for the payment for certain improvements on lands now embraced in the military reservation of Fort Cameron, in the Territory of Utah.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PRICE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Laban Heath, praying compensation for damages arising to him as publisher by reason of certain defective printing of steel-plate illustrations of bank-notes and currency by the Treasury Department under a contract in 1868 and 1869, reported adversely thereon, and asked to be discharged from its further consideration.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to my friend the Senator from West Virginia that he also ask that the claim be rejected.

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir; I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate concur in the report that the claim be rejected?

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 751) granting a pension to E. O. Nye, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1101) making appropriations for the further improvement of the Willamette River in Oregon above the falls; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard, and ordered to be printed.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT. It will be remembered that on Tuesday I gave notice that I should this morning ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary declaring the true construction of the several acts of Congress giving aid to the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroads, known as the act touching the Central Branch. In view of the fact that there is barely a quorum of the Senate present this morning, if so many as that, and as I understand the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is desirous of proceeding with the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections at this time, I shall not press that bill this morning. I deem it proper to give this notice lest it should be considered that there has been some abandonment of the proposed action; and I say now that I shall as soon as the Senate convenes after the proposed recess ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope the Senator from Iowa will at least hold his determination to press that bill in abeyance until he is further advised in regard to the present condition of that road and its operations. The bill that he proposes to press as the measure of the Judiciary Committee seems to me a measure of very doubtful expediency. It is an attempt to obtain from this body a judicial declaration as to the meaning of an act of Congress, which I think should properly be left to the courts, and, in my judgment, if it were to become a law by the concurrence of both Houses, could not in any way affect the rights of the corporation, if they have any, under the statute already passed. I have proposed on a previous occasion to substitute for the measure reported by the Judiciary Committee a bill referring the whole subject to the Court of Claims for its decision. The reason why that course cannot be taken now is because, under the constitution of the Court of Claims, it can only take jurisdiction of matters that are purely sounding in money damages, money claims as they are called. This is an equitable claim; and of course it would require a special act of Congress to confer jurisdiction on the court.

But since the bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company have proceeded under their charter in the construction of an additional twenty miles. Twelve miles of it are already in operation. Before the Senator can reach the bill, at the period to which he has called the attention of the Senate, the twenty miles will be in active operation; and the whole question can then properly come before the Department for adjudication under the provisions of the law itself. I would suggest that if, upon examination of the facts in the case, the Senator is advised that this subject may be considered properly before the Department of Justice or Department of the Interior, any action by the Senate would be entirely unnecessary and superfluous. I trust he will at least withdraw his notice that he shall urge the consideration of the bill after the holiday recess, until there has been further examination as to the condition of the road at the present time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only desire to add to what I have said, in view of the remarks of the Senator from Kansas, that all the matters or most of those suggested by him were fully considered in by the Judiciary Committee at the time this bill was reported and due weight given to them. In view of the condition of the state of the decisions in the Department it was regarded as absolutely necessary, or certainly very advisable, that legislation of the character proposed should be had here. I was aware of the proposition made by the Senator from Kansas. Whether that be the advisable course, or the one proposed by the committee, can be determined by the Senate when the matter shall be before it. It will be for the Senate to determine in its pleasure whether it will or will not proceed to the consideration of this bill.

I have given this notice at this time in part from the fact that I have assured the Senator that I would not call the bill up without previous notice to him. Of course if there be facts intervening between now and the time that I have suggested which shall render it advisable to postpone its further consideration, I shall not at that time press it; but I deemed it to be my duty to the committee and also to this measure to give the notice I have given. Of course intervening facts may change the course that I shall take.

Mr. MITCHELL. If there be no further morning business——

Mr. INGALLS. One moment. I desire to understand from the Senator from Iowa in regard to the matter now before the Senate whether his notice is to be understood as meaning that he will on the first day after the holiday recess move to proceed to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. I shall esteem it to be my duty to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill at that time, unless something shall intervene in the mean while to lead me to think that it is not advisable to do so, and I will advise the Senator in time.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BRUCE, it was Ordered, That William M. Compton and others, sureties on the bond of B. B. Emory, late collector of internal revenue for the third district of Mississippi, have leave to withdraw their petition and papers from the files of the Senate by leaving copies of the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MITCHELL. If there is no further morning business, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the regular order of unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to considering the morning hour terminated?

Mr. NORWOOD. I would ask the Senator from Oregon to yield to me to call up a bill that I have wished several times to get up, but have always yielded to other Senators who desired to get up other measures. It is a private bill, for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is the bill likely to lead to discussion or take time?

Mr. NORWOOD. I cannot say. It is a bill the purpose of which is to allow a claimant to go before the Court of Claims on the ground that he lost his opportunity through the laches of his attorney at law. That, I believe, is the only point in the case.

Mr. MITCHELL. It being in the morning hour, I will give way.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to suggest to my friend from Georgia that that bill comes from the Judiciary Committee and there is an adverse report.

Mr. NORWOOD. I am aware of that.

Mr. WRIGHT. And I can say to my friend from Oregon that while I have no disposition to captiously or otherwise interpose objections to the passage of this bill, it certainly cannot be passed without discussion, and I believe every member of the Committee on the Judiciary is absent except myself at this time. There is a majority of the committee against the bill. To take it up at this time when a majority of the members are absent, I hardly think would be fair to them.

Mr. NORWOOD. I have no wish to press the bill in the absence of the Judiciary Committee, but I am really anxious to get action upon it. The party interested has been here a long time, as the Senator from Iowa knows. I had not looked around the Senate to see who was present of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me to make one further remark. My friend will bear me witness that I have no disposition to interfere with action on this bill at any reasonable time; but I think it would be better for him to give notice that he will ask if he can get the floor to take this bill up at the very earliest day, and then the members of the Judiciary Committee will be aware of the fact and can be here. I think it would be hardly proper to take it up this morning under all the circumstances.

Mr. NORWOOD. Under that suggestion I will not press it this morning. I suppose there will be no legislative action after to-day until probably the 3d of January, and for that reason I will not give notice of a time so far in advance when I shall move to take up the bill.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour will be considered as having terminated. The unfinished business is the resolution directing an inquiry as to the eligibility of J. W. Watts as elector for the State of Oregon, and the circumstances attending the appointment of electors in that State. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the resolution. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolution as introduced by Mr. MITCHELL is in the following words:

Resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby instructed to investigate the facts attending the appointment of said electors and pretended electors, their action as electors and pretended electors, and the action of the governor and secretary of state in respect to them, and report the same to the Senate; and for this purpose may employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and examine witnesses.

The amendment reported to that resolution is to strike out all after the word "resolved" and insert:

That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby instructed to inquire into the eligibility of said J. W. Watts, and investigate the facts attending the appointment of said electors and pretended electors and report the same to the Senate; and for this purpose may employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and examine witnesses.

Mr. BOGY. The amendment upon which we are called to vote now is one offered by the Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] is it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No, sir; the amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware touches the preamble, which will come last.

Mr. BOGY. Is the question on the adoption of the resolution?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the amendment proposed by the committee to the resolution. It strikes out all after the word "resolved" and inserts a substitute.

Mr. BOGY. It is merely adopting the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution substantially in the form reported.

Mr. BOGY. And not of the preamble?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not the preamble.

Mr. BOGY. The preamble will be open to amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be.

Mr. BOGY. I desire at the proper time to offer an amendment to the preamble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will have the opportunity.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am decidedly in favor of the investigation of this electoral vote in Oregon; but this resolution is fully covered by the last clause in the resolution of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] which has already passed this House, and the Committee on Privileges and Elections have just as much authority to investigate this election under that resolution as they will have under this resolution, and this resolution is entirely unnecessary. I will read the last clause of the resolution offered by the Senator from Vermont and adopted by the Senate:

Resolved further, That the said committee be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the eligibility to office under the Constitution of the United States of any persons alleged to have been ineligible on the 7th day of November last, or to be ineligible as electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, to whom certificates of election have been or shall be issued by the executive authority of any State as such electors; and whether the appointment of electors or those claiming to be such in any of the States has been made, either by force, fraud, or other means, otherwise than in conformity with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the respective States; and whether any such appointment or action of any such elector has been in anywise unconstitutionally or unlawfully interfered with; and to inquire and report whether Congress has any constitutional power, and, if so, what, and the extent thereof, in respect of the appointment of or action of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, or over returns or certificates of votes of such electors; and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, and have leave to sit during the session of the Senate.

That fully provides for this case, and there is no necessity for the passage of this resolution. If it were not provided for in that resolution, I would vote for this amendment to the resolution without the preamble.

Mr. MITCHELL. That question was considered by the committee; in fact that was one reason why I myself moved that this resolution should go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I was aware of the fact that there had been a general resolution of inquiry adopted by the Senate, and while there was some difference of opinion in the committee it was considered a matter of very grave doubt with some and of positive opinion with others that the resolution referred to by the honorable Senator from Missouri did not cover this case. For my own part I feel very confident that it does not cover it, and the reason why is this: The Senator from Missouri will observe that there is a qualifying clause in that resolution. It first provides that the committee shall investigate as to the eligibility of certain electors; but there is this qualifying clause in that resolution, namely, "to whom certificates have been issued by the governor of the State." No certificate has ever been issued by the governor of the State to Mr. Watts, and therefore I do not think his case comes within the purview of the general resolution heretofore adopted by the Senate, and I think I may say that is the opinion of at least a number of the members of the committee, and it was thought I think generally by the committee that out of abundant caution it would be proper at least to adopt this resolution.

Mr. KERNAN. I cannot speak particularly as to whether one resolution or the other is broader in the view of the committee; but I am in favor of a full investigation into the whole subject. Is this deemed necessary by the committee with a view of enabling them to investigate further in relation to the Oregon case?

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not now a member of the committee, and of course am not able to speak as to what the committee has done.

Mr. KERNAN. I speak from the newspapers. They say witnesses are on their way.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think that is true.

Mr. KERNAN. If there be anything in this resolution that enables them to investigate more fully than they otherwise would, I am in favor of the resolution. I am desirous that there should be the fullest investigation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was very anxious that there should be no loophole; that the authority of the committee should be ample so as to include this case in all its aspects.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections to the resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the preamble, and the first question is on the amendment of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] to the amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is to strike out all after the word "whereas," in the first line of the preamble, and insert the following in lieu thereof:

It is alleged that at the late election for electors of President and Vice-President for the State of Oregon the people of said State, by a majority of over one thousand votes, elected W. H. Odell, John C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts;

And whereas it is also alleged that the governor of said State did subsequently, in violation of law and in defiance of the expressed will of the people, issue a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin instead of to J. W. Watts;

And whereas it is also alleged that said E. A. Cronin did, in violation of law, upon some pretext, assume to select for his colleagues one J. N. T. Miller and John Parker in lieu of said W. H. Odell and John C. Cartwright;

And whereas it is further alleged that said Cronin, Miller, and Parker have assumed to cast the vote of Oregon for President and Vice-President, and to certify the same to the President of the Senate: Therefore,

The amendment proposed by Mr. BAYARD is to strike out all after the word "alleged" in the first line of the pending amendment and insert:

That the governor of the State of Oregon has issued a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin as one of the electors of said State instead of issuing such certificate to one J. W. Watts, alleging that the said Watts was ineligible to the said office of elector on November 7, 1876, the time of said election.

Mr. BAYARD. The amendment just read I believe was offered by me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. So the Chair understands.

Mr. BAYARD. I trust sincerely that, as there appears to be no dissenting voice to the investigation being held, it will not be deemed necessary to preface the resolution by a condemnation in advance, in the shape of a preamble, of the action of the executive of this State. It is not necessary to determine the case, and it occurs to me, as the Senate proposes to act judicially on this subject and very properly by taking the inquiry into the hands of one of its committees, it will lessen the weight of its judgment to decide in advance the very thing to be inquired of. It is not only a mere abstract sense of justice, but it occurs to me that it is peculiarly fitting at this time, in the face of the grave events before us, in the face of the dignity of the questions we are to act upon, that our whole tone of addressing ourselves to these subjects should be worthy of the subjects and of the powers which are proposed to be exercised. We should come to our judgment in this matter with gravity and decorum, and both are due from us at all times and never more than on an occasion like this. Whatever may be the conclusions we may arrive at of the legality or illegality of the action of the governor of Oregon, I do submit we can reach them without reflecting upon him in advance.

The amendment which I have offered is strong enough to bring before the Senate the facts showing the origin of this inquiry, why the inquiry is sought and for what it is sought. I have not sought to amend in any way the language of the honorable Senator's inquiry. I only submit to him and the entire Senate that we can reach his end without any show of unjudicial bias or partisan feeling. These questions involve so much that I do not wish in any vote I may cast, I do not wish in any remarks I may make, that any one should be able to discover which way a party predilection would control me in my feelings. I believe, if that rule be followed, that we shall have gone far toward reaching that temper of mind which is essential for us in order to act properly in this grave case.

I cannot imagine that the resolution of inquiry is strengthened by its present preamble; on the contrary, I am sure that it is impeached by the present preamble; and that which I have offered as an amendment simply recites the fact that there is an allegation of error or questionable action on the part of an official clothed with power, and therefore we submit it to the Committee on the Judiciary to inform us whether he has or not acted in accordance with his legal right and power and sense of duty.

It is not wise to impeach motives. How can we tell each other's motives when our own are so often hidden from us? It is not wise; it is not just, and in the present case, I submit, it is not decorous. This question is a grave one, and it should have been, if it has not been, discussed only with gravity and with a total absence of partisan heat. Why, then, upon a resolution in regard to which I do not know that there is any dissent in the Senate, couple it with a preamble that does reflect, and reflect coarsely, as I think unjustly, upon the action of a man, a personal stranger to me, who I deem is not only entitled to an absence of judgment until we shall know all the facts, but is entitled from us to what is due to ourselves in the matter, so that we should not hastily in advance prejudge his case?

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Delaware places a wholly and entirely different construction on this preamble from that placed on it by myself. The Senator says that it reflects coarsely and harshly, if I understood him correctly, upon Governor Grover. I do not think so. Such was not my intention, I am sure, so far as I am concerned, and I am satisfied the committee had no such intention as to assert anything that would condemn him in advance of investigation. The preamble simply states that whereas so and so is alleged, referring, of course, to the public charge that has been made all over the country in regard to the action of Governor Grover.

But in order to show the honorable Senator from Delaware that I mean to be just as fair as he can be, I will not take up the time of the Senate in regard to this preamble. I care nothing about it particularly. The resolution of inquiry has been adopted; the investigation will be made; the report of the committee will come before us, and then we can make up our judgments. If it is agreeable to the Senate, as it is pretty evident that we shall have no quorum if the yeas and nays are called, I will consent to take either the preamble suggested by the honorable Senator from Delaware, or to lay all the preambles on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let both be read. I should like to hear them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the preamble of the committee and that of the Senator from Delaware.

The CHIEF CLERK. The preamble as reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections is in the following words:

Whereas it is alleged that at the late election for election of President and Vice-President for the State of Oregon the people of said State, by a majority of over one thousand votes, elected W. H. Odell, John C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts;

And whereas it is also alleged that the governor of said State did subsequently, in violation of law and in defiance of the expressed will of the people, issue a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin instead of to said J. W. Watts;

And whereas it is also alleged that said E. A. Cronin did, in violation of law, upon some pretext, assume to select for his colleagues one J. N. T. Miller and John Parker in lieu of said W. H. Odell and John C. Cartwright;

And whereas it is further alleged that said Cronin, Miller, and Parker have assumed to cast the vote of Oregon for President and Vice-President, and to certify the same to the President of the Senate: Therefore.

The preamble, if amended as proposed by Senator BAYARD, will read:

Whereas it is alleged that the governor of the State of Oregon has issued a certificate of election to one E. A. Cronin as one of the electors of said State instead of issuing such certificate to one J. W. Watts, alleging that the said Watts was ineligible to the said office of elector on November 7, 1876, the time of said election: Therefore.

Mr. MITCHELL. If it is in order and will not affect the resolution as passed, I move to lay the preamble on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let the resolution be read. I do not think it would read well without some preamble.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Privileges and Elections is hereby instructed to inquire into the eligibility of said J. W. Watts, and investigate the facts attending the appointment of said electors and pretended electors and report the same to the Senate; and for this purpose may employ a stenographer, send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and examine witnesses.

Mr. SHERMAN. The word "said" should be stricken out. My impression is that the preamble of the Senator from Delaware would probably avoid the necessity of changing the resolution; but by striking out two or three words in the resolution it would read as well without a preamble.

Mr. MITCHELL. I make no objection to the preamble of the Senator from Delaware and withdraw my motion to lay on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Delaware to the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the preamble as amended.

The preamble, as amended, was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. GEORGE M. ADAMS, its Clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. ALFRED M. SCALES of North Carolina, Mr. CHARLES H. MORGAN of Missouri, and Mr. JULIUS H. SEELYE of Massachusetts, managers at the conference on its part.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. No. 4272) authorizing the use of certain funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. No. 97) directing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to issue certificate of relocation for six hundred and forty acres of land in the Territory of Missouri to legal representatives of Samuel Ware;

A bill (H. R. No. 1026) for the relief of Thomas Van Duzen and his assigns for lands;

A bill (H. R. No. 3504) for the relief of Thomas Day; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4124) to provide for the expenses of certain special committees of the House of Representatives and of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate.

LANDS IN CHEROKEE STRIP.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 1984) to provide for the sale of certain lands in Kansas.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives to that bill, and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. CLAYTON. What lands are those?

Mr. INGALLS. The Cherokees' strip.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore being by unanimous consent authorized to appoint the committee of conference on the part of the Senate, Mr. ALLISON, Mr. PADDOCK, and Mr. BOGY were appointed.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask to have taken from the Secretary's desk the bill (H. R. No. 4272) authorizing the use of certain funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the question be put on my motion.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 19, noes 8; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Vermont to waive his motion for an executive session until the bill is read that I desire to have taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know debate is not in order; but I ask unanimous consent to say a single word. I do not know anything about the bill, and have not the slightest objection to it that I know of, and probably should not have if I heard it read; but feeling that there was probably no quorum here from the apparent thinness of the Chamber—for as soon as the Oregon business was disposed of the Chamber seemed suddenly to grow thin—I have made the motion, in order to ascertain whether there is a quorum. If there is a quorum here, most certainly I will consent that the doors be opened or my motion be voted down. The Senator does not want to pass the bill without a quorum, I am sure, any more than I do.

The yeas and nays were taken, with the following result:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boutwell, Burnside, Chaffee, Cockrell, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Johnston, Kernan, Key, Logan, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill, Norwood, Price, Spencer, Withers, and Wright—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Booth, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Ferry, Ingalls, Mitchell, Morton, Paddock, and Sherman—12.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Blaine, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Patterson, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Windom—38.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Vermont, the yeas are 25 and the nays 12; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONKLING. I think it is hardly worth while to attempt to get a quorum for this one day at this hour. Therefore I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate stands adjourned until Tuesday next at twelve o'clock.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 22, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there a petition accompanying the bill?
Mr. HUNTON. It is accompanied by the usual request.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.
Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

GEORGE S. HAWKINS.

Mr. HUNTON, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 1617) to remove the politicnl disabilities of George S. Hawkins, of Florida.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is this bill also accompanied by a petition?
Mr. HUNTON. It is.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.
Mr. HUNTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.
The latter motion was agreed to.

JULIUS S. BOHRER.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back adversely the following; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:
A bill (H. R. No. 1112) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, late master in the United States Navy;
A bill (H. R. No. 3778) for the relief of Julius S. Bohrer, United States Navy; and
The petition of Julius S. Bohrer, asking to be restored to the rank and privileges of master in the United States Navy.

FREDERICK G. MOORE.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported adversely upon the following; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:
The petition of Frederick George Moore of Boston, Massachusetts, for permission to receive a medal from the Italian government for services rendered during the siege of Capua during the war of 1860.

RIGHTS OF CITIZENS ABROAD.

Mr. FAULKNER. Among the special orders is a bill reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs (H. R. No. 2245) to carry into execution the provisions of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution concerning citizenship, and to define certain rights of citizens of the United States in foreign countries, and certain duties of diplomatic and consular officers, and for other purposes. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
Mr. HALE. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.
The SPEAKER. That will be understood.
There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

MARCUS RADICH.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Wisconsin. During the last session of Congress a joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Foreign Affairs (H. R. No. 130) referring the claim of Marcus Radich to the Court of Claims. The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole and placed on the Private Calendar, but inadvertently the report accompanying the bill has never been printed. I now ask that the report be ordered to be printed.
There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

MRS. EDITH F. ROSS.

Mr. STONE, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4215) for the relief of Mrs. Edith F. Ross, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post Roads.
The motion was agreed to; and the motion to reconsider the reference was laid on the table.

WILLIAM R. WILMER.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 3698) for the relief of William R. Wilmer, late collector of internal revenue for the fifth district of Maryland; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

JOHN N. REED.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4274) for the relief of John N. Reed; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calender, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WIDOW OF LATE SPEAKER KERR.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations are hereby authorized and directed to report, as a part of the deficiency bill or some other appropriation bill, a provision to pay to the widow of Michael C. Kerr, late Speaker of this House, a sum equal to the pay and mileage of the Speaker from the date of the late Speaker's death to the end of the present Congress; and said provision shall be in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this resolution will simply be referred to the committee.
Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will allow the House to adopt this resolution at once. Before any action is taken, I wish to say that as this is the first instance of a Speaker dying while in office, we have no precedent, I believe, for any action of this sort. But I understand that in the Senate in a case where the Vice-President has died, a similar provision has been made. I do not care, however, whether there be any precedent drawn from the action of the Senate or not; every gentleman on this side of the House and on the other (for this certainly cannot be a matter about which we shall raise any question other than the merit of the proposition) will, I hope, understand, without the necessity of saying a word, the very great propriety of adopting the measure here proposed; and I hope that this resolution, which makes the duty of the committee plain and makes the proposition in order, will be agreed to without dissent.
Mr. HOLMAN. My suggestion that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations was made simply with the view to the consideration of the subject and the precedents. The proposition is perhaps all right, though the suggestion has not been made before. Of course I have no objection.
The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection; the resolution is before the House.
The resolution was adopted unanimously.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, this being "objection day."
The motion was agreed to.
The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

MRS. AMELIA A. H. RICHARDS.

The first business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3507) for the relief of Mrs. Amelia A. H. Richards, administratrix of Felix Richards, deceased, late of Fairfax County, Virginia.
Mr. HOLMAN. I think that this bill ought to be discussed. I object to it.
Mr. HOAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire whether the first bill in order is not the one at the beginning of the Calendar?
The CHAIRMAN. We begin where we left off on the last "objection day" last session.
Mr. WHITE. Should not the bills heretofore objected to be first taken up?
The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; they will not be considered till we get through the Calendar.

ANDREW JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3292) providing for a pension to be paid to Andrew Jackson, (colored,) of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.
The bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Andrew Jackson, (colored,) of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, and to pay him, said Jackson, at the rate of ——— dollars per month from and after the passage of the act, on account of faithful services performed with the First Pennsylvania Regiment during the Mexican war, and equally faithful and efficient services in the late war, and in attendance upon and care of prisoners at Libby Prison while he also was a prisoner; and in consideration of the fact that Jackson is disabled by disease contracted in the Army.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

MRS. JULIA H. TOTTEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3415) for the relief of Mrs. Julia H. Totten, widow of James Totten, late lieutenant-colonel and assistant inspector-general United States Army.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mrs. Julia H. Totten, widow of James Totten, late lieutenant-colonel and assistant inspector-general United States Army, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of the act.

An amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to strike out "$50 per month" and to insert "$30 per month" was agreed to.

There being no objection, the bill, as amended, was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF R. H. MURRELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3509) for the relief of the legal representatives of R. H. Murrell, deceased, late commissary of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to the legal representatives of R. H. Murrell, deceased, late of the Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, (afterward consolidated with the Eighth Tennessee Cavalry,) out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the pay and allowances of first lieutenant and regimental commissary of subsistence from the 15th day of September, 1863, until the 26th day of December, 1863, the latter being date of the death of Murrell at Camp Nelson, Kentucky.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

CYNTHIA H. ABBOTT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3510) granting a pension to Cynthia H. Abbott.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cynthia H. Abbott, mother of Augustus P. Abbott, formerly a seaman in the United States service, to date from his death.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read.

Mr. RUSK. Is there an amendment to that bill?

The CHAIRMAN. There is not.

Mr. RUSK. Then I shall have to object to the bill.

THOMAS G. KINGSLEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3511) granting a pension to Thomas G. Kingsley.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to grant an increase of pension to Thomas G. Kingsley, formerly colonel of the Twenty-sixth Connecticut Volunteers, equal to the special rate provided for the loss of both eyes, or both feet or hands.

Mr. REAGAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears from the evidence that the petitioner was formerly colonel of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and at the attack at Port Hudson, during the late war, he was shot in the head. The Commissioner of Pensions graded the petitioner at total disability, and allowed him $30 per month, the highest sum he could award him under existing laws.

The petitioner claims, however, that his pension is inadequate, and out of proportion to the injuries from which he is suffering, and when his condition is considered, there seems to be some show of justice in his claim; if this is conceded, then Congress alone must give relief, as the Commissioner of Pensions has done all in his power under the laws to give the petitioner an adequate rate of pension.

The condition of the petitioner may be briefly stated as follows, and the nature of his disability:

The bullet entered his head just below the left eye, and came out about one inch from the center of his right ear, shathering in its course a large portion of the upper jaw, and taking off the front part of the roof of the mouth; it also cracked the right cheek-bone to the right eye, tore a hole through the right nostril, and destroyed all of the teeth in the lower jaw. When he wants to drink he has to hold up his head and let the liquid run down his throat, otherwise it would go into the nostril. As may be imagined, he cannot chew nor masticate his food, and is compelled to eat only soft food, and is almost constantly under medical treatment as a result. The petitioner also alleges that, previous to entering the United States service, he was a teacher by profession, and that he is debarred from obtaining a livelihood by his profession because of his inability to articulate correctly.

By an act approved June 18, 1874, which was an amendment to the pension laws, a special grade of disability was established, whereby persons who require the personal attendance of another, being helpless by reason of losing the sight of both eyes, or the use of both hands or feet, were allowed the sum of $50 per month.

While the disability of the petitioner does not come strictly within the character of the grade specially mentioned and could not be construed so by the Commissioner of Pensions, they are nevertheless, in some respects, full as severe. He does not require the same amount of personal assistance, but he suffers more in consequence of not being able to partake of food and drink the same as they. Although they may have lost their limbs, having good food and digestive organs, they may maintain health; but this is denied the petitioner.

When the whole case of the petitioner is considered, the exceptional character of his injuries and the effect of the same as described above, your committee respectfully report the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

CATHARINE FERRY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 703) granting a pension to Catharine Ferry.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Ferry, mother of Sylvester Ferry, late a corporal in Company I, One hundred and forty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

That Catharine Ferry is the mother of Sylvester Ferry, deceased, formerly a corporal in Company H, Fifth New York Volunteers; that he was her only surviving son, and was unmarried at the time of his death, and had always remained single; she was also dependent upon him for support. On May 5, 1864, at the battle of the Wilderness, Ferry was captured and sent to Florence, South Carolina, a prisoner, where he remained until paroled, at Charleston, December 16, 1864. When paroled he was suffering from frozen feet, and was, in consequence, admitted to hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, to be treated for the same. He was discharged from service June 22, 1865, and was subsequently treated for gangrene of the feet, caused by their having been frozen. This is clearly proven. He subsequently died, November 13, 1867, of consumption, as proved by evidence of Dr. H. H. Gregory, who says the disease was undoubtedly caused by privations and exposure in southern prisons. The mother claims that death was caused by gangrene of the feet, caused by the exposure and privation. All the evidence goes to show that the primary cause of his death was the same, namely, exposure and privation while a prisoner, and in this opinion the Commissioner of Pensions concurs. The Commissioner, notwithstanding his opinion, called for further proof concerning Ferry's celibacy, his medical treatment from discharge to date of death, and the dependence of the mother upon the support of her son, which was not complied with to his full satisfaction within the limited time.

The evidence in the possession of your committee seems to fully establish the claim made, and there seems no doubt that the claim for pension is a just one. The committee therefore make a favorable report on the bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it pass.

MRS. AMANDA RAINS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2218) for the relief of Mrs. Amanda Rains.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Mrs. Amanda Rains, widow of Dr. Jonathan Rains, deceased, the sum of $120, in full compensation and satisfaction of the claim for the services of said Jonathan Rains as acting assistant surgeon of the Army at Marshall, Illinois.

The report was read, as follows:

That Company G, of the Forty-second Wisconsin Volunteer Soldiers, of the late civil war, were on detached duty at Marshall, in the State of Illinois, in the latter part of the year 1864. Considerable sickness prevailed among said soldiers, and on the 31st day of October, 1864, one F. Wallace, deputy provost-marshal, who had command of said post at Marshall, entered into a written contract with Dr. J. Rains, late husband of the claimant, by the terms of which said Dr. Rains was required to give his professional attention and services to the sick soldiers aforesaid, at the price of $40 per month, and to furnish all needful medicines at an additional sum of 50 per cent. of the price agreed upon for his professional services.

The testimony of five different witnesses clearly establishes the rendition of almost constant attention of Dr. Rains to said soldiers; that many of them were sick, and one had a broken leg; that they needed medical attention. The account, as made out under the contract, was duly certified to by the captain (A. I. Porter) who commanded the company, certifying the account to be just and correct.

The account, as itemized, shows daily visits to from two to eleven sick soldiers during the time charged for, to wit, two months.

The proper accounting officer for this character of claims refused to approve and certify the same for payment, simply because the contract was not made by a district provost-marshal, instead of a deputy. The necessity for the services rendered, and that they were rendered as charged, is nowhere denied. The objection resting alone upon technical grounds, your committee are unable to see the justice, while it may be quite comformable to military law, in refusing a just compensation for the services rendered and medicines furnished under the contract. Soldiers who have volunteered their services in the defense of their country, who are suffering from the maladies of camp life and broken limbs, should not be required to wait for relief until all superfluous formalities may be gone through with. Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ASSISTANT SURGEON THOMAS F. AZPELL, UNITED STATES ARMY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 408) for the relief of Assistant Surgeon Thomas F. Azpell, United States Army.

The bill, which was read, provides that the payments made by the Department of the Interior to Assistant Surgeon Thomas F. Azpell, United States Army, for medical services rendered the Hoopa Valley Indians at the request of said Department in the absence of other medical aid, are hereby sanctioned; and the said Assistant Surgeon Azpell is authorized to retain the compensation already paid, anything in the statutes of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUTENANT ALEXANDER ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calender was the bill (H. R. No. 3067) for the relief of Alexander Anderson, late first lieutenant Fourteenth New York Volunteer Cavalry.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of War to direct the recognition of Alexander Anderson as a first lieutenant in the Fourteenth Regiment of New York Volunteer Cavalry, and his payment, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of the full pay and allowances of a first lieutenant of cavalry, from the 4th day of December, 1863, to the 3d day of March, 1864, deducting therefrom any sum received by him as an enlisted man of said regiment during the said period.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears, from the proofs in this case, that Lieutenant Alexander Anderson performed duty as first lieutenant Fourteenth New York Volunteer Cavalry, from December 4, 1863, to March 3, 1864, when he was mustered out of service for no cause, and without any knowledge on his part, he having faithfully performed his duties as such officer during the period named. The Adjutant-General's Office approve of the accompanying bill, and, as appears from the accompanying evidence, made the draught of the same.

In view of the facts the committee ask the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK H. E. EBENSTEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3512) for the relief of First Lieutenant Frederick H. E. Ebenstein, Twenty-first Infantry, United States Army.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to allow to Frederick H. E. Ebenstein, first lieutenant Twenty-first United States Infantry, a credit in his accounts of the sum of $400; the same being alleged to have been paid over to Major John S. Walker, then a paymaster United States Army, who was lost on board the steamer George S. Wright, off the coast of British Columbia, on or about January 27, 1873; provided that the proper proofs of loss are furnished said officers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

SAMUEL B. STAUBER AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 767) for the relief of Samuel B. Stauber and others.

The bill, which was read, provides for the release and discharge of the following persons from the following taxes assessed on the brandy distilled by them in the fall of 1868, to wit: Samuel B. Stauber, from the payment of $262.50; J. J. Petrce, from the payment of $262.50; William Shouse, from the payment of $262.50; John G. Jones, from the payment of $262.50; and John H. Stipe, from the payment of $246.67; these sums having been paid respectively by them as a special tax in the months of August and September, 1868, over and above the amount of the special tax required of distillers of brandy under orders of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated on or about October 12, 1868; and the collector of the fifth collection district of North Carolina, or other proper revenue officer, is hereby authorized and directed to credit their respective taxes assessed on the brandy distilled by them as aforesaid with said sums overpaid by them in their special tax as aforesaid.

The report was read, as follows:

The persons named in the bill for relief were engaged in the business of distilling brandy from fruits. By the act of July 20, 1868, a special license tax of $480 per annum was imposed upon distillers. In the month of August, 1868, these parties, respectively, paid this special tax to cover a period of nine months, except Stipe, whose payment was for eight months. The act also contained a provision authorizing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to exempt this class of distillers from the payment of the special tax. Owing to some ambiguity in the statute in regard to this provision, the Commissioner neglected to act upon the authority to abate or remit the tax, until the opinion of the Attorney-General was had upon the question. Meanwhile the payment of the tax was exacted from these parties by the revenue authorities. The Attorney-General, by his opinion given October 10, 1868, sustained the construction of the act which empowered the Commissioner to abate the tax, and on the 12th of October, 1868, the Commissioner made his order to that effect, in terms as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, October 12, 1868.

In accordance with the opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, rendered on the 10th instant, distillers of brandy from apples, peaches, or grapes, exclusively, are hereby, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, exempt from so much of the provisions of section 59 of the act of July 20, 1868, as imposes a special tax of $400 upon distillers producing one hundred barrels, or less, of distilled spirits, and of $4 per barrel for every barrel in excess of one hundred barrels. This exemption is additional to the exemptions heretofore specified in series 4, No. 7, and assessors and collectors will govern themselves accordingly.

Approved:

HUGH McCULLOCH,
Secretary of the Treasury.

In the administration of this order no assessments of the special tax were made on this class of distillers subsequent to the date of the order, and the taxes assessed and not paid up to that time were remitted, or if paid subsequently were re-imbursed; but where payments had been made prior to October 12, 1868, no authority was given to re-imburse. The collection of the tax of these parties was strictly legal and the Government has a full legal right to retain it, but to do so would be invidious and unjust.

Subsequently, in 1868 or 1869, these parties became liable for certain deficiency taxes, and the then collector of internal revenue for the district of their residence consented that the special-tax payments might be allowed in set-off to such deficiency taxes. This arrangement, however, the Department has since disapproved as beyond its authority, and proceedings are now pending in court at the suit of the United States to recover the full amount of the defficiency taxes. The relief asked for is that in the settlement of taxes due the United States the parties may have credit for the amounts severally paid by them for special tax as set forth.

In the opinion of the committee the relief should be granted, and they therefore recommend that the bill pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DOCTOR P. F. REUSS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3513) granting a pension to Dr. P. F. Reuss.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dr. P. F. Reuss, late surgeon of the Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, and to date such pension from the date of his discharge from the United States service.

The report was read, as follows:

From the evidence on file and submitted to the committee it appears that Dr. Reuss became an assistant surgeon of the Fifty-second Regiment New York Volunteers in 1862, and because of the very unpleasant relations existing between him and the colonel of that regiment, Colonel Paul Frank, he tendered his resignation. He received an honorable discharge, but, in order to secure such discharge, a cause was assigned, which was that he was suffering from chronic rheumatism.

The petitioner afterward became surgeon of the Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, and served as such until August 11, 1865, the close of the war.

The petitioner, in his affidavit, avers that he was perfectly healthy before he became attached to the Seventh Regiment; but while in that regiment, in the line of his duty, by reason of the forced marches, bivouacs, exposure to all kinds of weather, and the fatigues incident to such service, he contracted the following disabilities: first, chronic rheumatism; second, total deafness of the left ear and partial of the right; third, nearly total loss of sight of the right eye and partial of the left; fourth, that during an engagement in the rifle-pits before Petersburgh he received a blow in the neck from the butt-end of a rifle, which resulted in tumor adiposus. He further avers that, by reason of the above disabilities, he is unable to practice his profession.

The claim has been before the Commissioner of Pensions, who rejected it on the ground that the record of his discharge from the Fifty-second Regiment finds him suffering from chronic rheumatism, when, in his application, he claims to have been free from disease until a later period, after becoming attached to the Seventh Regiment, and that there is no satisfactory evidence showing when or where the other disabilities were incurred.

The evidence is sufficient to prove that, while the record is correct as to the reason assigned for accepting his resignation, he is also correct in his statement why such reason was given; and, further, that he is really suffering from disabilities incurred while surgeon of the Seventh Regiment. It may be proper here to add, also, that, under the circumstances, as the resignation at that time would not be accepted of any medical officer of the Army, except upon certificate of disability, the action was excusable, especially when it is remembered he became attached to another regiment, and served faithfully until the end of the war. It was the only way he could escape from the annoyances of a superior officer, who, it appears, was imbittered against him.

William Kragen, late captain in the Seventh Regiment New York Volunteers, testifies that he knew petitioner was very ill while surgeon of the regiment, and that his illness was caused by hardships and exposures endured between September, 1864, and April, 1865, and avers that, by reason of such exposures and hardships, Dr. Reuss contracted rheumatism, deafness, and loss of eyesight.

Dr. B. Weigert testifies that he has professionally treated the petitioner, ever since his discharge from the Seventh Regiment, for the various diseases complained of, and that he believes they originated in the service of the United States.

The board of examining surgeons at New York, on the 4th of February, 1874, composed of Drs. Hogan, Furguson, and Smith, certify that, after carefully examining Dr. Reuss, they find him suffering from rheumatism, affection of the eyes and of the ears, and give as their opinion that the disabilities originated in the service. This seems to establish the fact that he is suffering as he claims, and should have a pension.

The evidence of eight or ten of the former officers of the Fifty-second Regiment is to the effect that Dr. Reuss, while assistant surgeon of their regiment, was never known to them to have been sick a day or to have complained of sickness, and that "it was well known that his resignation was caused by reason of the ungentlemanly treatment he experienced at the hands of Colonel Frank," and that any record that he was sick during that period is erroneous.

Dr. Rappold, surgeon of the Fifty-second Regiment, testifies, in addition, that he discharged Dr. Reuss on the formal ground of chronic rheumatism, in accordance with orders from the medical director of the corps, on account of the troubles existing between Dr. Reuss and Colonel Frank.

Colonel H. M. Karples, the successor of Frank, testifies to about the same condition of things, and says there was no other escape for Dr. Reuss. Other evidence shows that Reuss was not affected with rheumatism while in the Fifty-second Regiment.

Drs. Krog, Boecker, and Muhr, of New York, testify that they were well acquainted with Dr. Reuss, the petitioner, before he became attached to the Seventh Regiment, and aver that, to their own knowledge, he was in sound and perfect health.

The only reasonable conclusion to be arrived at from the evidence is that, to avoid harsh treatment from Colonel Frank, the petitioner was compelled to send in his resignation as assistant surgeon of the Fifty-second Regiment New York Volunteers, and as no resignation would be accepted unless based upon a medical certificate of disability, out of sympathy for the petitioner the surgeon of the regiment and the medical chief of the corps assigned rheumatism as a cause, or at least approved of it as a reason, and allowed him to retire from the service honorably. From other evidence, there seems to be no reason to doubt that he afterward became surgeon of the Seventh New York Volunteers, and while in that regiment contracted the diseases which have disabled him.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES H. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 969) for the relief of Charles H. Johnson, late first lieutenant of the Fifteenth Michigan Infantry.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Paymaster-General of the United States Army to pay, out of any money appropriated for the payment of the Army, to Charles H. Johnson, late first lieutenant in the Fifteenth Michigan Infantry, the pay of a first lieutenant of infantry from the 1st day of September, A. D. 1864, to the 1st day of January, 1865, the date of his muster, first deducting whatever sum may have been paid said Johnson for service during that time.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears from evidence submitted to your committee that said Charles H. Johnson was enrolled and mustered as quartermaster-sergeant Fifteenth Michigan Volunteers on the 8th of December, 1862; that he was commissioned first lieutenant of said regiment, to take effect November 1, 1864, and actually entered upon the duties of that rank, by order of his regimental commander, on the 9th of November, 1864. By reason of the movement of his command on the march of Sherman's army from Atlanta to Savannah, Georgia, (during which march no mails could be received,) he did not get his commission until about the 1st of January, 1865, and was mustered as of that date. He had, however, commanded a company during this march, and but for the impossibility of receiving his commission would doubtless have been mustered as of the day of his entering upon duty as first lieutenant.

It appears, therefore, to the satisfaction of your committee, that he was duly commissioned; that there was a vacancy of his commissioned rank in a company of the legal number; that he entered upon and discharged the duties of his rank, and was not mustered by reason of an impossibility of his commission reaching him, and not through any fault or neglect of his own.

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, with an amendment striking out the "1st day of September" and inserting the "9th day of November," the date of his actual entry upon the duties of first lieutenant.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to, as follows:

Strike out in line 8 the words "1st day of September," and insert in lieu thereof "9th day of November," and in line 9 strike out the words "date of his commission."

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass as amended.

CHANCY J. POORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2229) for the relief of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of War to correct the entry made as the cause of the discharge from the service of the United States of Chancy J. Poore, late a private in Battery G, First New York Light Artillery, so as to show the cause of such discharge to have been "phlebitis," instead of "diabetes" as erroneously entered in said record.

The report was read, as follows:

That said Poore enlisted in Battery G, First New York Artillery, in November, 1861, in apparent sound and vigorous health. Soon after the battle of Antietam he suffered a painful attack in his right leg and hip, which, in time, disabled him in both legs, and after several months' confinement to the hospital he was discharged March 3, 1863, for "diabetes of five months' standing."

It is alleged that this designation of the complaint was a mistake, (probably a clerical error,) as the development of the disease was accompanied by no symptoms that attend cases of diabetes. On the contrary several surgeons, some of them examining surgeons of the Pension Bureau, testify that it was an undoubted case of phlebitis.

The petitioner has been disabled from his discharge to the present time. He suffers from varicose veins and swollen and ulcerous condition of the legs.

Your committee are satisfied that there was an error in the designation of the nature of the disease for which he was discharged, and accordingly recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation it do pass.

MARSHAL P. THATCHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3574) for the relief of Marshal P. Thatcher.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Marshal P. Thatcher, late of the Second Michigan Cavalry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $150 in full satisfaction for the loss of a horse, April 15, 1862, while in the military service of the United States.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears from affidavits filed in this case that said Thatcher, on the 15th of April, 1862, then second lieutenant of said Second Michigan Cavalry, while on a Government transport with the regiment near Hamburgh Landing, on the Tennessee River, had his horse so severely wounded in the stifle-joint by breaking through the defective deck of the transport as to render the said horse unserviceable and valueless. The horse was pronounced incurable by the veterinary surgeon of the regiment, and abandoned on disembarkation from the transport.

It is in proof that the horse was purchased by Lieutenant Thatcher, one week before, of Captain A. P. Campbell, of same regiment, at a price of $150.

The committee are satisfied that the horse was private property of Lieutenant Thatcher, and was incurably wounded while in the service, and through no fault or negligence of its owner, Lieutenant Thatcher. The excellent character of this officer is certified to by Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan, who subsequently commanded the regiment and upon whose staff Lieutenant Thatcher for a time served.

Lieutenant Thatcher swears that this claim has been for years in the hands of agents, but was rejected in the War Department, on the ground that the horse had not been mustered after becoming the property of Lieutenant Thatcher. This is explained by the affidavit of Lieutenant Thatcher that during his less than one week's ownership of the horse he had had no opportunity on the march to muster it. The committee think the horse should be paid for by the United States, the case coming within the provisions of the law at that time and now in force in relation to horses lost in service.

The committee respectfully recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

GEORGE MARTZ.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3436) granting a pension to George Martz.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George Martz, dependent father of Alfred Martz, late a private in Company A, Fifty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

Alfred Martz, the son of George Martz, enlisted in the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, on the 28th of August, 1861, and was mustered in at Harrisburgh on the 30th of October, and was assigned to duty in Company A. He served in the Fifty-fifth until November 30, 1863, and was honorably discharged to allow him to re-enlist as a veteran. In this service he died in "the line of duty" at Marysville, Virginia, on the 10th of August, 1865, of congestive chills. Ample evidence is furnished to Commissioner of Pensions showing that previous to the soldier's enlistment, and also while in the service, he contributed to his parents' support. The claim was rejected by the Commissioner "because it appears that the soldier's mother is still living and entitled to pension, could she show her dependence upon and support by the son." This is not denied, but evidence is furnished, by the affidavits of two of the residents of the township in which George Martz lives, that the mother "deserted her husband some time in the month of June, 1869, and has never returned to him, nor lived with him since;" that the said George Martz "was stricken with paralysis in 1872, and since that time has been helpless and unable to do anything for his support, and is now dependent on charity." This is confirmed by a letter from the postmaster at Hemlock, Pennsylvania, (the town in which Martz lives,) in reply to the Commissioner of Pensions, under date of May 29, 1875.

In view of these facts it is the unanimous opinion of the committee that this is a clear case where it is the province and duty of Congress to step in and direct the Commissioner of Pensions to award to the "dependent father" the pension the "dependent mother" would be entitled to under similar circumstances, and therefore report back said bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANSON K. YOUNG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2237) granting a pension to Anson K. Young.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Anson K. Young, of Grant County, Wisconsin, late a private in Company I, Forty-third Regiment of Wisconsin Volunteers, and pay him a pension from and after the passage of this act.

The report was read, as follows:

The evidence now on file shows that the soldier enlisted August 21, 1864, and was then a healthy, sound man. This is proved by Dr. George E. Robertson, his family physician, as well as by the evidence of several non-professional witnesses. He was first taken sick at or near Johnsonville, Tennessee, November 8, 1864, beginning with chills and fever, followed by chronic diarrhea and a complication of disorders which have finally resulted in paralysis of one side, totally disabling him. His sickness is shown connectedly by the several hospital records, by the evidence of his captain, George Jackson, and Surgeon George W. Eastman, from all of which it conclusively appears that the soldier was sound when he entered the service; that he contracted his diseases in the service and in the line of his duty. It is also conclusively shown by his physician and neighbors that from December, 1864, to May, 1865, he was at home on sick leave, and wholly unable to rejoin his regiment without endangering his life, and that he is now paralyzed on one side and wholly disabled from earning his living by manual labor.

The committee, believing that the evidence abundantly shows this to be a meritorious case, and that the evidence, fairly considered, ought long ago to have placed his name on the pension-rolls, report back said bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES M. BAILEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2519) granting a pension to James M. Bailey.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James M. Bailey, late private Company E, One hundred and seventh Illinois Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $8 per month from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee find the evidence in this case conflicting, especially as to the manner in which the disability was occasioned. The soldier signs his name by mark, and may not have known just what was written for him to swear to, and had necessarily to depend upon the reading of it by the person swearing him; but if either of his statements is true, he is clearly entitled to be pensioned. He states that he was ordered on duty, and in taking his gun from the stack, another gun than his own, which had been left loaded, was discharged, wounding his hand, rendering it necessary to amputate one finger and disabling another. This statement is fully corroborated by J. M. Holmes, his orderly sergeant, who was present when it happened.

John Wright, surgeon of the regiment, swears that he amputated the middle finger and dressed the wound. Griffin M. Bruffett, first lieutenant at the time of the accident and subsequently captain, swears that he was in command at the time, and that it was done by drawing his gun from the stack of arms, thereby discharging a comrade's gun which had been negligently left in the stack loaded. All these witnesses agree as to the time, place, and cause of the disability. It is true, the lieutenant swears to a different statement, that the soldier, after coming in from picket-duty, was by order drawing the load from his gun preparatory to cleaning it for immediate use against the enemy. It is true, the petitioner and his lieutenant make this conflicting statement, but their other statement is corroborated by the orderly as well as the surgeon, and if either statement is true he ought to be pensioned. If the first statement was a mistake, surely it was right to correct it, and the second or corrected statement is corroborated by the orderly and surgeon, and all agree that the disability was incurred in the service and in the line of duty.

The committee therefore report back said bill and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZA A. BLAZE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3575) granting a pension to Eliza A. Blaze, widow of Abner T. Blaze, late a private in Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza A. Blaze, widow of Abner T. Blaze, late a private in Company C, Thirteenth Indiana Cavalry Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee find that there is no dispute as to the military service and death of the soldier, but there is some conflict in the testimony as to whether the soldier was away on furlough or on detail under the command of the sergeant of the company. But the proof is very clear that he was, on or about the 7th day of April, 1864, on the train from Indianapolis to Madison, Indiana, and, on the way, fell from the cars and was killed. The evidence of Sergeant Joseph G. Marshall, of said company, shows that the soldier had a furlough, and that he procured it himself. He also swears that he had been ordered to make the trip on the train with a detail to arrest deserters, and that he had under his command for that purpose the deceased and another soldier of the same company; that, by his order, the men went out on the platforms at the several stations on the way in order to identify deserters, if any happened to be in or around the stations; and that, in the discharge of that duty, the soldier, by a jar, was precipitated between the cars and was killed.

All this is corroborated by the affidavit of Thomas Johnson, sergeant of the same company, who was on the train at the time, and who swears positively that deceased not only had a furlough to go to Madison on private business, but was at the time of his death, on detail under Sergeant Marshall, and was then actually on the platform by command of the sergeant, Marshall, for the purpose as stated by Marshall; and the main facts are further corroborated by Captain McLain, as to deceased having a furlough, and other witnesses testify to the same facts; and while there is an apparent conflict in the testimony of Sergeant Marshall, yet his veracity and general good character are supported by the testimony of four credible witnesses, his neighbors in Jefferson County, Indiana, and his testimony is corroborated and supported by Sergeant Johnson, of said company. The committee find no sufficient reason for discrediting his testimony, especially as both statements may have been true: that the deceased not only had a furlough, but was, at the same time, doing duty on the detail, as stated by several witnesses. But admitting that some of the statements may not be fully reconciled, yet the soldier was killed while in the service and in the line of his duty; and if there be a doubt as to the latter point, his widow is justly entitled to the benefit of the doubt, as the testimony further shows that he was a sober, industrious man, and a good soldier.

The committee therefore report back said petition with the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARY F. M'KEEVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3576) granting a pension to Mary F. McKeever.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. McKeever, widow of Commodore Isaac McKeever, late of the United States Navy, and pay her a pension of $50 per month from and after the passage of the act.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee find from the evidence that there is no dispute as to the naval service and death of the commodore in the service and in the line of duty, nor is there any question as to the right of his widow to pension; in fact she was admitted to the rolls at the rate of $50 per month and was paid according to that rate for about fifteen years, when, by the construction given to the acts granting pensions, passed on and since July 14, 1862, she was reduced to $30 per month. It will be admitted that she was properly admitted to pension at the rate of $50 per month, and that she was reduced to $30 per month in obedience to what was regarded as the intention of the Congress in passing section 4712 of the Revised Statutes. But it must be borne in mind that naval pensions are now paid from the naval-pension fund, which has accumulated from the energy and gallantry of our Navy, of which Commodore McKeever was a distinguished member; and following the precedents set in similar cases, the committee believe the widow should be restored to her pension of $50 per month.

They therefore report back said bill with a substitute, and recommend its passage.

Mr. FORT. The report seems to be against the claim. I object.

CATHARINE BARNES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3577) granting a pension to Catharine Barnes.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Barnes, widow of Joseph Barnes, late a private of Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

The report was read, as follows:

The testimony shows that Joseph Barnes enlisted on the 9th day of September, 1861, as a private in Company D, Seventy-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he was honorably discharged May 2, 1865. The evidence shows that said Barnes was several times wounded during said service. The testimony of the adjutant of his regiment shows that in July, 1864, the said soldier was wounded, causing the loss of his left eye, and that subsequently, while in the line of his duty, he contracted disease of his bowels from exposure in active campaign duty; that said disease continued to increase, and finally rendered him unfit for duty and caused his discharge. The testimony of the examining surgeon, who examined said Barnes previous to his death, shows that at that time said soldier was suffering from loss of left eye, impairment of sight of right eye, and disease of prostate gland. The disease finally assumed the form of a cancerous tumor of the lower bowel and enlargement of the prostate gland, from which the soldier died. His marriage with petitioner is duly established by the evidence. The testimony of Dr. Zeigler, his family physician, shows that he was a sound and healthy man at the time of his enlistment. The testimony of Drs. Carpenter and King traces fatal disease directly to the disease contracted by him in the Army; in fact, shows that it was simply the development of the disease for which he was discharged.

The committee are of the opinion that the said Joseph Barnes died of disease contracted in the military service of the United States in the line of his duty, and that his said widow, Catharine Barnes, is entitled to a pension. They therefore report the accompanying bill (H. R. No. 3577) as a substitute for said House bill No. 1103, and recommend its passage.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

ELIZA M'CONNEL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3578) granting a pension to Eliza McConnel.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eliza McConnel, widow of William McConnel, late captain of Company E, Ninety-seventh Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

EUGENE O'SULLIVAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3579) granting an increase of pension to Eugene O'Sullivan, late sergeant Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Volunteer Infantry.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Eugene O'Sullivan, late sergeant Company K, Eighteenth Missouri Infantry, at the rate of $18 per month.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

RACHEL A. CULLISON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3580) granting a pension to Rachel A. Cullison, widow of Richard W. Cullison, late a private in Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteers.

The bill was read. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitation of the pension laws, the name of Rachel A. Cullison, widow of Richard W. Cullison, late a private in Company D, Forty-fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOSEPH ODELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 838) granting a pension to Joseph Odell.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph Odell, late of Company I, Sixty-fifth Regiment of the Indiana Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report was read, as follows:

Joseph Odell enlisted in Company I, Sixty-fifth Indiana Volunteers, August 1, 1863, as a veteran volunteer, he having previously served in Company F, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteers. He was discharged May 24, 1865.

Applicant alleges disability from injuries received while acting as mounted infantry in September, 1863, by fall of horse, in breast, left shoulder, side, and hip. Claim was rejected because medical examination failed to show that disability arose from cause alleged.

The testimony of Samuel H. Mulholland, who was first sergeant of claimant's company at the time injury was received and who was afterward captain of same company, and also the testimony of Dr. J. Scudder, who was at that time assistant surgeon of claimant's regiment, entirely corroborate the statement in claimant's application for pension. Further, the certificate of the examining surgeon at the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, in July, 1874, shows that claimant was suffering from loss of hearing of left ear, dullness over upper and middle lobes of left lung, loss of power of left arm and leg, and considerable emaciation, which last they attribute to chills of long standing. Still, the medical referee does not think that any of his disabilities are traceable to the service.

Since this decision of the referee, claimant has been further examined by Dr. McDermot, surgeon of the National Home for Disabled Soldiers, at Dayton, Ohio, who certifies that claimant is suffering from hernia, deafness in both ears, loss of power amounting to partial paralysis of left shoulder and hip, a large swelling between the scapula and spine; and all, he thinks, traceable to the injury claimant sustained by the fall of the horse in September, 1863. He also suffers from a chronic bronchial cough and has much lameness in left leg. In short, he seems to be very badly used up; was a hearty man before entering the service; is now fifty-eight years old and a perfect wreck; is now and has been for two years an inmate of the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio.

The committee think his case a hard one, and feel that it can hardly err in making a favorable report and recommending the passage of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MINERVA WILLIAMS ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3581) granting a pension to Minerva Williams and her minor children.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the names of Minerva Williams, Milton F. Williams, Amanda C. Williams, Milliann B. Williams, Minerva L. Williams, and Lorinda Williams, widow and minor children of Jesse Williams, late a private in Company H, Third Regiment Tennessee Mounted Volunteers.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise and report the bills which have been favorably acted on.

CYNTHIA H. ABBOTT.

Mr. RUSK. Before the motion that the committee rise is put, I ask that by unanimous consent the committee go back to the bill (H. R. No. 3510) granting a pension to Cynthia H. Abbott.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUSK. I withdraw my objection and ask that the bill be reported favorably with the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the words "United States service" in line 7 with these words, "to date from the death of the said Augustus P. Abbott;" so that the bill will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Cynthia H. Abbott, mother of Augustus P. Abbott, formerly a seaman in the United States service.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN J. ANDERSON.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. I ask that by unanimous consent the committee go back to the bill (S. No. 628) for the relief of John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White. This is a bill that was reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims. It was objected to by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. STONE,] but he has withdrawn his objection on the floor of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill may be read.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John J. Anderson, surviving copartner of the firm of Anderson & White, the sum of $8,597.83, in full of all claims of said Anderson & White, or either of them, against the Government of the United States, for cotton belonging to said firm, impressed for and appropriated by the authority of the Government of the United States to the defenses of Nashville in August and September, 1862, and for all damages in connection therewith.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the report; but as the report is quite voluminous, I hope the gentleman from Alabama will not press the bill at this time. Let us have an opportunity to examine the report. I hope the gentleman will allow the bill to stand over until the next day that the House is in Committee on the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDWELL, of Alabama. This is a case which has received the favorable consideration of the Committee on War Claims of the Senate and also of the Committee on War Claims of the House. It is a meritorious case, and the bill should have been passed last session. It involves precisely the same principle as is involved in the case of Butler, Milber & Co., which passed the House without any objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. This is one of a class of claims that ought to be carefully considered and looked into, therefore I must object.

Mr. KNOTT. This bill was objected to once before, and I believe now it requires the objection of more than one member to defeat its passage.

Mr. STONE. I objected to it last session, believing that it was the claim of another party. I know this to be a meritorious claim and I desire to withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that to-day any member has a right to object, because it requires unanimous consent to consider any bill that has been passed upon the Private Calendar.

Mr. KNOTT. I was not aware that this bill had been passed.

Mr. LUTTRELL. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection. I think that this is a meritorious case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I cannot withdraw my objection.

The question was then taken on Mr. BLOUNT'S motion, and it was agreed to; there being on division—ayes 45, noes 29.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had had under consideration the Private Calendar, and had instructed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with and some without amendments, and with a recommendation that they do pass.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. Prior to proceeding with the business reported from the Committee of the Whole, the Chair desires to announce the appointment of committees, which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee to ascertain and report what are the privileges, powers, and duties of the House of Representatives in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States: Mr. KNOTT of Kentucky, Mr. SPARKS of Illinois, Mr. TUCKER of Virginia, Mr. MAISH of Pennsylvania, Mr. BURCHARD of Illinois, Mr. SEELYE of Massachusetts, and Mr. MONROE of Ohio.

Committee to meet with the Senate committee as to the counting of the electoral votes for President and Vice-President: Mr. PAYNE of Ohio, Mr. HUNTON of Virginia, Mr. HEWITT of New York, Mr. SPRINGER of Illinois, Mr. MCCRARY of Iowa, Mr. HOAR of Massachusetts, and Mr. WILLARD of Michigan.

ANDREW JACKSON, (COLORED,) OF PITTSBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

The first bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3292) providing for a pension to be paid to Andrew Jackson, (colored,) of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the titles of the bills will be read and the bills will be considered as passed.

Mr. STONE. I object. I ask for a vote upon each bill.

The question was put upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and being put, there were—ayes 58, noes 10.

Mr. STONE. That is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will then order tellers.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 47.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. Let us have tellers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to a question of order. Is the gentleman entitled to tellers on a question of adjournment on which no quorum is necessary?

The SPEAKER. No quorum has voted, but the House can adjourn without a quorum. The Chair is willing, however, to entertain a call for tellers upon the question that the House adjourn.

Mr. DOUGLAS. On a motion to adjourn it does not require a quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has so stated that less than a quorum of the House can adjourn, but as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] asked a division, it implied that there were probably some gentlemen who had not voted or that the Chair had not been exactly accurate in counting the vote, and therefore the Chair was willing to entertain a call for tellers.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The point I make is that a majority of those present, when there is less than a quorum present, can adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Undoubtedly the gentleman is correct in that.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The House divided, and the Chair announced that a majority had voted in favor of adjournment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct in that also; but after that announcement was made the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] asked for tellers, and the Chair was quite ready to order them.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. The House has the right to order tellers at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker also has that right.

PROPERTY IN CHARGE OF THE CLERK.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting an inventory of property belonging to the United States in his possession December 4, 1876; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Clerk of the House of Representatives, transmitting his report of the contingent expenses of the House; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIMS FOR INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with the act of 1873, sundry claims for losses incurred by Indian depredations; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CROUNSE, two weeks from January 3.

To Mr. STONE, for four days from the 26th instant.

To Mr. CABELL, for six days from the 27th instant on important business.

To Mr. BLISS, from the 23d instant to January 3.

To Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia, until January 23 on account of important business.

To Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, until January 23 on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. TERRY, for the 27th and 28th of December.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair now appoints as tellers upon the motion to adjourn Mr. ROBBINS of North Carolina and Mr. STONE.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to a question of order. I submit that no business is in order while the House is dividing on a motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair laid before the House certain matters by unanimous consent.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I never gave my consent. I moved an adjournment of the House and the House divided upon that motion, and by the count of the Chair a majority voted in favor of the adjournment. At that stage a call was made for tellers and the Chair suspended proceedings on the motion to adjourn to transact other business while the House was actually dividing.

The SPEAKER. It has been the uniform practice of the House to clear the Speaker's table of executive documents and requests for leaves of absence pending a motion to adjourn. Of course, if the gentleman insists upon his objection, although the Chair desires to state that he did not hear the objection made, the Chair will order the vacation of all these references.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I will withdraw my objection rather than have that done; but I want the question taken upon my motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Tellers have been ordered upon the motion to adjourn, and they will now take their places.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 52, noes 55.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. It does not require a quorum to decide a motion to adjourn.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I shall object to the transaction of any business until there is a quorum in attendance.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is certainly very desirable that these bills reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole shall be disposed of to-day.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will entertain a motion for a call of the House, which is the only business that can now be transacted.

Mr. STONE. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. My point of order is this: It does not require a quorum to decide the motion to adjourn, and therefore it is not necessary to have a call of the House until the want of a quorum is developed upon some question which requires a quorum to determine it.

The SPEAKER. The want of a quorum has been developed upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina. My point is that it does not require a quorum to determine the motion to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. That is true; but the vote by tellers developed the fact that there was no quorum present.

Mr. BANNING. Is a motion to adjourn now in order?

The SPEAKER. Business having intervened, the motion for a call of the House having been made since a motion to adjourn was voted upon, it is now in order again to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BANNING. I make the motion that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker desires to state that he will be absent to-morrow, and has designated the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. CLYMER, to occupy his place.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is understood that no business will be transacted to-morrow.

The motion of Mr. BANNING was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLISS: The petition of Francis L. Dalton, to be re-imbursed for expenses incurred in defending his official acts, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

By Mr. CHAPIN: The petition of Jerry Lyons, for restoration of pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. O'NEILL: The petition of James L. Reynolds, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, and A. Wilhelm, of Cornwall, same State, administrator de bonis non of the estate of R. W. Coleman, deceased, sureties of Lieutenant-Colonel S. M. Reynolds, paymaster of the United States Army, for relief, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. THORNBURGH: The memorial of William F. Frasier, for relief for injuries received during the late war, to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 23, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m., Mr. CLYMER in the chair as Speaker pro tempore. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

POLITICAL CONDITION OF THE COUNTRY.

Mr. MUTCHLER. I ask unanimous consent to have read and referred to the select committee of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] is chairman a memorial which I send to the Clerk's desk, and which is signed by prominent citizens of Philadelphia belonging to all political parties.

The memorial was read, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, members of all political parties, beg leave respectfully but earnestly to represent to your honorable bodies that in their belief the citizens of the United States are almost unanimous in the demand that the questions arising from the late presidential election shall be dealt with in a spirit predetermined to harmonize conflicting views, irrespective of the success or defeat of individual candidates.

The undersigned feel that any other course involves perils to the very structure of our Government which no thoughtful man can contemplate without dread. Even should such perils be averted, a partisan contest in Congress, resulting in a proclamation of a President without the acquiescence of both Houses, would destroy the confidence of the people in the justice of the decision adopted, would weaken their respect for the forms of law, and impair their faith in the adequacy of the Constitution to preserve substantial justice between contending parties.

The consequences of such action could not fail to be deplorable to the country and ruinous to the party which might achieve a temporary triumph. No administration placed in power in any manner that may offend the popular sense of right could conduct the affairs of the nation with credit to itself or advantage to the country. Under such an administration the opposition would enjoy an overwhelming advantage, and a short-lived party triumph would be followed by inevitable downfall. It may be emphatically asserted that the future will belong to those who now show themselves superior to the blind partisanship of the moment, and ready to promote harmony and to avert strife.

Even a prolongation of the existing uncertainty is greatly to be deprecated, entailing as it must do a paralysis of industry and a prostration of all material interests, which will work incalculable evil by destroying the demand for labor and depriving of support the poor and the unemployed.

The undersigned, therefore, confidently hope that your honorable bodies will earnestly seek some mode of reaching a decision of the pending questions that will satisfy the conscience of the country. They feel assured that when Senators and Representatives of the United States are called upon to exercise judicial powers fraught with consequences so momentous, they will bring to the discharge of their high functions a spirit of fairness and impartiality that will result in virtual unanimity of judgment. A result so reached, whatever it may be, will unquestionably command the willing acquiescence of the whole nation.

WILLIAM WELSH,
HENRY ARMITT BROWN,
JOHN WELSH,
And many others.

There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the select committee on counting the electoral vote.

Mr. MONROE. I ask to be excused from service on the committee to ascertain the powers and privileges of the House in regard to the electoral count.

There was no objection, and the request was granted.

IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce the following preamble and resolution; which were read, considered, and adopted:

Whereas the President of the United States in his annual message of December 5, 1876, states that, with his approval, the Secretary of War directed that the amount of $2,000,000, out of the $5,015,000 appropriated by the act of Congress of August 14, 1876, for river and harbor improvements, should be expended, and that no new work should be begun, and none prosecuted which were not of national importance;

And whereas the Chief of Engineers in his report of October 21, 1876, states that, in compliance with the instructions of the Secretary of War of September 4, 1876, certain allotments have been made limiting the expenditures under the above-named act to $2,000,000, and directing that no new work of improvement should be begun: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That the President of the United States be requested to communicate to this House copies of all orders made by him or under his direction, and of all orders and correspondence in the War Department, including all reports and communications from the Chief of Engineers, relating to said order and limitations on the expenditures authorized by said act of Congress; and that he be also requested to inform this House whether any orders or authority have been given by him or by the Secretary of War authorizing other expenditures under said act in addition to said $2,000,000; and if so, how much and for what particular works of improvement; and that he be requested to communicate to this House all orders and correspondence in relation thereto; and that the President be requested to state under what law or authority these orders and limitations upon said act of Congress were made.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PENSIONS.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption the following resolutions:

Resolved, That House bill No. 2283, granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of said wars, be made a special order for Thursday the 4th day of January next, after the morning hour, and from day to day thereafter until disposed of, not to interfere with the general appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. I must object to the adoption of this resolution. I think that, with the small number here and in view of the general understanding that no business should be done to-day, we should not go on and set business for the future when the whole House shall be here. For that reason I must object.

COUNTING ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. SPRINGER. The committee appointed yesterday to confer with the similar committee on the part of the Senate in reference to counting the votes for President and Vice-President have instructed me to report the following resolution and ask its adoption at this time:

Resolved, That the special committee to confer with a similar committee on the part of the Senate in reference to counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President be authorized to compile and print for the use of that committee and the House the proceedings and debates of Congress relating to the counting of the electoral votes from the first election of President and Vice-President to the present time; and that said committee shall have power to employ such clerical assistance as may be necessary in the preparation of said compilation.

There being no objection, the resolution was adopted.

REPAYMENT OF TONNAGE TAX.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (S. No. 994) to amend section 2931 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so as to allow repayment by the Secretary of the Treasury of the tonnage tax where it has been exacted in contravention of treaty provisions, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. FAULKNER. Certainly. We simply desire to have the bill considered and acted on by the committee.

There being no objection, the bill was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

APPOINTMENT IN PAY DEPARTMENT OF THE ARMY.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4275) to correct an appointment in the Pay Department of the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMPILATIONS OF QUESTIONS OF ORDER.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That there be paid out of the contingent fund of the House such sum as may be necessary to complete the compilation of questions of order decided in the House of Representatives, ordered by the House on the 15th of August last, subject to the approval of the Committee of Accounts.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, was it not the understanding yesterday that no business should be transacted in the House to-day?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All this business is proceeding by unanimous consent.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move that the House adjourn.

SETTLERS ON THE SAN JUAN AND OTHER ISLANDS.

Mr. BANNING. Before the question is put on the motion to adjourn, I desire to make a correction of the RECORD. It appears by the RECORD that House bill (H. R. No. 3878) for the relief of the settlers on San Juan, Orcas, and other islands, lately in dispute between the United States and Great Britain, was reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The bill was not in the possession of our committee, and the RECORD should have stated that Executive Document No. 308 in reference to the subject-matter of that bill was reported back and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

SERGEANT IN SIGNAL CORPS.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4276) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as a second lieutenant in the Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN JOHN A. LYNCH.

Mr. BANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4277) for the relief of Captain John A. Lynch; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. An order of that kind has already been made.

Mr. BLOUNT. There was a resolution adopted, as I understand, expressive of the desire of the House on this subject; but my idea was that notwithstanding that resolution a motion of this kind was necessary now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. In the judgment of the Chair, there is no necessity for submitting such a motion.

Mr. REAGAN. I presume that when the House adjourns to-day it will be announced that in conformity with previous resolution the adjournment is until Wednesday next.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. METCALFE, for ten days from January 2 on account of important business.

To Mr. STENGER, from the 26th to the 30th instant.

To Mr. MACKEY, for ten days from the 30th instant.

To Mr. MCCRARY, until January 3 on account of important business.

The motion of Mr. BUCKNER was then agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House, pursuant to the order heretofore made, adjourned until Wednesday next.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, December 26, 1876.

JAMES K. KELLY, from the State of Oregon, appeared in his seat to-day.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal of Friday last will be read.

COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS.

Mr. MORTON. Before the Secretary proceeds to read the minutes I should like to suggest that it is important to have another member appointed upon the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The body of the committee has gone South, as you are aware, sir, and there is not now a quorum of the subcommittee here. I ask, therefore, to have one more member added to the committee during the investigation in reference to the presidential election, a subject already referred to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to this being done before the reading of the Journal? The Chair hears no objection.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to make the appointment, and Mr. MITCHELL was appointed.

The Journal of Friday's proceedings was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 4272) authorizing the use of certain funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr., his Secretary, announced that the President had on the 18th instant approved and signed the act (S. No. 620) to remove the political disabilities of James Argyle Smith, of Mississippi, and on the 22d instant the act (S. No. 745) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to issue a register and change the name of the brig A. S. Pennell to the City of Moule.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

SIOUX NEGOTIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, accompanied by the report and journal of proceedings of the commission appointed on the 24th day of August last to obtain certain concessions from the Sioux Indians in accordance with the provisions contained in the Indian appropriation act for the current fiscal year.

I ask your special consideration of these articles of agreement, as among other advantages to be gained by them is the clear right of citizens to go into a country of which they have taken possession and from which they cannot be excluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a report (and papers which accompanied it) of the progress of the work committed to their charge, addressed to me by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved July 19, 1876, authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 22, 1876.

The message was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RULES OF THE SENATE.

Mr. FERRY, (Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.) I am directed by the Committee on Rules, to whom was recommitted on the 18th instant the report of the committee recommending a revision of the rules of the Senate, to submit the revised rules in an amended form. I ask that the report lie on the table, the printing having already been ordered.

The report was ordered to lie on the table.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at twelve o'clock and fifteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 27, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was received by his Private Secretary, Mr. U. S. GRANT, jr.

The message further announced that the President had approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles, viz:

An act (H. R. No. 1581) for the relief of John Gowers, late of Company C, One hundred and eleventh Regiment New York Volunteers;

An act (H. R. No. 1503) for the relief of Sarah F. Albertson, of Booneville, Missouri;

An act (H. R. No. 648) for the relief of Andrew J. Barrett;

An act (H. R. No. 1075) directing the Second Auditor to settle the pay and bounty account of John Ammahaie or Ammahe;

An act (H. R. No. 1592) to re-imburse Horace Glover for property unlawfully seized and sold by the United States Government;

An act (H. R. No. 4124) to provide for the expenses of certain special committees of the House of Representatives and of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the Senate; and

An act (H. R. No. 4197) to provide for the payment of electoral messengers.

DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

Mr. HUNTON. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the House portion of the joint committee to provide a government for the District of Columbia to report a bill (H. R. No. 4278) to provide a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, and to ask that it be made a special order for Thursday the 4th of January next, and from day to day till disposed of, not to interfere with the appropriation bills.

The bill was read a first and second time, and the bill and report were ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I wish to inquire if making this a special order will interfere with other special orders previously made?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is clearly of the opinion that this will not necessarily interfere with special orders previously made, but that it will come up in regular order after other special orders. When a special order is reached and another special order stands in the way, the question then becomes one of consideration, and it is within the power of a majority of the House to control the business of the House and to decide which shall take precedence. In the absence of any provision to the contrary all special orders take precedence according to the time for which they are fixed.

Mr. HUNTON. Suppose when the day designated arrives there are two special orders fixed for that day and the House should decide to take up either one or the other, what then?

The SPEAKER. In such an event the older special order will of course take precedence, but when the question of consideration is raised it is for the House to decide.

Mr. HUNTON. Then the other special order would come up the next day?

The SPEAKER. The second clause of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia is that it shall be made a special order from day to day until disposed of. If fixed for a preceding day and not reached, that would vacate any privilege it had.

Mr. HUNTON's motion was agreed to; and the bill was made a special order for Thursday the 4th of January, and from day to day until disposed of, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit a report (and papers which accompanied it) of the progress of the work committed to their charge, addressed to me by the commissioners appointed under the act of Congress approved July 19, 1876, authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 22, 1876.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the message and accompanying documents be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BUCKNER. I would suggest that the message and accompanying documents be printed and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLYMER. I have no objection to adopting the motion of the gentleman as a substitute for my own. I will withdraw my motion in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BUCKNER. Then I move that the message and accompanying documents be printed and referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

SIOUX INDIANS.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House the following message from the President.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I have the honor to transmit herewith a letter, submitted by the Secretary of the Interior, from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, accompanied by the report and journal of proceedings of the commission appointed on the 24th day of August last to obtain certain concessions from the Sioux Indians, in accordance with the provisions contained in the Indian appropriation act for the current fiscal year.

I ask your special consideration of these articles of agreement, as among other advantages to be gained by them is the clear right of citizens to go into a country of which they have taken possession and from which they cannot be excluded.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, December 22, 1876.

The message was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

EXTRADITION TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a message from the President of the United States; which was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

When Congress adjourned in August last the execution of the extradition article of the treaty of 1842 between the United States and Great Britain had been interrupted.

The United States had demanded of Her Majesty's government the surrender of certain fugitives from justice charged with crimes committed within the jurisdiction of the United States who had sought asylum and were found within the territories of Her British Majesty, and had, in due compliance with the requirements of the treaty, furnished the evidence of the criminality of the fugitives, which had been found sufficient to justify their apprehension and commitment for trial, as required by the treaty, and the fugitives were held and committed for extradition.

Her Majesty's government, however, demanded from the United States certain assurances or stipulations as a condition for the surrender of these fugitives.

As the treaty contemplated no such conditions to the performance of the obligations which each Government had assumed, the demand for stipulations on the part of this Government was repelled.

Her Majesty's government thereupon, in June last, released two of the fugitives, (Ezra D. Winslow and Charles J. Brent,) and subsequently released a third, (one William E. Gray,) and, refusing to surrender, set them at liberty.

In a message to the two Houses of Congress on the 20th day of June last, in view of the condition of facts as above referred to, I said: "The position thus taken by the British government, if adhered to, cannot but be regarded as the abrogation and annulment of the article of the treaty on extradition.

"Under these circumstances it will not, in my judgment, comport with the dignity or self-respect of this Government to make demands upon that government for the surrender of fugitive criminals, nor to entertain any requisition of that character from that government under the treaty."

Article XI of the treaty of 1842 provided that "the tenth article [that relating to extradition] should continue in force until one or the other of the parties should signify its wish to terminate it, and no longer."

In view, however, of the great importance of an extradition treaty, especially between two states as intimately connected in commercial and social relations as are the United States and Great Britain, and in the hope that Her Majesty's government might yet reach a different decision from that then attained, I abstained from recommending any action by Congress terminating the extradition article of the treaty. I have however declined to take any steps under the treaty toward extradition.

It is with great satisfaction that I am able now to announce to Congress and to the country that by the voluntary act of Her Majesty's government the obstacles which had been interposed to the execution of the extradition article of the treaty have been removed.

On the 27th of October last, Her Majesty's representative at this capital, under instructions from Lord Derby, informed this Government that Her Majesty's government would be prepared as a temporary measure, until a new extradition treaty can be concluded, to put in force all powers vested in it for the surrender of accused persons to the Government of the United States, under the treaty of 1842, without asking for any engagement as to such persons not being tried in the United States for other than the offenses for which extradition had been demanded.

I was happy to greet this announcement as the removal of the obstacles which had arrested the execution of the extradition treaty between the two countries.

In reply to the note of Her Majesty's representative, after referring to the applications heretofore made by the United States for the surrender of the fugitives referred to in the correspondence which was laid before Congress at its last session, it was stated that, on an indication of readiness to surrender these persons, an agent would be authorized to receive them, and I would be ready to respond to requisitions which may be made on the part of Her Majesty's government, under the tenth article of the treaty of 1842, which I would then regard as in full force, until such time as either government shall avail itself of the right to terminate it, provided by the eleventh article, or until a more comprehensive arrangement can be reached between the two governments in regard to the extradition of criminals, an object to which the attention of this Government would gladly be given with an earnest desire for a mutually satisfactory result.

A copy of the correspondence between Her Majesty's representative at this capital and the Secretary of State on the subject is transmitted herewith.

It is with great satisfaction that I have now to announce that Her Majesty's government, while expressing its desire not to be understood to recede from the interpretation which in its previous correspondence it has put upon the treaty, but having regard to the prospect of a new treaty and the power possessed by either party of spontaneously denouncing the old one, caused the re-arrest, on the 4th instant, of Brent, one of the fugitives who had been previously discharged, and, after waiting the requisite time within which the fugitive is entitled to appeal or to apply for his discharge, on the 21st instant surrendered him to the agent appointed on behalf of this Government to receive and to convey him to the United States.

Her Majesty's government has expressed an earnest desire to re-arrest and to deliver up Winslow and Gray, the other fugitives who had been arrested and committed on the requisition of the United States but were released because of the refusal of the United States to give the assurances and stipulations then required by Great Britain. These persons, however, are believed to have escaped from British jurisdiction; a diligent search has failed to discover them.

As the surrender of Brent, without condition or stipulation of any kind being asked, removes the obstacle which interrupted the execution of the treaty, I shall no longer abstain from making demands upon Her Majesty's government for the surrender of fugitive criminals, nor from entertaining requisitions of that character from that government under the treaty of 1842, but will again regard the treaty as operative, hoping to be able before long to conclude with Her Majesty's government a new treaty of a broader and more comprehensive nature.

U. S. GRANT.

WASHINGTON, December 23, 1876.

The message and accompanying documents were referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

ACCOUNTS OF THE STATE OF TEXAS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War concerning accounts of the State of Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and that it be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

NATIONAL ARMORY AT HARPER'S FERRY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the report of the Chief of Ordnance on the purchase of water-power and land formerly occupied as a national armory at Harper's Ferry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EXPENDITURES FOR BUILDINGS OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copies of itemized accounts of expenditures for fuel, lights, &c., for buildings of that Department up to April 30, 1876; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the proceedings of a citizens' meeting in Cincinnati, held December 20, 1876.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that this may be referred to the committee on counting the electoral vote, of which Mr. PAYNE is chairman, and that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. What is that paper?

The SPEAKER. It is an account of a public meeting held in the city of Cincinnati touching the present presidential election.

Mr. CONGER. I object to its being printed.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be referred to the committee indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objects to printing in the RECORD.

Mr. BANNING. These are the proceedings of a meeting of citizens of all parties. The proceedings of similar meetings of this character have been printed in the RECORD for the information of the House. Copies of the proceedings of this meeting were forwarded to the Speaker of the House, the President of the Senate, and the President of the United States as information only. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his objection.

Mr. GARFIELD. We cannot print the proceedings of all meetings held in the United States.

The SPEAKER. The paper will be printed in the usual form.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that it may be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. To whom is it addressed?

The SPEAKER. It is addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a memorial; is it not?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the letter accompanying the paper to be read; and gentlemen will see from the reading of it what is its nature.

The Clerk read as follows:

CINCINNATI, December 23, 1876.

DEAR SIR: As instructed, I herewith inclose copies of resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens held in this city on the 20th instant, at which Hon. Henry Stanbery was president.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN D. BANKS, Secretary.

HON. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let it all be referred.

Mr. BANNING. I think there is no objection to the paper being read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the paper being read?

Mr. CONGER. If I objected to the paper going into the RECORD, I think the Chair would understand that I would naturally object to the reading of it so that it may go there.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objects to the paper being read.

Mr. BANNING. Then I move that it be referred to the committee on counting the electoral vote, of which Mr. PAYNE is chairman.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I ask for the reading of the paper that we may know what its contents are before voting on it.

Mr. RUSK. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is the regular order.

Mr. RUSK. The regular order is that the reading of the paper has been objected to.

The SPEAKER. The printing in the RECORD is objected to.

Mr. RUSK. And the reading.

Mr. BANNING. You cannot object to its being read when a motion for its reference is pending.

The SPEAKER. The communication is before the House without objection. A motion has been made that it be referred. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] demands the reading of the document, and the Chair does not know how he can prevent the reading of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is the very point which was objected to. It is before the House, but within the limitation of that objection.

The SPEAKER. The communication is before the House by unanimous consent. The Speaker, as in duty bound, presents it, to which there is no objection. Then, being before the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] asked that it be printed in the RECORD, which the Chair ruled required unanimous consent.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was not the unanimous consent for its reference and not for its being presented to the House to be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. However, that is a question of fact, easily susceptible of proof one way or the other. The reporters will be kind enough to write out their notes of what passed.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know nothing about the resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Neither does the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I suggest to the Speaker that it is a new ruling, which will greatly change the order of business of the House. If we adopt the principle that any meeting of citizens may have its proceedings spread upon our record merely by addressing a copy of them to the Speaker—if this rule should prevail, we should encumber our records with thousands of reports of them. The rules of the House require that when the House is addressed by unofficial persons the petitions or memorials shall be referred without debate to some committee of the House, and the Speaker has the same right as any other member to present memorials and petitions. But the mere fact that a paper is addressed to the Speaker of the House does not exempt it from the operation of that general rule.

This is the first instance when an unofficial communication of this sort has been sought to be spread upon our record, and gentlemen will see the probability of our having thousands of such communications from unofficial sources sent here, spread upon our record and ordered to go into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I think that every member will see that our record will then no longer represent the proceedings of the House, but will become the general receptacle of every description of unofficial communication.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio will observe that this is a communication from citizens of the United States in the way of petition, and it is certainly not the duty of the Speaker to interfere with the sacred right of petition. Being communicated to him, it was his duty to present it to the House. Suppose he had retained the paper, what would have been the judgment of the House and the country on the detention of a paper of this character?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair quite misunderstands me. I said it was not only the right but the duty of the Speaker to present all petitions or memorials under the rules and have them referred without debate, except it be in the case of resolutions of State Legislatures, which are to be presented and spread upon the record. The Speaker has the same right to present petitions as any other member of the House and no other.

The SPEAKER. The Chair having presented the paper, it came in of course by unanimous consent. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] moved that the reading be dispensed with and that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD without reading, and then the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] rose for the first time and objected, which objection was entertained by the Chair.

Mr. GARFIELD. The House has always extended to the Chair its courtesy in the matter of the presentation of papers; for he always has a large number of official communications to present. It is very rare indeed, though I noticed one example the other day from a gentleman on the other side of the House, that objection is made to the request of the Chair to present papers. When this courtesy was extended to the Chair this morning there was no indication that he would present anything but official communications. Now that this paper has been presented, without any intimation that it was an unofficial communication, I do not think the Chair will be willing to put us in the position where it will be necessary for us to abate any of the usual courtesy extended to him. I trust the Chair will only exercise the same right that other members exercise in the presentation of petitions.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to lull the gentleman from Ohio into any feeling of security that would lead him not to watch the proceedings. The Chair will read the rule upon the subject.

Where papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee, every member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them; and this applies to the reading of papers on a motion to refer them.

Mr. GARFIELD. Would the Chair apply that rule to petitions such as are daily presented under the rules and referred to committees? Every morning the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD shows from one to a hundred petitions that have been presented by members of the House and referred to their appropriate committees. I do not think that anybody will hold that any member has the right to call for the reading of those petitions.

The SPEAKER. They are presented under a rule of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. This is presented in open House.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are all presented in open House——

The SPEAKER. No; they are presented at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. GARFIELD. But is the Chair governed by any other rule in regard to the presentation of petitions than that which applies to each member of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is bound, as he said before, to present to the House everything that comes to him in his official position.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly; under the same rule that applies to all the members of the House.

The SPEAKER. No, not under any rule——

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I ask, with all respect to the Chair, how he has any right to present this petition?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent, which the Chair obtained.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let me recall the facts. The Speaker had a bundle of official documents on his desk, and he asked unanimous consent to lay them before the House. There was a message from the President, a communication from the Secretary of War, another from the Secretary of the Treasury, and several others. While he was delivering his budget I presume that no member of the House understood that this paper was in the nature of a simple petition until after the call for its reading was made. I trust, therefore, that the Chair, in view of this apparent misunderstanding, will again put the question to the House in reference to the petition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is entirely ready to submit the question to the House.

Mr. REAGAN. The rule in relation to printing—I do not know how much the distinction amounts to—but the rule in relation to printing and reference may be found on page 160 of the Manual, and is as follows:

Members having petitions and memorials to present may hand them to the Clerk, indorsing the same with their names and the reference or disposition to be made thereof.

But this is a communication that does not come to a member of the House in the ordinary way, but it comes to the Speaker, and it devolves upon him to dispose of it. I understand that the practice has uniformly been for the Speaker to lay such communications before the House and a motion is made to refer them. Now it seems to me that under the rule, upon that motion to refer, any member has a right to demand the reading of the paper.

The SPEAKER. That would seem to be the meaning of the rule. The Chair would like to read further from the rules:

When the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

The Chair is entirely ready to submit the question to the House.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I think there is a misapprehension on the part of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] in regard to the question now before the House. This paper is now before the House by unanimous consent. There was no objection made to its reference, but there was objection made to its being read or printed. Now when a paper is before the House for the purpose of reference, I as a member, as I claim, have the right to demand that the paper be read before I shall be called upon to vote upon the question of reference. It was under the rule to be found on page 194 that I demanded the reading of this paper. If the simple question were as to the reading of a paper unconnected with a motion to refer, then I think that the rule to be found on page 141 would apply, and it would be the duty of the Chair to submit the question to the House. But under the rule to be found on page 194, where papers are to be referred to a committee, the doctrine is that the paper shall be read if demanded by any member before he can be called upon to vote upon the question of reference. That is the point which I have made, the consent of the House for the presentation of the papers having been obtained.

Mr. HOSKINS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to page 159 of Barclay's Digest in relation to the rule for the presentation of petitions:

There is now no other mode of presenting petitions prescribed by the rules, the old rule for presentation in the House having been rescinded December 12, 1853; and when a member desires to have a petition printed, it can only be done by unanimous consent, by a suspension of the rules, or by submitting a resolution to that effect when resolutions are in order.

Under this rule, Mr. Speaker, there is no question that an objection by any member to the printing of a petition is sufficient to prevent its being printed. Now the point to be determined in this case is whether the reading of this petition at length does not carry it upon the Journal and into the RECORD. There is no doubt in my mind that when this petition is before the House it is perfectly proper to have it read for the information of the House; but if it is read for the purpose of having it spread upon the Journal or the RECORD, then, according to this rule, if there is one objection, that cannot be done.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HOSKINS] will allow the Chair to suggest that the very fact of the paper being read makes it a part of the proceedings, and therefore it goes into the RECORD.

Mr. HOSKINS. But one objection to its being printed is sufficient. So far as regards its presentation and reference, of course there is no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. The effort was to have the paper printed in the RECORD without consuming time in reading it.

Mr. HOSKINS. But, under the rule, if there is one objection the paper cannot be printed. It must be done, if at all, by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. That relates to petitions presented at the desk.

Mr. HOSKINS. Not at all. The old rule for the presentation of petitions in the House has been rescinded; and a petition, whether it comes through the Speaker or any other member, must be presented under the rule which says that, when a member desires to have a petition printed, it can only be done by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair still thinks that that relates to petitions and memorials, which may be handed in to the Clerk.

Mr. HOSKINS. They may be handed to the Clerk or they may be handed to the Speaker; and whether they pass from the Speaker or through the box provided at the Clerk's desk, they cannot be printed under the rule if objection is made; and if the object of the reading is for the purpose of having them printed, then of course the rule applies.

The SPEAKER. That rule clearly relates exclusively to petitions and memorials presented by members at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. REAGAN. I apprehend that the practice of the House enters into the judgment of the Speaker in the disposition of this question; and probably there will not be found in the history of our proceedings any case in which the Speaker has had a petition or memorial referred in the same manner as the reference would be made by a member upon the floor. I apprehend that, according to the universal practice, such papers when presented by the Speaker are laid before the House in open session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair during his service as a member here has never known any other course to be pursued, where the Speaker has presented a paper for reference and there was no objection to it, than that it should be considered for reference. However, the Chair does not wish to arrogate to himself any special privilege in this regard.

Mr. GARFIELD. Nobody has objected to the reference of this paper. That is not the objection at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not desire to pursue any course which may present even the semblance of his having brought a paper of this sort into the House for any other than a public purpose; because in fact the Chair has never read these resolutions. The Speaker will therefore submit to the House the question upon the reading of the paper.

Mr. HOSKINS. Will the Chair allow me to make one inquiry? Can the Chair in his individual right as a member of this House present a petition in any other way than any other member of the House? For instance, if I should have a petition and should desire the Speaker to present it for me, would not he have merely the same right with regard to its presentation that I would have myself?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that petitions have constantly been presented from chambers of commerce and other private associations upon public questions; and they have almost always been presented by a member rising in his place and asking unanimous consent to have the petition read and printed. The Chair will, however, submit to the House the question as to the reading of this paper.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one word in answer to what my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] has said against the printing of this communication in the RECORD. He said it would be establishing a bad rule to let it be done. I am surprised at such objection coming from him. A short time ago a committee of citizens proceeded to New Orleans to view the counting of the election returns. There was no authority for their going; there was no law for it. They came back and reported to the President, all of them belonging to one party, the republican party, and that report was sent to this House and printed in the RECORD. Now a convention of citizens meets in Ohio, in this dangerous time in the history of our country, and they present their views to Congress through the Speaker of this House. Then one of the gentlemen who presented his views through the President rises in his place and objects. The example was set by him and other citizens acting without authority of law, refusing to let men of the other party confer with them when they went to New Orleans to see the counting of the vote of that State and made their report which was presented to this House.

Mr. CONGER. I object to further debate.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, let him go on.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule does the gentleman from Michigan object to further debate?

Mr. CONGER. I thought the Chair himself said debate was not in order.

The SPEAKER. Point to the rule under which debate is not allowed on this question.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair has already said that the proposition is to submit the question to the House; and if it is not before the House it is not debatable.

The SPEAKER. This paper is before the House and debate is in order on the motion to refer. The Chair would like the gentleman to point out any rule which prohibits debate on the motion to refer.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair has already decided and had commenced to submit that question to the House. It is not debatable whether the Chair will submit a question to the House or not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has heard gentlemen on various points by unanimous consent. He thinks that this paper is before the House by unanimous consent, and the pending question is on the motion to refer.

Mr. CONGER. I am of the opinion that it is not debatable.

Mr. BANNING. If I am entitled to the floor I will proceed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to the floor and will proceed.

Mr. BANNING. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand proceedings of this House at the very time that the message came here from the President of the United States presenting the report of these citizens. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] being one of them who went to New Orleans to be present at the counting of the election returns of Louisiana, I send the proceedings as reported in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD to the Clerk, and ask him to read them. It will be seen that at that very time the Speaker of this House made the exact ruling which he makes now, with the difference that he made it then for the gentlemen who now object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CONGER. I now renew my call for the reading of the documents accompanying the President's message.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to make a statement to the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. There was so much confusion while the message from the President was being read that I would like the Chair to state distinctly how the proposition stands before the House at this moment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so when the House comes to order. The Chair desires to state that the message proper was read, and a motion was made by the gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] to refer it to a select committee; whereupon the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] demanded the reading of the accompanying papers. The attention of the Chair has been directed to Rule 141, which is as follows:

"141. When the reading of a paper is called for and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House."

That rule was adopted on the 13th of November, 1794, and the note to it states that—

"As originally adopted, this rule contained, after the word 'for,' the words 'which had before been read to the House.' They were stricken out on the 14th December, 1795."

The Chair desires to read further on page 193 of the Manual:

"Where papers are laid before the House or referred to a committee, every member has a right to have them once read at the table before he can be compelled to vote on them—Manual, page 97—and this applies to the reading of papers on a motion to refer them.—Journal, 1, 34, page 1146. And so in regard to any proposition submitted for a vote of the House; but it being a right derived from the rules, he may at any time, (when a motion to suspend the rules is in order) be deprived of it by a suspension of the rules."

A motion to suspend the rules is not now in order.

The Chair will read further:

"The rule above recited is not construed to apply to the single reading of a paper or proposition upon which the House may be called upon to give a vote, or to the several regular readings of a bill, but to cases where a paper has been once read or a bill has received its regular reading and another is called for, and also where a member desires the reading of a paper having relation to the subject before the House."

Mr. HURLBUT. The Chair omitted one paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The Chair had previously read that rule. The Chair decides that this case comes within the latitude of that rule. And it is a necessary step toward correct legislation that all such papers shall be read; and so deciding, the paper will now be read.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to say anything upon this matter at this time; but I want to say in all earnestness to that side of the House that ever since we have met I think and I believe the country thinks they have placed themselves in a very strange position. They came here with a report sent through the President of an unauthorized investigation; and when this House attempted to send a committee to investigate the same election and get at all the facts lawfully, every one of the gentlemen upon the other side, with three honorable exceptions, voted against the resolution to investigate every one of them, and then, after the resolution had passed by a majority of one, called the attention of the House and the country to the fact that it had not been fairly passed, thus showing that they were afraid of the investigation and afraid to let the people know all that had been done in the three Southern States of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida.

And next, Mr. Speaker, we have these gentlemen who made their report sustaining the character of the returning board in Louisiana; and when we attempt in this House to get what General Sheridan said of the president of that board and what the Secretary of War, Mr. Stanton, said when he removed him from being governor of Louisiana, because, as General Sheridan said in his letter to Mr. Stanton, he was a dishonest man and a trickster, that report being approved by the then General of the Army, the present President of the United States, who laid this report before us, of the gentlemen who sustained this man Wells—when we attempt to get that record from the War Department we have every obstacle thrown in our way. When I went myself to get it—I had been in the habit of going to the Department and was always before given copies of the records—but when I asked for this record the Adjutant-General told me I could not get it without the order of the Secretary of War. I went to the Secretary of War. He was not in. I asked the Assistant Secretary. He said "this is a public document; go down and tell the Adjutant-General to give it to you." I went back to the Adjutant-General. The Adjutant-General told me that he had seen the Secretary of War and I could not have it without his order.

I then went back to the Secretary of War and he told me that I could not have that record unless I got the order of the President of the United States. I then came to this House and introduced a resolution to have the Secretary of War produce that report. This resolution required a two-thirds vote. And these gentlemen who now object, who have investigated without authority and reported without proof as the country believes, objected, and the country is not yet informed. I tried again to bring up the resolution and that side voted solid against it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentlemen upon that side of the House will permit us to get all the information that we can, and receive and hear the instructions of the people of the country, especially when they come from such men as sent this paper; such men as Henry Stanbery, lately a member of the Cabinet, Rufus King, Durbin Ward, and Judge Stallo, men, all of them, who did battle against slavery and for the right with the party represented by gentlemen on the other side of the House in the better days when the party fought for principle and right, and not to defeat the people in their right to elect a President as now.

Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing the people of this country love more than another, more than life, more than property, it is their liberty that is vouchsafed to them in an honest ballot-box. [Applause.] And let me tell gentlemen here that they will have it. The Army may, part of it, be ordered here with eighty rounds of ammunition. The Navy may be called upon. The eighty thousand office-holders may be asked to come to the rescue——

A MEMBER. They will not come.

Mr. BANNING. But let me tell you that an honest people will put them all down. [Applause on the floor and from the galleries.]

The SPEAKER rapped to order.

Mr. BANNING. I hope now that gentlemen upon that side of the House may stand for the right as in 1861; the men of the North without respect to party stood for the right, to put down the rebellion. I hope now that, in place of sustaining the partisan report of an unauthorized committee, you will go with us and help us to investigate and find out the condition of affairs in Louisiana, in Florida, and in South Carolina. And let me say that, when you attempt to say to the people, without better evidence than you have yet produced, that you will overturn the majority of more than eight thousand for the Tilden electors in Louisiana, you are attempting that which you never can do. [Applause on the floor and from the galleries.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state to persons in the gallery that they must cease applause; and unless that instruction is obeyed, the Chair will cause the galleries to be cleared.

Mr. BANNING. But, Mr. Speaker, the people will not permit that to be done. [Great laughter.] I do not mean that they will not permit the galleries to be cleared. [Laughter.] I mean they will not permit the ballot-boxes to be changed, nor will they permit an illegal and dishonest returning board to defeat their honest election.

I have now said, Mr. Speaker, all, and more than I intended to say; and I do hope that the gentlemen whose report has been received and printed in the RECORD will now permit the other side, the people, to be heard.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us rejoice, Mr. Speaker, that at last we have in our midst a gentleman who is authorized to speak for the whole American people; who is able to tell us just what the people want, just what the people believe, and just what the great American people are going to do. I have been, in my feeble way, reading the public newspapers, getting what information I could by private correspondence, and trying in that way to get at a knowledge of public opinion on public questions. And I had hoped that the whole Congress, aided by the whole press, might by and by get a fair reflex of the public mind; but I had never indulged the dream that on this bright morning, between the two holidays, we should find a gentleman who has already learned all about it; who knows just how the people feel; knows exactly what the facts were in the late elections in Louisiana, South Carolina, Florida, and Oregon too; knows precisely the contents of all the sealed packages of returns now in possession of the President of the Senate; can tell us just how the papers will read when they shall be opened, and has learned exactly how much military force the people are going to raise to carry out his views of the result. To learn all this by listening to a fifteen or twenty minute speech is a crowning mercy, for which every citizen ought to be profoundly grateful!

Among other things my colleague knows that the people are going to have honest ballot-boxes, and therefore, if I understood him, they are not going to let any ballot-boxes be purged before the votes are counted.

Mr. BANNING. Will the gentleman understand me? I say that they are not going to let any ballot-boxes be perjured.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well. Let it stand so. We know all good things will come from a quarter so replete with knowledge.

Now I want to call the attention of my colleague to the fact that in the State of Ohio there are about four thousand ballot-boxes, and on the 7th of November last there sat behind those ballot-boxes about four thousand returning boards of three members each. And after applying the law ministerially and judicially during the day, when the hour of six o'clock came the ballot-boxes were opened and each of those returning boards proceeded to do this. Having before them a list of all the voters who had voted on that day they proceed to count the ballots. When they drew out a ballot and found that there were two ballots folded together, though it may be that some honest citizen had by mistake picked up two ballots and put them in the box, still the board threw out both ballots and refused to count either of them, whether they were democratic or republican. Again, the board finds that some man has pasted a printed name over the name of one of the electors, and they refuse to count that name. They find the name of an elector erased and in its place the name of another person is written; but one of his initials is left out. They refuse to count the name of that man though the probable intention of the voter is thus defeated. They go on thus purging the ballot-box; and, when they get to the bottom, if they find that there were one hundred and twenty ballots, and that there were only one hundred names on the poll-list this returning board proceeds to put all the ballots back into the box, shake them up, and draw from the mass until they have drawn out twenty ballots; and the twenty thus drawn out they do not count at all, but count only the ballots which remain. It may be that all the fraudulent ballots were thrown by one party and that every one thrown out was a ballot of the other party. But the board follows the law; they purge the ballot-box; they certify to the result, and send it to Columbus there to be added up with the other purged returns. In other words, in the State of Ohio there are four thousand returning boards that proceed judicially as well as ministerially, under the laws of the State, to throw out ballots, to purge the polls, and they are to certify the result.

Now, does my colleague propose to say that this House has the right, by means of its committees, to go behind every returning board in Ohio, and in all the other States, and make a recount of the 7,000,000 ballots cast on the 7th of November, and thus determine who was elected President? It happens that in the State of Louisiana they have there, in what some gentlemen on the opposite side would call their sovereign capacity, made another kind of law. The men who sit behind the ballot-boxes in that State are not permitted to throw out ballots at all. All they can do when the polls are closed is to count the votes in the boxes and record what they find, however false, however fraudulent the ballot may have been. The commissioners who attend to the ballot-boxes in Louisiana must report just what they find. They do not purge the polls at all, as the four thousand returning boards in Ohio do. But when they have counted and recorded the ballots, they replace them in the boxes, lock and seal the boxes, and send the returns to the capital of the State; and the State returning board is authorized and required, by the laws of Louisiana, to examine and compile the returns. They alone are authorized and required by law to purge the polls and declare the result.

This is precisely the difference between the returning board of that State and the returning boards of Ohio. Does the gentleman mean to tell us that, because unpurged polls sent to the city of New Orleans showed a given set of figures, those figures are the lawful result of the election? Does he hold that every vote found in the ballot-boxes, whether false or fraudulent, should be counted and declared lawful because it was found in the box? If his speech means anything it means that. How desperate must be the cause that can call such a doctrine to its support!

I say to the gentleman, after a careful study of the testimony in this case, that there were numbers of ballot-boxes in Louisiana from which, if he had drawn out the ballots to count and declare them, his hand would be leprous with fraud and red with blood.

If the gentleman desires to count in a President by means such as his speech implies, what becomes of his cry for an honest ballot-box?

Mr. SPENCER. I would like to ask the gentleman——

Mr. GARFIELD. It is rather early in the day——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio yield to the gentleman from Louisiana?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not now. It is rather early in the day for the gentleman to set up the claim of ecstatic virtue, which, as he interprets it, means only that there shall be no virtue at all in our elections. It is for the sake of an honest ballot that the laws of the several States require the purgation of the polls before a result shall be declared. And when the returns of an election in a State have been made in accordance with its laws, will any law-abiding Representative seek to break down all the sanctions of State law and overturn the result? With what face can the Representative who seeks to do that appeal to his members not to be partisans, but statesmen?

I very, very deeply regretted that my colleague, [Mr. BANNING,] in a time like this, when the country needs all its wisdom, all its equipoise, all its fairness, all its calmness, saw fit to say that the people would defy the authorities of the United States in a certain contingency; to say that the Army might come here, that the Navy might come here with fixed ammunition, that the trappings of war might be rattled about the Capitol, but the people, in whose name he assumes to speak, would rise and overturn the lawful authorities.

I do not hold a commission to speak for all the people of the United States; but I venture the opinion that the man who is most likely to receive the rebuke of all good citizens of both political parties, just now, is the man who suggests violence as a mode of settling any national question. And it is of the very essence of violence for a representative to appeal to the people to resist the plain processes of law. In an hour like this, the man who shakes a brand of fire among the trains that lead to the magazine of public passion is the man that ought to be most severely censured by the fair-minded and just people of the United States.

I ask all members of the House who love the peace and honor of the nation to resist every effort of this sort. I have an abiding faith in the good sense and justice of the American people. It has led them safely through much greater perils than any which now surround us, and it will find an honorable and safe way through these.

All this debate has sprung from a very little matter. My colleague, with a strange obliviousness to plain matters of difference, thinks he discovers in the course of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] and myself some inconsistency between the position we have taken this morning and the position taken by us in regard to a certain message from the President of the United States. Let him listen to the plain language of the rule of this House. I read it:

All messages from the President are in writing, and are sent to the House by his Private Secretary, or such other person as he may delegate, and, as in the case of messages from the Senate, are announced at the door by the Doorkeeper and handed to the Speaker, who places them upon his table, to be taken up whenever the House, under the fifty-fourth rule, shall go to the business thereon. In the case of the annual message, however, it is usually taken up, by unanimous consent, as soon as received. Whenever taken up, messages from the President are always read in extenso, the House never, as in the case of other communications, dispensing with the reading of the same.

Now the President sent a message here at an early day of the session. It was his plain duty to send to the Congress whatever information was in his possession to inform Congress concerning the state of the Union. This is the language of the Constitution:

The President shall, from time to time, give to the Congress information of the state of the Union, and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient.

If the President hears that the cholera or the plague is approaching our shores on some vessel, even if his information be only a rumor, it may be his duty to send a message to Congress laying that information before them. He may send us even the faintest rumor that in his judgment it is important for Congress to know.

In plain pursuance of his constitutional duty the President sent a message to Congress communicating the alleged facts concerning the count of the electoral vote of Louisiana. It was here in this House that a gentleman on the other side, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. WOOD,] arose in his place and denounced the message; said it ought to be returned as an improper communication; and by order of the majority of the House it was laid upon the table—a thing I have never before known, a message of the President thus treated. Under the rule the Speaker could have done nothing else than to lay that message before the House, and under the rule it was the duty of the House to have it printed, and it was properly so decided.

But the case now before us is that of an ordinary memorial. I want it distinctly understood that no man on this side of the House objects at all to the Speaker's presenting it and having it referred; it ought to be presented and it ought to be referred. The only point made on this side of the House is whether the Speaker has any other or higher privilege in the presentation of petitions than every other member of the House. I hold that if the Speaker can lay any petition before the House and demand that it be printed then I can lay any petition before the House and demand its printing, and every other member of the House can do the same.

There is one plain rule that regulates the presentation of petitions and memorials, with only here and there an exception like this; when a Legislature memorializes Congress, the memorial is read to the House under its rules. But petitions and memorials from private citizens are provided for under the general rule.

Now if the House chooses to change the rule, if we wish to say that all petitions from all the public meetings that may be held by all organizations throughout the country shall be spread upon our record on the demand of any member, the House should consider the practical result.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct the gentleman from Ohio. The Chair has made no such decision.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair has not, I am glad. I understood the Chair to decide that as Speaker he was bound to lay petitions before the House in a different manner from what I as a member am bound to lay a petition before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has simply held that when a communication, respectful in its character, comes to him in an official form from a portion of the people it is his duty to present it to the House. In obedience to that belief, he has presented this paper; and if the gentleman from Ohio will allow, the Chair will have read the record as taken down by the official reporters, which sustains the Chair in the position that the paper came before the House by unanimous consent, that no objection was made to its reception; and being before the House the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] was recognized on the question of reference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER laid before the House the proceedings of a citizens' meeting in Cincinnati, held December 20, 1876.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that this may be referred to the committee on counting the electoral vote, of which Mr. PAYNE is chairman, and that it be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. What is that paper?

The SPEAKER. It is an account of a public meeting held in the city of Cincinnati touching the present presidential election.

Mr. CONGER. I object to it being printed.

The SPEAKER. The communication will be referred to the committee indicated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objects to printing in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. My objection was to printing in the RECORD. I wish that corection to be made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood.

Mr. GARFIELD. As I said in some earlier remarks this morning, I have no doubt that the Speaker is correct in saying that unanimous consent was given for the presentation of the papers upon his table; but what I insist upon is that when this paper has been presented it must take the course prescribed by the rule. If the Speaker intended to present it for the action of the House and unanimous consent was granted for that purpose, then, of course, the paper is before the House.

The SPEAKER. Under what rule could the Speaker present this paper without being compelled to ask the action of the House upon it as to its proper reference?

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will permit me to remark, he will see, by referring to any volume of the RECORD or Globe for years past, that the list of petitions and memorials printed at the close of our daily proceedings embraces often dozens of petitions presented by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman certainly does not wish to confuse this question. It is a very simple one.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir; but I say that, by consulting the volumes of the RECORD and the Globe, there will be found, along with the other petitions at the end of our daily proceedings, petitions presented by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Ohio, who surely will agree with him, that when a paper comes before the House by unanimous consent it is then under the control of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly I admit that.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair has no authority to control such a question; if he had it would be a very arbitrary power to be exercised by a single individual.

Mr. GARFIELD. I admit that freely; and I say in this connection that I presume there was not a gentleman on this floor who did not suppose the Chair was presenting the ordinary executive communications from the package before him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair reserved this paper until the end. The executive communications were all referred before this was laid before the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Chair was presenting by unanimous consent the usual executive communications; and if any gentleman on the floor noticed that this was a different paper from the others which the Chair had presented, I certainly did not, until a demand was made on the other side to have it printed in the RECORD. That of course showed that the paper was of a different character from the others.

I have said all that I wish to say on this subject, except this: as a mere matter of good order in the House, I shall regret if it be decided that all that citizens need in order to have their political speeches and resolutions or any proceedings of a partisan character on either side spread upon the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is to address a communication to the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. All that is needed to prevent that is the watchfulness of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GARFIELD. Of course if the Speaker desires us to expect that in the midst of a bundle of executive communications there will be a private document of a political character—that we shall not be advertised in advance that it is not an executive communication, but one for which the Speaker asks unanimous consent—if the Speaker desires to take that attitude I shall regret it, but we must conform our action to his decision.

The SPEAKER. The title of this paper which was read is "proceedings of a citizens' meeting in Cincinnati, held December 20, 1876." The Chair withheld nothing from the knowledge of members of the House; and he is at a loss to see how any gentleman could justify for a moment the retention of that paper by the Chair for any reason or purpose whatever.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will permit me, no one has proposed its retention.

The SPEAKER. Then what was the Chair to do with it?

Mr. GARFIELD. Refer it.

The SPEAKER. There were two ways open to the Chair: one to retain the paper and the other to present it. The gentleman has stated that the Chair would not be justified in retaining it, and therefore it necessarily followed that the Chair would be justified in presenting it.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the Chair will permit me further, I will state that there is a box provided at the Clerk's desk where petitions are filed under the rule. If the Speaker holds that all petitions presented by him are in an exceptional situation, it is important that we know it and govern ourselves accordingly.

The SPEAKER. This came to the House addressed to the Speaker in his official capacity, and did not come to him as a Representative of the State of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, my colleague regrets that I should take occasion to make so excited a speech at this time.

We of this side have sat quietly in our places and had cause to regret that the conduct of my colleague and those who act with him should have been such during this session as to make it necessary for us to take the action we have.

He says the country is in a dangerous condition, and that we ought to proceed carefully and cautiously. I agree with him, and surely this side of the House has done that; and let me tell the other side we will continue to do it. We will go forward quietly, doing our duty; and in so doing will not be deterred by anything or any power.

I thought, Mr. Speaker, the time had come for us to say something. When my colleague made the report which was presented to the House, the Speaker made the same decision then that he has made this morning. That report came here signed by my colleague [Mr. GARFIELD] and others; and I ask the Clerk to read that part of the report which he signed which I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows:

The great national importance of the duties to be performed by the board invested each member with much interest, and as many reports had been circulated concerning them, we were led to make some inquiry as to their individual history. Two of them, Hon. James Madison Wells, president of the board, and General Thomas C. Anderson, next senior member, are southern-born, and of old and highly respectable families. The father of the former was Hon. Levi Wells, of the parish of Rapides, who in 1812 represented it in the convention called to frame the constitution of the State of Louisiana. The son received a liberal education and was early engaged in the care of the planting and other interests of his father. He was a Union man from the time the war broke out, and, although he suffered greatly by it in the loss of property, he never faltered in his devotion to the Union cause. Under the Banks reconstruction scheme he was chosen lieutenant-governor on the ticket with Hon. Michael Hahn, who was elected governor, and upon the election of the latter to the Senate, a year after, Mr. Wells became governor of the State, to which office he was almost unanimously re-elected under the reconstruction plan of President Johnson. His experience in public life has been great and varied, and his capacity to discharge the duties assumed cannot be questioned.

Mr. BANNING. Now, Mr. Speaker, a committee of this House, composed of a majority of republicans, had more than two years ago reported that the State of Louisiana was a democratic State. They reported that the officers elected by this returning board were not the officers elected by the people of that State. They turned out legislators who had been elected by this returning board and maintained in their places only by the Army. A year after this committee of this House reported that this returning board was illegal a distinguished lawyer on the other side had pronounced the board to be both illegal and unconstitutional. This returning board, composed entirely of republicans, counted the vote of Louisiana again this last fall. A committee was appointed by the President to go and be present at the count. All of them were republicans, and the returning board being all republicans, although the law required it should be composed of men of both parties, this committee, I say, was sent there by the President to view the counting of the vote. While there they found other gentlemen—Hon. Lyman Trumbull, General Palmer, George W. Julian, and other men of like high character who had stood for the right in its darkest days—and these gentlemen said to this committee appointed by the President, "Let us confer together and make a report." And how were they answered? My colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and his committee said no. Then the report of the committee on the part of the President comes to this House and was printed in the RECORD. When we attempt to find out whether that report is true or not the other side vote solid against the inquiry. Even when we come here and undertake to find out if what has been stated by this committee is correct or not, is true or not, when we seek to get to the record upon the subject, they object.

By good fortune I have here what I then tried to get under a resolution which was objected to on the other side, and I ask that gentlemen will listen to the reading of what I send up to the Clerk's desk. It is the order of General Sheridan in 1867; also his letter to the Secretary of War in reference to Governor J. Madison Wells, who was the president of the Louisiana returning board. I want the order and letter printed in the RECORD, so that the country may know the opinion of General Sheridan of the president of that returning board which has been so highly indorsed by the committee of which my colleague was a member. When the people of the country read this record they will not be surprised at the astonishment which I have expressed that any committee of gentlemen should indorse the chairman of the returning board who is here referred to.

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, June 3, 1867.

His excellency the governor of Louisiana, J. Madison Wells, having made himself an impediment to the faithful execution of the act of Congress of March 2, 1867, by directly impeding the general in command in the faithful execution of the law, is hereby removed from the office of governor of Louisiana, and Mr. Thomas H. Durant appointed thereto. Mr. Durant will be obeyed and respected accordingly.

By command of Major-General P. H. Sheridan.

GEORGE L. HARTSUFF,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Wells refused to obey this order; whereupon General Sheridan issued the following:

HEADQUARTERS FIFTH MILITARY DISTRICT,
New Orleans, La., June 7, 1867.

SIR: Governor Flanders has just informed me that he has made an official demand on you for the records of the office you have heretofore held as the governor of Louisiana, and that you have declined to turn them over to him, disputing the right to remove from office by me, which right you have acknowledged and urged on me up to the time of your own removal.

I therefore send Brevet Brigadier-General James W. Forsyth, of my staff, to notify you that he is sent by me to eject you from the governor's room forcibly, unless you consider this notification equivalent to ejection.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Major-General U. S. A., Commanding Fifth Military District.

Mr. J. MADISON WELLS, ex-governor of Louisiana, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Wells's conduct as governor had been notoriously corrupt. He had illegally appointed a board of levee commissioners, who were authorized to hold over by an act of the Legislature, and a conflict of authority ensued, and in the mean time the Mississippi overflowed and great damage was done to property. There was an appropriation of $4,000,000 made by the Legislature for repairs of the levees, and Wells wanted to finger some of this money. General Sheridan, in a letter to Secretary Stanton, dated June 3, 1867, explaining the action in removing Wells, said:

"After the adjournment of the Legislature the governor of the State appointed a board of his own in violation of this act, and made the acknowledgment in person that his object was to disburse the money in the interest of his own party by securing for it the vote of the employés at the time of the election. The board continued in office, but the Legislature refused to turn over to the governor's board, and each side appealed to me to sustain it, which I would not do. The question must then have gone to the courts, which, according to the governor's judgment when he was appealing to me to be sustained, would require one year for decision. Meantime the State was overflowed. The levee boards were tied up by political chicanery, and nothing was done to relieve the poor people, now fed by the charity of the Government and charitable associations of the North. I say now, unequivocally, that Governor Wells is a political trickster and a dishonest man. I have seen him myself, when I first came to this command, turn out all of the Union men who had supported the Government, and put in their stead rebel soldiers, some of whom had not yet dropped their gray uniform. I have seen him again, during the July riot of 1866, skulk away where I could not find him to give him a guard, instead of coming out as a manly representative of the State and joining those who were preserving the peace. I have watched him since, and his conduct has been as sinuous as the mark left in the dust by the movement of a snake. I say again that he is dishonest, and dishonesty is more than must be expected of me."

In communicating with General Grant on the removal of Wells, General Sheridan said:

"He has embarrassed me very much since I came into command by his subterfuge and political chicanery. This necessary act will be approved by every class and shade of political opinion here. He has not one friend who is an honest man."

[Laughter.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask that that part be again read.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, it will again be read.

The Clerk again read the last paragraph.

Mr. BANNING. That was General Sheridan's opinion of J. Madison Wells in 1867.

Mr. GARFIELD. J. Madison Wells was then Andrew Johnson's democratic governor.

Mr. BANNING. And now the president of this returning board your committee indorsed.

The Clerk proceeded with the reading, as follows:

General Grant approved the action of General Sheridan in removing Wells. All the letters, telegrams, orders, and other communications from Sheridan on the subject of Wells's removal with Grant's indorsement thereon would be interesting reading now in connection with the high eulogium which Senator SHERMAN and Representatives GARFIELD, HALE, and KELLEY pronounced upon the political trickster and dishonest man who was removed by Sheridan in 1867, and who is now a trusted Federal office-holder and president of the returning board which counted in the Hayes electoral ticket of Louisiana,

Mr. BANNING. Now, Mr. Speaker, is this the man whom my colleague would have thrust his honest hand into a dishonest ballot-box and cleanse it of the gore and fraud that is in it? This man who is pronounced by Sheridan to be dishonest to his own personal knowledge and that he has not one honest friend in the State of Louisiana. Is this the man who is to change the 8,000 majority for Tilden to 4,000 majority for Hayes? And, Mr. Speaker, shall this House sit still when the President sends a report here which says that this man was a Union man during the war while General Sheridan says in 1867 that he was not? But, Mr. Speaker, it is no crime to have been a confederate provided you become a member of the republican party now. In 1867 Sheridan removed Wells from office and denounced him as a confederate sympathiser and said that he was dishonest; that he put into place men who had not ceased to wear the gray uniform. Now this committee reports to this House sustaining the action of the returning board and appeals to the country to sustain their report because Wells was a Union man. He was dishonest in 1867 when he did not do what the republican leaders wanted him to do. But, according to the republican committee's report, he is honest in 1876 when he makes the return of the Louisiana vote which will elect a republican President when the people of that State had by a vote of more than eight thousand chosen a democrat.

I ask my colleague from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] does he expect us to sit still here and believe this report of this committee when the members of the committee itself and all that side of the House refused us this public record that ought to be seen by every man, and the reading of which discloses the reason why you do not wish to let us have it printed? All that I want or hope for is for a fair and honorable way out of our difficulties. Every honest man hopes for that; every good citizen hopes for that; every member of this House, whether democrat or republican, should labor for that; and the way to reach that end, Mr. Speaker, is not by forcing us to believe a partisan report but by giving us all the facts, investigating everything, and finding out whether or not that returning board reflected the opinion of the people of Louisiana. The country does not believe it does. And let me say to gentlemen you must give Wells a better character than Grant and Sherman have given him, if you would have the country have confidence in his report.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I desire to say just one word more. The next clause of this report that we have says that General Anderson of the returning board is a cousin of the distinguished General Anderson of Fort Sumter. Well, they may have heard that in Louisiana; but if you go and tell that to Lozey Anderson and Governor Anderson, of Cincinnati, the brothers of the general, it will be news to them. I am advised that if he is a member of the family they have not heard of it until the appearance of this report.

Mr. BANNING. I will not say that of him. I do not know him. I am only stating what I am told.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why is this? Why is this appeal made to the people of the North, that Wells was a Union man, and Anderson a Union man? Did they expect to stir up the minds of the northern people with the notion that the confederacy was bearing down hard upon them? Why, sir, there are more men in the North who will take Sheridan's opinion as to the loyalty or disloyalty of Wells in 1867, especially when he removed him because he was a dishonest man and was sustained in that action, than there are who will believe the report of this committee, and who are afraid to have their report contradicted by the testimony in the War Department.

I have but one word more to say. Gentlemen say they regret that this comes on now. We have been told that vigilance is the price of liberty, and the people of the country believe it. These reports of proceedings at meetings of men of all parties are the best evidences to us that the people have lost confidence in the lead of gentlemen on the other side, and are afraid that their liberties are to be subverted; and they are evidence further that they will not permit it to be done.

Mr. FRYE. The fact that a great many men in this country now are talking much as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BANNING] talks about war, and yet that gold stands to-day at 108¼ and 109, and not at 150——

Mr. WILLIS. That is because Tilden is to be inaugurated.

Mr. FRYE. Shows clearly to my mind that the people the gentleman is talking about do not take any stock in this democratic cry of war. They do not believe there is to be any war. They are not easily frightened by gentlemen like the gentleman from Ohio, who talk about the people coming here and stripping men from power; and they will not take much stock either in the gentleman's new admiration for General Sheridan. A short time ago General Sheridan sent a dispatch north from Louisiana, where he had been himself examining for some six months, indicating that in his judgment a portion of the people of Louisiana were banditti, and the gentleman from Ohio and his friends went crazy over this testimony of General Sheridan that these Louisianians who were committing murder and every other outrage were banditti. And they held public meetings, I presume in Cincinnati—they did in Boston, they did in New York—denouncing General Sheridan because he bore such testimony against murder and outrage in that State. And yet, now, the gentleman says the people will and ought to condemn Wells, because General Sheridan in heat and excitement declared that he (Wells) was a scoundrel. And why? Because Wells was the democratic or conservative governor of the State of Louisiana, and was administering the functions of that office in behalf, to a certain extent, of those who had been in rebellion against the United States Government, and Sheridan could see no good in a man who was granting favors, the favors of peace, to men who had only a year or two before been in arms against the Government. The motives of Governor Wells may have been the promotion of peace, the establishment of harmony; but the memories of war were too fresh for Union men of the North to justify his conduct.

That time to-day has passed. I do not stand here to say that I can see no good in a people who clothe with power men who were in arms against the country. I can say for myself that I would rather see men who were so in arms, who went through the perils of war for that which they honestly believed to be right—I would much rather see them in power than the men who, up in Ohio and up in the North, shouted encouragement to the South, then went back on them, only daring to show a mawkish sympathy when they were routed and a devilish joy when they were victorious. I have very much the opinion in relation to copperheads that the President of the United States expressed and of the purpose they had in the war, and what they accomplished in its prolongation; so no remark of mine should be taken as a reflection on any gentlemen who hold positions in the administration of State governments now, and who held positions in the Southern army. But, sir, when General Sheridan made his charges against Governor Wells it was just after the heat of battle was over, it was just at the time Johnson had become President of the United States, and there did seem to be danger in the course which was being pursued.

Again, why does not the gentleman take the testimony of General Sheridan in relation to the State of Louisiana, who himself declared to me, personally, when I was there on a committee, and showed me papers substantiating his declaration, that he had sent United States officers over that State for the special purpose of finding out how many political murders had been committed since the rebellion, and the circumstances of those political murders—declared to me, I say, producing papers to sustain it, that he found there had been nearly three thousand such murders? In the nineteenth century, in a State of the American Union, in time of peace, nearly three thousand colored men had been murdered because they were republicans! Why does not the gentleman take that testimony as well as this of General Sheridan in relation to Governor Wells, made in the excitement and heat of those times? The statement I have quoted was made deliberately and after careful examination, without heat, without excitement.

Now, as to Governor Wells: The first section of our committee which went down to Louisiana reported or said—I have forgotten which—that Governor Wells was afraid to appear before them and did not testify. When our section of the committee arrived at New Orleans and went to the court-house, we found Governor Wells there. He was not afraid to appear before the committee, and he testified that he had no knowledge whatever that any committee had been in New Orleans; that when it was there he was sick in his bed; that when he heard the committee was coming he at once, sick as he was, left his house and went to New Orleans and came to the court-house to bear testimony before that committee, which happened to be ours.

Now, Governor Wells was an old whig in Louisiana, and those old whigs there do not love the democracy any better than I have been brought up to love it. They see no good in it, as I never have seen any in it since I have been a voter. When they were put upon the witness-stand and we asked them if they were democrats they were angry in a moment, felt insulted, aggrieved, and declared that never were they democrats and never would they be; that they were conservatives.

Now, as I have said, Governor Wells was an old whig in the State of Louisiana and when secession was talked about he was a man worth two or three hundred thousand dollars; he owned two great plantations; he owned two hundred slaves. He had been well received in the best society in the State, and surely he could find it in the old whig party in that State. He had been on most intimate terms with leading men and had been received on equal terms into the best families of Louisiana. He was welcomed as the conservative governor of Louisiana and strove to bring healing into the affairs of the State by treating men who had been in the rebellion as he treated Union men.

Now, being a whig when secession was started, Governor Wells began at once to speak against it, and, being a man of courage, he did not hide his light under any bushel. He spoke openly, he spoke boldly, he spoke everywhere as freely as the distinguished vice-president of the southern confederacy spoke down in the State of Georgia. Then when secession grew riper and bolder they raised a company, or I believe two, of the democrats and secessionists and marched them up into the parish where Governor Wells lives to take him, hold him, and see to it that he should not speak for the Union and the flag longer.

Governor Wells then left his houses, his horses, his cattle, his negroes, his wife, and his children for love of the flag, and went into the swamps of Louisiana and for a year and a half never came out of them. He raised a company of seventy men who, like himself, were lovers of the flag and lovers of the Union, and they lived with him in the swamp. They taunted them as jay-hawkers; they hunted them with blood-hounds. They burned his houses; they took his cattle; they took his horses. His family was separated, and he got out of the swamp only when New Orleans was captured. What devotion to the Union! what love for the flag! what suffering, what peril, what sorrow endured for the country! Can such a man be a scoundrel?

When he was a witness before our committee, in the court-house, there were at least one hundred and fifty leading rebels present. Three or four of them were well-known murderers; everybody knew them to be murderers. One of them, a member of the conservative senate, I think, was engaged in the Grant Parish murders. He boarded at the Saint Charles Hotel with me, and I knew him well. Three or four others had been participants in the terrible outrages of 1868 and 1872. Your candidate for governor, Mr. Nicholls, a gentleman whom I respect, and admire too, was sitting there all the while. I became well acquainted with him.

I asked Governor Wells in relation to his former life, in order to show by his testimony that the statement that he was a scoundrel was a new discovery, never known until secession became known and he showed himself to be a firm Union man. He told these men there that they called him a jay-hawker. Said he to them "I had rather be called a jay-hawker, I had rather my children would know me in memory as a jay-hawker, than be called a traitor, as you men are called," pointing to these men in the room. Did that show want of courage? Did that indicate that he was a man to run away?

Again, I asked him if he was afraid of assassination. They had attempted at least twice or three times to assassinate him. He said: "Yes, I do fear it, for these men here hate me with a vindictive hatred because I love the flag. They, hating the country and hating the flag, dare assassinate a man in the dark with a knife or the bludgeon or the pistol. Sir," said he, "I do not fear these men in the open day, or in the night if they will give me notice. No twenty of them dare attempt to assassinate me and let me know it."

When the governor was through I said to General Nicholls: "Was that boasting on the part of Governor Wells?" Said General Nicholls: "No, sir, it was not; it was every word of it true; that man does not know what the word 'fear' means." That, sir, was the testimony of a man whom I believe to be honest, the candidate of the democratic party for governor of Louisiana. Now as a committee we found, notwithstanding the assertions which have been made here——

Mr. WILLIS. By Sheridan.

Mr. FRYE. Not by Sheridan at all, but by gentlemen on this floor, in relation to the report of our committee. We found that, and I quote from our report:

> Governor Wells, the president, had been a large and wealthy planter before the war; had remained loyal through the rebellion; had been true to the flag of his country when driven to the swamps and hunted by dogs. Such a record entitles him to our warmest sympathy and respect.

I do not believe that he would knowingly do a dishonest or cowardly act for the advantage of his party. As for Mr. Anderson, he, too, was a man of wealth, but he was in the rebel army all through the war, holding a high position. In my judgment, he is a gentleman by birth, by education, and by habit.

The other two members of the returning board I do not know so well. They were colored men, and I plead guilty to that of which you southern men are not guilty. I have that northern colorphobia in me which you do not have. You have instead that phobia of servitude; you have that idea in you that a man who serves never should be permitted to rule. I have born in me that wicked color dislike, and it is hard work for me to get over it. I have tried to overcome, and have largely, this prejudice. I do not know, if I was down there in one of these Legislatures and saw colored men legislating for me—I do not know but that I would have the same purpose that was expressed to me in Louisiana again and again by conservatives: "We will treat the colored men well in their places, but they shall not vote." I do not say that I should not have precisely the same feeling; I fear that I might. But that I had it would not make it right, nor would it afford any justification for murder, outrage, or threats to prevent them from voting.

Now I say to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING,] and I say to the gentlemen from the South to-day, the right of suffrage having been given by the Constitution of the United States to the colored men of the South as well as to the white men, you will be compelled to give them the free exercise of that right in your southern country or you will have no peace in that country. God knows we long for peace there as you long for peace. God knows our prosperity depends upon your prosperity there, our happiness upon yours; we are one country.

When I was in New Orleans there were twenty ships lying in the harbor there from my own district in Maine. Four-fifths of the carrying trade of the city of New Orleans, and largely of the country of Louisiana, has been done by my own State. Large numbers of merchants in New Orleans to-day are from my own State. Packard, the present governor of Louisiana, was from my own city, and I dare bear witness, notwithstanding the talk which has been made in the public press, that not an honester man to-day walks the streets of New Orleans than that same Packard, so derided and hissed and hooted because, forsooth, he is a carpet-bagger.

And my own city furnished two mayors of the city of New Orleans long before you down there knew what the word "carpet-bagger" meant.

Crossman, from my city, was mayor of New Orleans for I think four years—a good mayor, an honest gentleman—not a "carpet-bagger," because there had been no war then.

Our destinies are with yours; our prosperity is tied up with yours. We want to see peace. We have no enmity toward you—not the slightest. We will do you no harm.

A MEMBER. Let us alone, then.

Mr. FRYE. And we will "let you alone" if you will let the colored men vote.

Mr. ATKINS. No prominent man in the South is opposed to that.

Mr. FRYE. I understand the gentleman to say that no prominent man in the South opposes it.

Mr. ATKINS. Nor any not prominent, so far as I know.

Mr. FRYE. Will the gentleman take the testimony of General Sheridan that 3,000 persons have been murdered in Louisiana because they desired to exercise the right of suffrage?

Mr. WILLIS. I will not.

A MEMBER. Nor I, without a good many grains of allowance.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. FRYE. Does the gentleman from Texas wish to ask a question?

Mr. REAGAN. Not to ask a question, but to make a statement.

Mr. FRYE. I do not yield for that. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen say they do not believe this statement of General Sheridan. I do not know what will convince the democratic party that outrages have been committed against voters in the South. For some time I despaired even of many republicans ever yielding credit to the terrible barbarism existing in some States South. But I say, from the day when a republican convention was assembled in Mechanics' Institute in 1866 and when three hundred democratic policemen marched up to that hall and, platoon by platoon, fired ball cartridges into that peaceful body, and then when men jumped out of the windows and fell upon the hard sidewalk with broken arms and broken legs, and prayed for life, more than four hundred of the same class of white men brained them with their muskets as they lay on the sidewalk, so that in less than one hour's time two hundred and sixty men were killed; and when two hundred were gathered together by the agents of the Freedmen's Bureau and carried to the marine hospital, these men formed a line on New Canal street and for half an hour fired ball cartridges into the hospital itself—from that hour down to the present time Louisiana has been a barbarism.

Mr. WILLIS. Under republican administration.

Mr. FRYE. Under republican administration, because the courts are utterly and entirely powerless.

Mr. WILLIS. And they are in the hands of republicans.

Mr. FRYE. When a man commits an outrage—murder, which the gentleman from New York [Mr. WILLIS] would not think of vindicating or tolerating for one moment if committed in New York—when a man is being tried for such a crime, when every respectable lawyer in that precinct volunteers to defend him, and while the lawyer is arguing the case to the jury (as a gentleman, a conservative told me) the butts of his pistols can be seen projecting from his pockets every time his coat-tail switches back—when no jury can be found who dare render a verdict of guilty under circumstances like these, I say it is no wonder that these crimes happen under a republican administration.

Mr. SPENCER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir; I yield for a question.

Mr. SPENCER. In what parish did what the gentleman has just related occur?

Mr. FRYE. About this trial?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, sir.

Mr. FRYE. O, I do not know: I do not know anything about your parishes except this: I know that the history of the parishes of East Baton Rouge, of East Feliciana, of Grant, and others is written in letters of blood; and the gentleman from Louisiana and his children one of these days, when impartial history is written, will put their faces in their hands and their hands in the dust at the record of those murderous parishes.

Mr. Speaker, I merely rose to reply to the gentleman's attack under General Sheridan's signature upon Governor Wells. I did not, when I rose to speak, think of going further. I ask the pardon of the House and thank it for the indulgence it has extended to me.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. Speaker, I feel that something ought to be said on this occasion by some Representative from the State of Louisiana in regard to the statements which have been made by gentlemen on the other side who have preceded me; and I hope that what I may say will be said in good temper and good humor.

I stand upon this floor as the representative of the largest colored district in Louisiana, having received the open, free votes of more than five thousand colored men in my district. I stand here as their chosen Representative. They voted for me openly, freely, knowing that I was a democrat, knowing that I was a nominee of the democratic party. Yet I come from the fifth district of Louisiana, which happens to contain two of the champion "bull-dozed" parishes, as they are called, in that State—the parish of Ouachita and the parish of Morehouse.

Sir, a man living away up in the State of Maine cannot possibly have that intimate knowledge of affairs in the State of Louisiana that I have; because I was born upon that soil, I was educated there, I have lived there all my life. I have mixed and mingled with that people upon such terms that I know, if any man in the world knows, their hearts; and when General Sheridan or anybody else tells me that there have been three thousand political murders in the State of Louisiana, I simply brand the statement as false. It is impossible; it is absurd, and the only wonder is that such declarations will be made, much less credited.

Why, sir, the gentleman from Maine talks about the massacre in Grant Parish. He does not read the papers. Has he read the testimony of William Ward and of Flower, who were the head-men leading the negroes in that fight? Has the gentleman forgotten upon whom the responsibility of that affair rests? What does Ward say, what does Flower say? They say they were put up and instigated to do that by William Pitt Kellogg and S. B. Packard. Sir, the blood of the negroes at Colfax is upon the hands of S. B. Packard and William Pitt Kellogg. They are the heads of the republican party in the State of Louisiana, although I am almost disposed at times to acquiesce in the proposition made by Mr. Greeley after his extended tour through the South, who when he came back to New York said: "My friends, you are mistaken; there is no republican party in the South; there are but two parties there, democrats and thieves." [Laughter and applause.]

I say that the blood of the negroes at Colfax rests upon the hands and upon the head of Mr. Kellogg and the men who surround him and instigated him to all his mischievous conduct in that State. Such is the testimony of Ward and such the testimony of Flower, who were leaders in that contest.

What were the motives which actuated Mr. Kellogg in stirring up that strife? It was for the purpose of making political capital. He cared nothing about the lives of forty, fifty, or a hundred negroes. It was only fuel added to the flame with which he expected to fire the northern heart. That is the secret of the Colfax affair. Mr. Kellogg armed those people. He furnished them with Government guns. He furnished them with ammunition. He did all this to bring about this conflict. He went to work deliberately and installed and commissioned two sets of officers in that parish and then refused to interfere for the purpose of preserving the peace. Any gentleman can get up and in round numbers talk about three thousand political murders. I, who have lived there all my life, say that the statement is absurd and without foundation in truth.

It is useless for me at this time to follow up the gentleman in the remarks he has made aspersing the character of the people of Louisiana. But I will say this, and such I believe will be the verdict of the American people, that the people of the State of Louisiana have exhibited a degree of courage, a degree of forbearance, of magnanimity, that is sublime. If the people of the State of Maine had put upon them what the people of the State of Louisiana have had, the gentleman himself would have become a red-handed revolter against the despotism of such an infamous tyranny. Every executive office in the State is in the hands of Mr. Kellogg and his followers; every judge in the State is his appointee; and does he or his officers make any effort to arrest men who he says are guilty of these crimes? No, not at all. He never thinks of such a thing. Why? For the reason that nine out of every ten are men in buckram. Those brigands the gentleman from Maine talks about are the same kind of men that Falstaff met at Shrewsbury. [Laughter.] I will say further to the gentleman from Maine, that as a citizen it was his duty, when information came to him there of these high-handed murders or wrongs, to have gone before the court, made proper affidavit, and had warrants issued.

The gentleman has drawn a very graphic picture, a beautiful eulogy on J. Madison Wells. He has said that that distinguished man had access to the best families of Louisiana. I am afraid the gentleman does not know the best families in Louisiana if he thinks J. Madison Wells has now or ever did have any access to the best families there.

He has further described, in graphic terms, J. Madison Wells, in the swamps of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, if I were to credit what I hear, he was once known as a "swamp angel." It is useless for the gentleman to try to galvanize and to brighten the character of J. Madison Wells. It admits of no extenuation. It admits of no defense. Every act that he has performed as an official from the close of the war to this day has resulted in his public condemnation. And now there is piled upon his head an amount and a volume of iniquity that is mountain high.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] is at least entitled to the credit of perpetrating some very bold figures of speech. He says the ballot-boxes in Louisiana are reeking in fraud and red with blood.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman will allow me—I did not say all the ballot-boxes, but that there were some.

Mr. SPENCER. Very well, "some of them;" I will take the correction. The gentleman says some of the ballot-boxes in Louisiana are reeking with fraud and red with blood. Well, all I have to say is, it is republican fraud and republican rascality if such is the fact; because, sir, no democrat in the State of Louisiana had the opportunity of touching an election-box. The chief register was appointed by Mr. Kellogg. All the supervisors of registration throughout the State were appointed by him. Every commissioner of election was appointed by Mr. Kellogg, or by his alter ego, the supervisors of election. Kellogg appoints the supervisor, the supervisor appoints the commissioner, and in nine cases out of ten in the State of Louisiana there was not a democrat on an election board. Now, sir, if those ballot-boxes were reeking with fraud, who put it in the box? The democrats could not have done it. We had only the poor privilege of going to that box and depositing our ballot. There, sir, our control ceased. From the time the ballot-box was made, until it was deposited in the proper office after the election, the democrats had no part or share in it. I say, sir, that if those ballot-boxes are reeking with fraud, it must necessarily have been fraud perpetrated by Kellogg and his pimps, because most of the men appointed by him as supervisors bore a tainted character. How could the democrats perpetrate fraud on the ballot-boxes when they were not permitted to touch them; when Kellogg's own officers brought them to the polling-places, stood around them to receive the tickets from the hands of the voters, and when the election was over took the ballot-boxes and deposited them with men of their own sort and kind? Where came in the opportunity for democratic frauds? Sir, it is preposterous and absurd. And as regards the charge that they were "red with blood," will the gentleman from Ohio be kind enough to point me out one of the boxes "red with blood?"

Mr. GARFIELD. With pleasure.

Mr. SPENCER. I will be obliged to the gentleman if he will do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman want me to do it now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CLYMER.) Does the gentleman from Louisiana yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. SPENCER. I want him to tell me where in the State of Louisiana on the day of election there was any killing.

Mr. GARFIELD. Will the gentleman allow me to read from the report?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not ask the gentleman to read, but to state the places where the ballot-boxes were "red with blood."

Mr. GARFIELD. I will refer the gentleman to pages 340 and 341 and the two following pages of the report, being the examination and cross-examination before the returning board of Benjamin James. The custodian of the ballot-box was seized, the ballot-box was taken from him, and he himself shot three times and left for dead. He was before the board with his wounds unhealed, and the testimony was undisputed and unshaken by any of the cross-interrogatories.

Mr. SPENCER. In what parish?

Mr. GARFIELD. In Ouachita Parish.

Mr. SPENCER. The gentleman is reading now from that sweet mess that was brought up here by Senator SHERMAN.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman pleases, I am reading from the testimony which was taken by both political parties before the board, there being a cross-examination by the democratic lawyers as well as an examination-in-chief.

Mr. SPENCER. I know how that testimony was taken. It is simply ex parte.

Mr. GARFIELD. Ex parte! The cross-examinations are all here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana has the floor.

Mr. SPENCER. According to the gentleman's own statement, this transpired after the election closed.

Mr. GARFIELD. No, sir. If the gentleman will allow me I will explain that.

Mr. SPENCER. I thought the gentleman stated the box was being brought by this man to the county-seat. Why, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman's memory cannot be so bad and so defective that he does not know how these affidavits are made up. Sir, I could go down to the New Orleans custom-house and have a bushel of affidavits manufactured that would, if they were to be believed, convict the gentleman himself of arson or any other crime known to the world. They manufactured them by the ream in 1874. A United States commissioner absolutely manufactured affidavits and sent them there ready to fill orders according as Wells, Anderson & Co. desired them.

Now, sir, we say all that kind of talk will do with those who do not understand it; but to us who were there mingling in that election, taking an active part in it every day and every night, the thing is simply ridiculous. The gentleman has specified but one instance where the election officer, he said, was assaulted and beaten on the night after the election. Does that account for eight thousand majority being rejected? They rejected all that parish except one poll which went republican. As the gentleman has specified one instance I now make the assertion here that on the day when that election closed in the State of Louisiana there had not been a riot, there had not been a tumult, not even a fisticuff encounter within the broad limits of the State. Bear that in mind, and then bear in mind that the number of votes cast on that day was larger by several thousand than was ever cast in the State before. Bear in mind that the ballot-boxes which contained the ballots were not in our custody; that we were never permitted to touch them; that we were not permitted to come within six feet of the polls, and then tell me if you will that the white people of that State were guilty of fraud and guilty of intimidation at that election. How does the gentleman account for that state of things? Did not his own people hold the ballot-boxes? Did not his own men receive the ballots from the hands of the voters? Does not the election-law of Louisiana allow the commissioner to challenge and reject the vote of any man on proper showing? It does. The commissioners of elections in the State of Louisiana have got very ample powers, and in the very case which the gentleman cites of a double ballot the statute declares that it shall be thrown out; and the statute further declares that in the event of any one challenging a voter the commissioner shall have power to administer oaths and examine witnesses touching his qualifications. And in making their returns they shall state the number of ballots rejected and their reasons therefor.

I say, bearing in mind these facts—that this election was conducted by the republican party; that every officer, every constable, and almost every commissioner was a republican; that we, the democrats, were not permitted to touch the ballot-boxes, to touch the returns—how can the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] say that these boxes were reeking with fraud? Yes, they were reeking with fraud as soon as Wells, Anderson & Co. got hold of them, because if the requisite returns were not there they had them manufactured and put in.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman state that the returning board added any votes to any ballot-boxes?

Mr. SPENCER. What I say is that they allowed the returns to be tampered with after they came into their possession.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does the gentleman mean to say that the board added any votes which were not thrown in any parish? Does he mean to say that they increased the vote anywhere?

Mr. SPENCER. I do not say the returning board absolutely increased the vote in any parish, because I am not now informed——

Mr. GARFIELD. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. SPENCER. But I do say they changed the returns, and what is the difference? The law of Louisiana says that the returning board shall not have jurisdiction to investigate any charges of intimidation or violence occurring on the day of election unless the return of the supervisor is accompanied by the sworn statement of the commissioners and that of three eligible citizens to the fact that there was such intimidation or violence.

Now I make the assertion that there was but one return that went down to the returning board of Louisiana in due legal form on the subject of intimidation, and that one was from my own parish, the parish of Concordia. There the supervisor made a return that on account of fraud and intimidation practiced by republican colored men on democratic colored men there was no freedom or fairness in the election, and that return was supplemented by the oath of the republican commissioners of the poll, and by one hundred citizens of both parties. That was a return made in due form of law and such as authorized the board under its legal power to have investigated the question of intimidation and violence. But what did the board do? Why, they did not notice it at all. O, no, because it would have rejected 1,500 republican votes. And yet that was the report of the republican supervisor and republican commissioners.

I repeat that under the election law of Louisiana, unless this protest is made at the time prescribed by law, which is contemporary with the making of the returns, the returning board has no authority to investigate the question of intimidation, and I make the assertion, and I predicate it on the report of Governor Palmer, Ex-Senator Trumbull, and others, that with none of these returns was that formality complied with. But what did the returning board do? After the returns came into their hands they allowed these fellows to open the envelopes and insert affidavits and protests weeks after the election had closed. And yet that is the board presided over by this immaculate man, J. Madison Wells, whom Senator SHERMAN says is the peer of any Senator. God save the Senate!

Now, Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that, with all the facts of this case before the country, the idea that the democratic party could have perpetrated any frauds upon these ballot-boxes is simply ridiculous; and I feel that when I talk upon this subject to men who keep themselves informed upon public affairs I am carrying coals to Newcastle in telling them these things. Sir, I stand here to defend my people from such aspersions. I say that a more forbearing, more chivalrous, more peaceful people do not inhabit any portion of the American continent than those who inhabit the soil of Louisiana, and so long as I stand upon this floor I will not allow to go unchallenged such declarations as these. I confess that the time has already come when as a citizen of Lousiana, remembering the wrongs and outrages that have been perpetrated upon her, remembering the wrongs that have been done to her by the President of the United States, remembering the wrong that has been inflicted upon that people by holding them down in abject submission to a minority, and that minority possessing neither the brains nor the intelligence nor the property of the State, I confess that I am ready to put my hands to my eyes and say, God save my State of Louisiana. It is enough to bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every right-thinking man in America, and I thank God that the people of America are beginning to understand this thing. The day has passed when such men as Packard and Kellogg can issue their mandate to the custom-house to manufacture affidavits for the purpose of firing the northern heart. The northern heart does not fire so easily now.

And when the day does come that you can no longer create a thrill by putting up a Mrs. Pinkston, the occupation of a great many of my friends on the other side of the House will be gone. Why, sir, that Pinkston affair is the boldest, baldest, barest fraud that was ever attempted to be perpetrated upon any people on earth. The idea that Mrs. Pinkston and her husband were assaulted, that her husband was killed and her infant murdered by white men, is so preposterously absurd when the facts are known that it is simply astonishing that there should be found people to credit it. This colored man Pinkston was a known and recognized democrat in the parish of Ouachita in 1872. He voted the democratic ticket in 1872, and he voted for me in 1874, and he would have voted the democratic ticket in 1876, for almost the last act of his life was to attend the meeting of a democratic club. And yet that woman, half-witted, idiotic, weak and feeble, is taken in hand by certain designing parties I could name and dragged to New Orleans and stuffed with a big story about white men having killed her husband. Why should white men want to kill him? He was one of our own party. The people of Louisiana have been called very hard names, but I believe they have never yet been called fools.

This is just about on a par with the manner in which Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Packard have attempted to impose upon the people of this country a false and fraudulent election return.

I have said about all that I feel called upon to say this morning; but I shall take occasion at the proper time and with some degree of preparation, I trust, to put the case of the people of Louisiana before this House and before the country upon a footing that will show them to be and to have been a long-suffering, a patient, and a patriotic people.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Mr. Speaker, if I understand the real question before the House it is not whether Mr. Madison Wells is a pure and upright man or whether General Sheridan is fit to be a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States. It is whether a petition, it matters not to me in this exigency whether it is exclusively signed by democrats or republicans, or whether it is signed professedly by non-partisan men—if I understand the question, it is whether a respectful petition referring to the present exigency of the country, for which the Constitution itself makes no adequate provision, shall go into the RECORD. For my part, I am unqualifiedly in favor of seeing it printed in the RECORD.

If I know the thoughts of the people, if I am at all fit to represent the sense of the business people of this country, who after all are the great jury, for lawyers are officers of the court and are never jurymen—if I interpret correctly the public opinion of the intelligent business men of this country, we are to have here many a petition asking that we will consider this great question free from party bias, that we the intelligent representatives of the people will find a way to settle it in accordance with law, without revolution, and without talk of violence.

The people of this country laugh at the men wherever found who talk of settling this controversy by violence. Such talk at the end of this centennial year is not fit to go into the RECORD. We belie and do violence to all the sacred thoughts and sentiments which have clustered about this year just in proportion as we permit or as we listen patiently to any such utterances. The people will have this matter settled according to law, so far as there is any law to fit it.

I say let this petition, which was sent here by reputable men, no matter if every one of them is a democrat, no matter if every one of them is a republican, I say let it go into the RECORD. If there be truth in it, (and very likely there is,) we had better find out the truth. If we do not, then those we profess to represent will find it out and they will make us obey it.

In coming here last night from the district which I have the honor to represent in this House, I happened to bring with me evidence, incidentally obtained as I passed through the city of New York, that within two or three days another petition will come here signed by representative men from the metropolis of the country. And will anybody seriously object, even though it should contravene our immemorial custom, to the printing in the RECORD of the petition to be sent here a few days hence from New York? I trust not. With no more propriety in my judgment can any member of this House vote against printing the petition sent here from Cincinnati. I hope the gentlemen with whom I act on this side of the House will every one of them honor the spirit of fairness which has been uttered on all sides, that they will say: "Let the people send up their thoughts and their ideas of the truth;" for, let me repeat after all, the people are the jury, and they will make us obey their verdict.

Mr. BLOUNT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] objected to the printing of this communication, as the Chair understood, in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. I have never objected to the printing of this paper. I have once before called the attention of the Chair to the fact that I have made no objection to the printing of this petition or any other; but I objected to its being printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to state the gentleman's position properly. By the reading of the reporters' notes, as the gentleman will remember, he appeared to object to the printing alone. The Chair was going to state——

Mr. CONGER. I have already asked the Chair to have that corrected while it was fresh in the minds of all. The motion was that the paper be printed in the RECORD; and therefore my objection to the printing could not have had reference to anything else.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to set the gentleman right. He need not fear that the Chair will not do him ample justice. The Chair understands the position of the gentleman from Michigan to be that of objecting to the printing in the RECORD.

Mr. CONGER. That is the only objection I have made, and I desire the truth to appear.

The SPEAKER. Rule 141 relates directly to the question of reading papers. That rule declares—

When the reading of a paper is called and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined by a vote of the House.

In accordance with this rule the Chair will now submit to the House the question, Shall this communication be read?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

The Clerk read as follows:

CINCINNATI, December 23, 1876.

DEAR SIR: As instructed, I herewith inclose copy of resolutions adopted at a meeting of citizens held in this city, on the 20th instant, at which Hon. Henry Stanberry was president.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN D. BANKS, Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Preamble and resolutions of citizens' meeting at Pike's Opera House, Cincinnati, December 20, 1876.

The public mind is filled with apprehension and alarm at the course of recent events in our political history. This course seems to tend to the dreadest of all issues which can be presented to a civilized and free people—to the alternative between violence on the one hand and conscious submission to a wrong subversive of the very foundation of civil liberty on the other.

We believe that this fatal course can be arrested, if all good citizens will at once come to an understanding as to a few simple principles without which that union of liberty and order which constitute the basis of our national life is a manifest impossibility.

To this end,

Be it resolved, That the Government of the United States is founded upon universal suffrage, the free and fair exercise of which under the Constitution and laws of the respective States is the most sacred right of the citizen.

Resolved, That all attempts arbitrarily to abridge or interfere with this right of necessity tend to anarchy and revolution; that the deprivation of this right upon the allegation of violence or fraud in its exercise is the severest penalty which can be visited upon American freemen; that such a penalty ought, therefore, never to be inflicted, except upon clear proof before a competent and impartial tribunal.

Resolved, That the proposition according to which sentence of disfranchisement can be finally and irreversibly passed upon members of one political party by a tribunal composed exclusively of members of the other party—by a tribunal which, in defiance of the express, clear, and mandatory terms under the law which it claims jurisdiction, refuses to constitute itself upon the basis even of a semblance of impartiality—is in its very statement a monstrous denial of the rules and maxims of honesty and right which lie at the root, not only of freedom, but of civilization.

Resolved, That this proposition, in its application to the present emergency in our national affairs, becomes still more monstrous in view of the fact that it is in effect nothing less than a claim that an irresponsible body of a few bad and ignorant men, whose determination to do wrong is evidenced by the very character of its organization, can arbitrarily defeat the will of the whole American people and annul their deliberate choice of a National Executive.

Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States does not, either in terms or by implication, confer upon the President of the Senate, or any single person, the right to canvass and count the electoral votes for President and Vice-President; that such a right has never been exercised, and until very recently has never been claimed; that the assertion of this right is directly at war with the practice uniformly adhered to by the party in whose behalf it is now made, as well as with the inveterate usages of our Government since the election and inauguration of its first illustrious President.

Resolved, That the temporary control of the civil and military powers of the Government by one of our political parties constitutes a sacred trust, which is flagrantly violated by any use of these powers by such party for the purpose of perpetuating its possession of them.

Resolved, That the most dangerous of all usurpations in a free country is that of the functions of civil authority by the military power, and that the use of this power, not in the service of the country, but in the furtherance of the interests of a party, and the employment of national troops in times of peace to control or influence elections in States or Territories which are not threatened either by invasion or by domestic violence, is an outrage upon the rights and liberties of the people.

Resolved, That according to our sincere belief the reckless attempt of unscrupulous politicians to subvert the rights and liberties of the people by unsettling the very foundations of justice and introducing the most dangerous innovations in the time-honored usages of our national Government is not countenanced by the great body of voters of either of the political parties; that, on the contrary, it is the inflexible purpose of the people of both parties to preserve their liberties by maintaining the supremacy of the law against either anarchy or despotism; and that the most urgent need of the hour is an earnest appeal to the conscience of the nation.

Resolved, That it is the duty of Congress to insist with unyielding firmness upon the integrity of its constitutional rights and prerogatives, and by their just and fair exercise to avert the perils which threaten the peace and safety of the Republic.

Resolved, That until the two Houses of Congress, either by concurrent or joint action, shall declare who is constitutionally elected President, it is the duty of republicans and democrats alike to frown down any declaration by the excited partisans of either party that their candidate is elected and shall be inaugurated; such declarations by the citizens or the press being calculated to rouse passions which may lead to civil war.

Resolved, That any decision made by the two Houses of Congress will be cheerfully acquiesced in by the whole people, and that any attempt to inaugurate a President simply upon the proclamation of the President of the Senate will be an act of usurpation that should be, and we believe will be, resisted by the people without distinction of party.

Resolved, That the secretary of this meeting be instructed to forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States, the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on referring this communication to the select committee on counting the electoral votes, of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE] is chairman.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. BLAIR, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD remarks upon the joint resolution introduced by him proposing a constitutional amendment in regard to the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

Mr. KNOTT. I move that the House now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at two o'clock and fifty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. KIDDER: A paper relating to the establishment of a post-route from Marshall, Minnesota, to Fort Pierre, Dakota, by way of Lake Hendricks and Oakwood, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. WOOD, of New York: The petition of cigar-makers of New York, for the amendment of the revenue laws so that they can purchase stamps without giving bond, to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Also, the petition of Henrietta Stringham, widow of the late Rear-Admiral Stringham, for a pension, to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

ESTATE OF SAMUEL P. FEARON.

Mr. MAISH introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 178) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay Mary Fearon and Jessie Crossin, executrices of Samuel P. Fearon, deceased, for certain registered United States bonds redeemed by the Government on forged assignments and power of attorney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. HOOKER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. He also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4283) for the improvement of Pascagoula River and cleaning out obstructions at or near the mouth of said river where it empties into the Mississippi Sound, and deepening the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS-BANK.

Mr. DOUGLAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4284) authorizing the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to buy in certain real and other property and to sell the same at public or private sale, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time.

The SPEAKER. To what committee does the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DOUGLAS] desire to have this bill referred?

Mr. DOUGLAS. To the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the committee named by the gentleman, being a select committee, expired with the session of Congress during which it was appointed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The committee has held meetings during the present session. I did not know it was necessary that the committee should be re-appointed. If so, I ask that it be done.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection. The committee will be re-appointed, and this bill will be referred to that committee.

The bill was referred accordingly, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DOUGLAS subsequently said: By reference to the Digest I find the Chair is correct in the ruling that a select committee expires with the session at which it is appointed. It is desirable that the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank should be re-appointed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair already, upon the gentleman's suggestion, no objection being made, has re-appointed the committee.

Mr. DOUGLAS, by unanimous consent, also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4285) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to buy certain property for the use of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF NAVIGATION OF RED RIVER, LOUISIANA.

Mr. LEVY, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of the board of underwriters, chamber of commerce, cotton exchange, and other public bodies of New Orleans, in regard to the improvement of the navigation of Red River in Louisiana and Texas, and moved that it be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

The memorial is as follows:

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned memorialists respectfully ask that an appropriation may be made for the improvement of the navigation of Red River, from Jefferson, Texas, to its mouth, for the following reasons:

The commerce of the Red River is next in importance to that of the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers.

The people of a large portion of Louisiana, and a considerable portion of Texas, Arkansas, and the Indian nation are entirely dependent on it as their only means of access to the markets of the country.

The people of New Orleans and of the Red River Valley are not alone interested in the improvement of the navigation of this river, for the population of this valley are large consumers of the merchandise, manufactured goods, and products of the Eastern and Western States, and increased facilities for commerce, cheaper freights and insurance, will add largely to the volume of trade between the different sections of our country.

The navigation of this river is very dangerous, and extremely difficult and uncertain. From its mouth, where it empties into the Mississippi River, to Shreveport, Louisiana, and Jefferson, Texas, the channel is obstructed by logs, snags, wrecks, and leaning timber to such an extent that few insurance companies will take hull risks at all. Not more than three or four insurance companies out of the large number in New Orleans will underwrite for boats engaged in that trade. Besides, the hull risks are from 8 to 10 per cent. higher for steamboats engaged in the Red River trade than they are for the Ohio or Mississippi trade.

Although the very highest standard of strength for boats engaged in this trade is required by the underwriters, (and they will insure on none others,) yet the percentage of damage to them caused by the obstructions is fully ten times greater than to boats running either on the Ohio or the Mississippi; and of all the boats navigating this river during the past twelve months, (twenty or more,) not more than one or two have escaped serious damage and several have been sunk. Others have had to be docked and repaired at large expense; several of them as many as four or five times during the season

During the low-water season, which ordinarily begins about the latter part of July and often lasts until the 1st of January, boats experience a great deal of trouble in "Old River," between the mouth of Red River and the Mississippi proper, (Old River being the former channel of the Mississippi) All boats navigating the Red, Ouachita, and Atchafalaya Rivers have to pass this place

At the present time (December, 1876) the navigation of these rivers is totally suspended, boats being unable to pass this piece of river. Three-fourths of all the boats employed in running these rivers are now detained there with full cargoes on board, and will have to wait till the rivers rise.

As a further evidence of the dangers attending the navigation of Red River, we may add that the insurance on cargoes from New Orleans to Shreveport, a distance of about six hundred and fifty miles, is the same as to Alton, Illinois, a distance of about twelve hundred and seventy-five miles, and to Cincinnati, on the Ohio, a distance of sixteen hundred miles.

We believe that the improvements in Old River can be easily made; that the obstructions in Old River can be readily removed, and its navigation rendered as safe as that of the Mississippi River. It will be necessary to do some work on the falls at Alexandria, Louisiana, in order to improve the channel and make the navigation at that point safe.

Your memorialists respectfully ask, therefore, the consideration of this important matter, and for such an appropriation as may be necessary to improve the navigation of the Red River from Jefferson, Texas, to the Mississippi River, and to free it from the great dangers and difficulties which now attend it.

And your memorialists will ever pray.

THOMAS A. ADAMS,
President Board of Underwriters of New Orleans.
CYRUS BUSSEY,
President Chamber of Commerce.
WM. C. BLACK,
President New Orleans Cotton Exchange.
R. S. HOWARD,
President Merchants' Exchange.
JNO. G. GAINES,
President New Orleans Clearing-House Association.
JOS. A. AIKEN,
President New Orleans and Red River Transportation Company.
W. T. BOARDMAN,
President Red River Pilots' Association.

CHEAP TELEGRAPHY.

Mr. FRANKLIN. I ask unanimous consent to present the petition of sundry citizens of Missouri for cheap telegraphy, and to move its reference to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

The SPEAKER. That can be done under the rules, and the petition will be so referred.

NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the estimate of the treasurer of the National Soldiers' Home for the expenses for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted in the following cases:

To Mr. STANTON, for five days on account of sickness in his family.

To JOHN REILLY, extension of leave until Friday next.

To Mr. WHITTHORNE, until January 3.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers in the case of William Watkins and their reference to the Committee on War Claims.

And then, on motion of Mr. CLYMER, (at twelve o'clock and eighteen minutes p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BURCHARD, of Wisconsin: The petition of Robert V. Bogart, of Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, to be re-imbursed on account of money and postage-stamps stolen from the post-office at Beaver Dam, to the Committee of Claims.

By Mr. CATE: A paper relating to the establishment of a daily post-route from Rice Lake, via Barron, to Clayton, the present terminus of the North Wisconsin Railroad, Wisconsin, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FRANKLIN: The petition of citizens of Missouri, for the passage of such a law as will enforce the provisions of the act of Congress of July 24, 1866, relative to the purchase of all telegraphic lines by the United States for postal, military, or other purposes, to the same committee.

By Mr. HAYMOND: The petition of Joseph C. Cowdin, that the war record of Robert W. Sill, late captain Forty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, be changed, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

IN SENATE.

FRIDAY, December 29, 1876.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of Tuesday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BOGY presented the petition of Theophilus Fisk Mills, praying to be allowed to amend his former petition so as to ask for an appropriation to be paid to the American citizen who shall invent certain measures which will enable him to produce perpetual motion and explain the mechanism of heavenly bodies; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

Mr. RANSOM presented additional papers pertaining to the claim of John D. Thorne for compensation for cotton alleged to have been seized by United States troops in 1863; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon in which they represent that the Siletz reservation embraces an area of 175,000 acres of land, much of which is suitable for cultivation; that in the year 1855 there were located on said reservation twenty-eight hundred Indians and they have decreased in numbers since that time to less than six hundred; that only a small proportion of these six hundred Indians till or improve any part of said land; that recently, by order of the General Government, a new agency within the boundaries of the Siletz reservation and near the mouth of Salmon River, has been established, on which the Nestucka, Salmon River, and Alsea Indians are in part located. They further represent that this new agency is amply large enough to accommodate all the Indians on the Siletz reservation, and is well adapted to their wants, being near the coast, where an abundance of game and shell-fish supply an easy and certain living. In view of the fact that thousands of acres of good land for agricultural purposes are lying idle, while immigrants from the East are seeking homes in Oregon, they respectfully and earnestly ask that all the land, except so much as is necessary for the requirements of the new Salmon River agency and that which is at present occupied by Indians who have built dwelling-houses, barns, and improved their lands, and who express a desire to remain on said farms, be thrown open to settlement. They further urge that a law be passed at an early day for the extinguishment of the Indian title to the Siletz reservation and for preparing the same for settlement. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

GOVERNMENT OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. GORDON. Will the Senator withdraw his motion for a moment, in order that I may have an opportunity to present a memorial?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. GORDON. I wish to present a memorial signed by Wade Hampton as governor, W. D. Simpson as lieutenant-governor, W. H. Wallace as speaker of the house of representatives, and by 68 others as representatives and senators of the General Assembly of South Carolina. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the petition being read?

Mr. INGALLS. To whom is it addressed?

The CHIEF CLERK. "To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America:

The memorial of Wade Hampton, governor, of William D. Simpson, lieutenant-governor of the State of South Carolina, of the house of representatives, and of the undersigned senators of the General Assembly of the said State, respectfully showeth to your honorable bodies, That at a general election held in the said State on 7th November ultimo, they were duly elected to the offices aforesaid, which they now respectively hold. That under the constitution and laws of this State, the votes are counted publicly immediately upon the closing of the polls by the precinct managers, who then and there make statements of the result, forward the same to the board of county canvassers, who, from these statements, make the proper county statements, and forward these last statements, along with the precinct managers' returns, the poll-lists, and all papers appertaining to the election to the board of State canvassers, who make the proper statements and determinations, declaring duly elected the persons who have received the greatest number of votes; whereupon copies of such statements and determination are furnished to such persons. This is applicable to all elections except those for governor and lieutenant-governor, in which the returns are sealed up in the respective counties and transmitted to the secretary of state, who is to deliver them to the speaker of the house of representatives at the next ensuing session of the General Assembly; and during the first week of the session, or as soon as the General Assembly shall have organized by the election of the presiding officers of the two houses, the speaker shall open and publish them in the presence of both houses; and the person having the highest number of votes shall be governor. The board of State canvassers has jurisdiction by statute to decide all cases under protest or contest that may arise, when the power to do so does not by the constitution reside in some other body. By the constitution this power as to elections for governor and lieutenant-governor resides in the General Assembly; and as to elections for members of the General Assembly resides in the respective branches thereof.

The members of the board of State canvassers who sat in the matter of the election held on 7th November ultimo, were H. E. Hayne, chairman of the board, secretary of state; F. L. Cardozo, state treasurer; T. C. Dunn, comptroller-general; H. W. Purvis, adjutant and inspector-general, and William Stone, attorney-general, of whom Hayne, Cardozo, and Dunn were candidates for re election. Notwithstanding the provisions of the constitution, making each house the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its members, and the fact that three of the members of the board were candidates for re-election and voted for on one and the same general ticket, the board determined to consider the returns of the elections of members of the General Assembly in connection with protests and contests, and that the secretary of state, the state treasurer, and comptroller-general had the right to hear and determine all questions coming before them in regard to the election of these three officers, except that no one of said officers should vote upon his own election. Such being the determination of the board avowed and made of record, and the constitution inhibiting persons exercising the functions of the executive department (and all the members of the board were members of and exercising the functions of the executive department) from assuming or discharging the duties of the judicial department necessarily exercised and involved in deciding cases of protest and contest. R. M. Sims and certain other persons as candidates and citizens applied to the supreme court of the State in the exercise of its original jurisdiction on November 14, 1876, for a writ of prohibition to restrain the board from exercising any judicial functions in regard to protests and contests, and from doing anything else than ascertaining from the managers' returns and the state ments forwarded by the boards of county canvassers the persons who had received the greatest number of votes, declaring and certifying the same to the secretary of state, and also for a writ of mandamus to compel said board to make such ascertainment, declaration, and certificate. Immediately upon notice being given that these writs would be prayed for, the board avowed, published, and made of record its determination to take no further action until the question of their powers and duties was determined by the supreme court. The court in each of these proceedings granted a rule to show cause why these writs should not issue, and continued in the presence of the board and their counsel the rule to show cause in the matter of the prohibition as an order restraining the board from doing anything sought by the proceedings to be prohibited until the determination of the proceedings. Under an order of the court in these proceedings, the board certified to the court what persons had received the greatest number of votes at said election for all of the offices, (except governor and lieutenant-governor,) including one senator and five representatives from the county of Edgefield; and one senator and three representatives from the county of Laurens; and subsequently, on the 22d November, an order was made by the court in the presence of one of the board and of its counsel, for writ of mandamus to issue to the board requiring them to perform in regard to the persons certified to the court by the board to have received the greatest number of votes for members of the General Assembly, the duties enjoined by statute naming them specially, and requiring return forthwith to said court of the execution of said writ. The writ was issued and served on the same day on all the members of the board except that one who had been present in court when the order was granted, and upon him it was served on the following day.

No return or attempt at return of the execution of the writ having been made by the said board or any of its members; and, after due notice and gracious delay on the part of the court, the board, notwithstanding the protestations and even entreaties of the court, continuing doggedly and perversely pertinacious in their disobedience of the mandate of the court, and canvassing the returns of election, excluding the two counties of Edgefield and Laurens, where the ticket upon which the members of said board were running for office was largely defeated, when there is no line or letter of law, either constitutional or statute, which confers upon said board the shadow of authority to so exclude a county from the canvass of the return or the statement of the final result, each member of the board was adjudged guilty of contempt, fined, and ordered to confinement in the jail of Richland County until released by the order of the supreme court. On the following Monday, 27th November, Judge Bond, of the circuit court of the United States for the district of South Carolina, had the members of the board brought before him on writ of habeas corpus, taken from the custody of the sheriff of Richland County, and on —— December, 1876, filed his decision, setting them at liberty, and your memorialists submit that this action of Judge Bond was without jurisdiction, illegal, unwarranted, and subversive not only of all established principles of law on the subject, of every decision made by the Supreme Court of the United States in regard to such cases, of all the boundary lines as to the jurisdiction of the courts, State and Federal, of every legal or constitutional doctrine as to the partition of power between the governments, State and Federal, but was a gross, wanton outrage upon the State of South Carolina and its highest court of judicature, and upon the rights, interest, and feelings of all good men in the State or out of it, who respect the supremacy of order, and venerate the majesty of the law.

Your memorialists most respectfully submit that this is an offense of so high, grave, and serious a nature in itself, and so pernicious in its consequences, as to bring the law and courts into contempt. Your memorialists further say that the members elect of the General Assembly from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, being unable to obtain from the said board and secretary of state the evidence of election to the offices aforesaid, obtained certificates of the action of the said court declaring their election in due form; and the said representatives from Edgefield and Laurens, being entitled thereby to enter the hall of the house of representatives and to present their credentials, went with other members of the house, in all numbering sixty-five, on the day fixed by the constitution of the State for the convening of the Legislature, to the State-house for that purpose, and were, with force and arms, excluded therefrom by the soldiers of the United States Army, commanded by Thomas H. Ruger, colonel and brevet brigadier-general, commanding United States troops in the State, who was instigated thereto by Daniel H. Chamberlain, governor of the State; and, having been so excluded, retired to a building in the same city of Columbia, known as the Carolina Hall, and organized themselves as a house according to the constitution, having sixty-five members, a lawful and constitutional quorum, and elected a speaker, William H. Wallace, and the other usual and necessary officers. That they have since regularly held their sessions and performed their usual, normal, and constitutional duties. That subsequently, in order to perform the constitutional duty of opening and publishing the returns for governor and lieutenant-governor, the said speaker, William H. Wallace, after the requisite preliminary demands and refusals, on —— December, 1876, applied to the said supreme court for a mandamus to compel the said secretary of state Hayne, and one E. W. M. Mackey, to whom said Hayne had delivered said returns, to deliver the same to said Wallace as said lawful speaker of said house. By their returns therein said Hayne and Mackey raised the question that said Mackey was lawful speaker of a lawful house of representatives, and the said supreme court, after taking full testimony and hearing full argument on both sides, on —— December, 1876, declared that the body over which Wallace presided was the lawful house of representatives and Wallace its lawful and lawfully elected speaker; and that Mackey was not speaker of the house of representatives, nor was the body which pretended to organize under him the house of representatives, having assumed to organize with only fifty-nine members, whereas the constitutional quorum was at least sixty-three.

Your memorialists further show that on the Thursday following with difficulty and danger the lawful house of representatives entered said hall of the house of representatives and there remained at the peril of their lives until the Monday following, when, in consequence of official information of the violent purposes of said Governor Chamberlain, to be supported by said troops of the United States, they left said hall and returned to the said Carolina Hall, and have ever since been excluded from said hall by said troops of the United States.

Your memorialists further say that after due notice given to the senate to be present for that purpose, the said Wallace, speaker as aforesaid, in the presence of the house of representatives and of such senators as chose to attend, acting on the highest secondary evidence, to wit, a certificate from the secretary of state, of the votes cast for governor and lieutenant-governor, and the duplicate returns filed with the clerks of the courts of said counties, independent of the original returns, which said Hayne refused to deliver, published the results, and declared your memorialists Wade Hampton elected governor and William D. Simpson lieutenant-governor of the said State. Wade Hampton having received 92,261 votes and D. H. Chamberlain 91,127 votes for governor, and William D. Simpson having received 91,6?9 votes, and R. H. Gleaves 91,550 votes for lieutenant-governor, and they were duly installed as such on the 14th day of December, 1876.

Your memorialists further show that Daniel H. Chamberlain and R. H. Gleaves, who had been respectively governor and lieutenant-governor, and whose terms expired by the constitution on the 14th December, 1876, upon the installation of Wade Hampton as governor, pretending to be governor and lieutenant-governor by virtue of a pretended publication of returns by said Mackey as pretended speaker of the illegal body claiming to be a house of representatives, made with closed doors, and guarded by said troops of the United States Army, excluding, in violation of the constitution, the returns from the counties of Edgefield and Laurens, wherein Hampton received a majority of 4,272 votes for governor and Simpson a majority of 4,235 votes for lieutenant-governor, and a pretended installation based thereon, still claim to be governor and lieutenant-governor of the State.

Your memorialists further show that the said Wade Hampton is prevented from taking peaceable possession of the executive chamber, of the great seal, and all other things appertaining to the office of governor, by armed troops of the United States, under command of Brevet Brigadier-General Thomas H. Ruger, commanding in South Carolina, who have taken armed possession of the State-house and its approaches and excluded therefrom the said governor and lieutenant-governor and house of representatives.

Wherefore your petitioners, unable to assert their rights in the premises by peaceable means, and recognizing the supremacy of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and relying upon the right and duty of Congress to guarantee to this State a republican form of government, wherein the constituted civil authorities of the State shall not be suppressed by the military, respectfully apply to your honorable bodies to cause a cessation of the unwarranted interference of the military authorities and the United States troops in the affairs of this State, and for such action as will relieve them from the unwarranted conduct of the United States authorities hereinbefore set forth, and will enable the governor, lieutenant-governor, and house of representatives peacefully to exercise the rights and peform the duties of the offices to which they have been elected.

WADE HAMPTON,
Governor of South Carolina.
W. D. SIMPSON,
Lieutenant-Governor.
W. H. WALLACE,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move to amend by providing that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to substitute the Committee on Privileges and Elections for the Committee on the Judiciary. The question is on the amendment.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 13; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL. As there is no quorum, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The question being put, the Chair declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. MORTON, Mr. MORRILL, and others called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GORDON. I ask unanimous consent to offer a resolution that it may be printed: I do not ask any action on it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MORTON. The yeas and nays have been called for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GORDON. Does the Senator from Indiana object to the introduction of the resolution?

Mr. MORTON. As soon as this matter is disposed of, I shall have no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope my friend from Indiana will not insist upon the yeas and nays, because that will compel us to come back here to-morrow and then on Monday and again on Tuesday.

Mr. MORRILL. No; we have already agreed to adjourn over.

Mr. SHERMAN. I was not aware of that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An adjournment from to-day till Tuesday has already been ordered.

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not know it.

Mr. GORDON. The Senator from Indiana will allow me to suggest that I think there will be no objection to an adjournment as soon as I can offer the resolution.

Mr. MORTON. I make no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received if there be no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. Let it be read for information.

Mr. GORDON. I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, That the State government now existing in the State of South Carolina and represented by Wade Hampton as governor is the lawful government of said State; that it is republican in form, and that every assistance necessary to sustain its proper and lawful authority in said State should be given by the United States when properly called upon for that purpose, to the end that the laws may be faithfully and promptly executed, life and property protected and defended, and all violators of law, State or national, brought to speedy punishment for their crimes.

Mr. MORTON. Let that lie over.

Mr. GORDON. I ask that the resolution be printed and lie over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes over.

Mr. MORRILL. I renew the motion that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on that.

Mr. THURMAN. I think the call for the yeas and nays may be withdrawn. There is no objection to adjourning now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana withdraw the call?

Mr. MORTON. The call for the yeas and nays was on the motion for reference, I thought.

Mr. THURMAN. No; the vote disclosed that there was no quorum, and then the Senator from Vermont moved an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And on that motion the yeas and nays were demanded.

Mr. THURMAN. Let that call be withdrawn. There is no objection to adjourning now.

Mr. MORTON. I did not ask for the yeas and nays on that question. It was on the other.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the yeas and nays were called for on the motion to adjourn, that being the last question. The Chair understands the call for the yeas and nays is now withdrawn, no one insisting on the call. The motion is that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, at twelve o'clock and thirty-one minutes p. m.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate stands adjourned until Tuesday next, at twelve o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. That motion will be in order after the morning hour; it can only be entertained now by unanimous consent.

Mr. MILLS. We are away behind on the Calendar, and I ask unanimous consent to submit the motion now.

Mr. CONGER. Is this objection day?

The SPEAKER. It is not; but the gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to submit a motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, which will dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I object.

The SPEAKER proceeded to call the committees for reports of a private nature, but no reports were made.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was put; and on a division there were—ayes 27, noes 34.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. BRIGHT. I again ask unanimous consent that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, this to be regarded as objection day.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I must object.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to offer the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk, and to which I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. BRIGHT. I am willing to hear it read, but I reserve the question of objection to my motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will first settle that question. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, this to be considered as objection day. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I think the objection ought to be renewed, and I therefore renew it. I object to any business being done in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WHITE. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee cannot take me off in that way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman was not "on his feet" until the House gave him unanimous consent to offer his resolution. It was not in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WHITE. I have been recognized by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will remember that the Chair recognized the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] with a view to proceed to the public business, as provided for under the rules, and the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee cuts of the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky for the present.

Mr. WHITE. If I remember correctly the gentleman from Tennessee had taken his seat when I offered my resolution.

Mr. COOK. I object to the reading of the resolution of the gentleman from Kentucky, and that settles it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will see that the Chair has no power to grant unanimous consent.

The question was put upon Mr. ATKINS'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 43, noes 14.

Mr. WHITE. I call for tellers. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. Less than a quorum can adjourn from day to day, under the Constitution.

Mr. WHITE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry; do I understand that the gentleman objects to my resolution.

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry at all.

The question was put upon ordering tellers and tellers were not ordered, only three members voting in favor thereof.

So the motion of Mr. ATKINS was agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. LAMAR: The petition of James Conner, of South Carolina, for the removal of the political disabilities imposed upon him by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By the SPEAKER: The petition of William Welsh, Henry Armitt Brown, A. J. Drexel, Henry C. Lea, R. Rundle Smith, Edwin M. Lewis, John Wannemaker, W. C. Harward, and other citizens of Philadelphia, of all political parties, declaring that the questions arising from the late presidential election should be dealt with in a spirit predetermined to harmonize conflicting views, irrespective of success or defeat of individual candidates, that a partisan contest in Congress resulting in the proclamation of a President without the acquiesence of both Houses, would destroy the confidence of the people in the justice of the decision adopted, and urging that both houses will earnestly seek some mode of reaching a decision of the pending questions that will satisfy the conscience of the country, to the Committee on Counting the Electoral Vote.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted for withdrawal from the files of the House of the papers, among which is a United States bond for $1,000 issued the 12th day of June, 1780, to John Galbraith, relating to the petition of William Watkins, of Logan County, Kentucky, that said bond be paid, and their reference to the Committee on War Claims.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 30, 1876.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Journal of yesterday's proceedings be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the object of the gentleman is to demonstrate the fact that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. CLYMER. There is evidently no quorum present. In the absence of a quorum, I must object to reading the Journal.

The SPEAKER. It is manifest to the Chair that there is not a quorum of members present.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the House now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. Before the reading of the Journal, it is competent for the House to determine whether or not a quorum is present. That can be ascertained upon the motion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] that the House now adjourn.

The motion w s agreed to; and accordingly (at twelve o'clock and six minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with previous order, adjourned until twelve o'clock m. on Wednesday next, January 3, 1877.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 2, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, December 29, 1876, was read and approved.

CHANGE OF NAME OF VESSEL.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I want to make a request of the Senate, to be permitted to pass a bill in a mode not quite in order; and therefore I venture to make the request now before petitions are called for. I have in my hand a House bill permitting a citizen of Massachusetts to change the name of a vessel. It has been referred to the Committee on Commerce and I have no formal authority from the committee to report it; but the member of the House having it in charge has taken pains to comply with the utmost requirement which the committee exacts in such cases. There, is and there can be, no objection to the bill. Time is quite important, and at the request of gentlemen from Massachusetts, members of Congress and others, I ask the Senate to discharge the committee, take up the bill, and put it on its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the committee being discharged? The Chair hears none.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 4116) to change the name of the steamship Whirlwind to that of Arcadia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KELLY presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of the passage of a law requiring the grantees of lands to aid in the construction of certain wagon-roads to make selections of the lieu lands to which they may be entitled; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of the reduction of the price of public lands within the limits of certain railroad grants to $1.25 per acre; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of granting the public lands to settlers in tracts larger than one hundred and sixty acres and for less than $1.25 per acre where such lands require irrigation to render them productive; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of making Snake River the common boundary between the State of Oregon and the Territory of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of granting pensions to the surviving soldiers and sailors who were engaged in the Mexican war; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of appropriating $100,000 to improve the channel and harbor of the Coquille River in Oregon; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation by Congress to survey the entrance to Alsea Bay and to buoy out the channel from the ocean to the bay; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation to improve the Upper Willamette River; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of an appropriation to remove the obstructions in the Columbia River and open it to free navigation; which was referred to the Select Committee on Transportation Routes to the Seaboard.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Oregon, in favor of making an appropriation for a geological survey of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented the petition of George W. Jackson, sr., and 17 others, praying for the passage of House bill No. 2685, to provide for the payment of claims under the Geneva award; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WITHERS presented the petition of Dr. H. W. M. Washington, a citizen of the State of Virginia, praying the removal of his political disabilities; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Henry B. Woodhouse, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying his restoration to the pension-rolls; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania, presented a memorial of shipmasters, merchants, and others, citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the passage by the Senate of House bill No. 3187, being an amendment to the shipping act; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The papers pertaining to the claim of John D. Thorne for compensation for cotton alleged to have been seized by United States forces in May, 1863, presented by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] on the 29th ultimo, were by mistake referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. I move that that committee be discharged and that the petition and papers be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT presented additional papers in the case of John E. Woodward, of Kentucky, praying compensation for certain losses sustained by him; which, together with the papers now on file relating to this claim, were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PROPOSED COURT FOR CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. WRIGHT. While I have the floor I wish to make a statement. It will be remembered that on the 18th of December last I introduced a bill known as Senate bill No. 1082, with reference to a court for the trial of contested elections. I then gave notice that I should immediately after the recess, if I could get the floor, the bill being upon the table, ask to take it from the table and submit some remarks in support of the bill to the Senate. If it shall be the pleasure of the Senate to hear me, I propose on Thursday next after the expiration of the morning hour, or when the morning business shall be through, to ask their attention while I submit some remarks in support of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the bill?

Mr. WRIGHT. A bill to establish a court for the trial of contested elections in the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PATTERSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1103) for the relief of the heirs or legal representatives of François Cazeau; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1104) establishing a mail-route in Oregon; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1105) to amend the act entitled "An act granting a portion of the United States military reservation at Salt Lake City for cemetery purposes;" which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. INGALLS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1106) granting a pension to Sylvester Wilcox; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1107) extending the act of July 2, 1862, to the State of Colorado, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT. If there be no further morning business, in pursuance of notice given some days since I ask that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information subject to objection.

Mr. INGALLS. When this bill was previously sought to be brought before the Senate I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that if he wished to press it after the recess he would give me notice to that effect. Not having received any intimation from him on the subject I presumed that he had concluded to withhold his action; and I am not prepared at this time to present the views that I wish to submit to the Senate on the subject.

Mr. WRIGHT. On the contrary, I think my friend will remember that my language was that I should press it, and if I concluded not to do so I would advise him. I certainly used that language at the time that we had a conversation with reference to the bill. If my friend, however, states that he is not prepared to proceed with the consideration of the bill this morning, and that he has been misled, of course I shall not insist upon the consideration of the bill, and will not press it now.

Mr. INGALLS. It was my understanding that the bill was not to be called up without previous notice having been given to me. That was the inference which I drew from the language used by the Senator when he called the attention of the Senate to the bill before the recess.

Mr. WRIGHT. I feel very well assured that my friend quite misunderstood me; but he stating now that he had a different understanding of this matter from mine I shall not press the bill. I give notice, however, that I shall do so to-morrow if I can get the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOUTWELL. If the Senator from Iowa waives his request, I will ask the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the Statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information, subject to objection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. It may perhaps suit the convenience of the Senate better that the bill should be read by paragraphs and each proposition disposed of as reached, as they are separate propositions, not in any way connected with each other. I therefore ask, if there be no objection, that the bill, when taken up, be read and considered by topics.

Mr. SHERMAN. As this is a very important bill, so important as to involve the revision of the Revised Statutes of the United States, I suggest to the Senator whether it ought to be taken up when the Senate is so thin. I doubt if there is a quorum present; and questions of importance, of doubtful construction, may arise in the progress of the bill. I see around me scarce any members of the Judiciary Committee, and I think not a quorum of the Senate. I will ask a call of the Senate to see how many Senators are present.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well.

Mr. BOGY. There is a good deal of other business that might be transacted.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the Senator from Massachusetts chooses to waive this matter until some morning business can be disposed of, I will not insist upon the call.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well, if it can be done without the bill losing its place.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTWELL. With that understanding I will not press it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio insist on a call of the Senate?

Mr. SHERMAN. I waive it for the present in order to let other business be presented.

OSAGE INDIAN FUND.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4272) authorizing the use of certain funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians, to report it without amendment, and I ask that it may be put on its passage this morning. It is rather important that it should pass immediately.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. May I inquire from what committee this bill comes?

Mr. ALLISON. From the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CONKLING. Did the Senator from Iowa examine it himself?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir. I ask that a letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may be read. Do I understand the Senator from New York to object?

Mr. CONKLING. No, I abstain from objecting for one, because the Senator from Iowa, in whom I have so much confidence, says that he understands the bill and that it is all right.

Mr. ALLISON. I am obliged to the Senator.

Mr. CONKLING. As I have asked a question, however, I will add one remark. It has recently occurred in the Senate, as is better known to some other Senators than to me, that in a case somewhat like this great injustice has been inadvertently done. I am very glad that in this case the Senator from Iowa does know personally the merits of the measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to issue a sum not exceeding $50,000 from funds now in the Treasury belonging to the Osage Indians, under an act of July 15, 1870, to be expended for their benefit, to aid them in agriculture, for their care and support, and in extending improvements already begun on their reservation, and in any other manner to promote their civilization and improvement.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may be read, which fully explains the circumstances requiring the passage of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be reported.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
December 14, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor to present herewith, for your consideration, a copy of a letter dated the 1st instant, addressed to William Nicholson, superintendent of Indian affairs, by Cyrus Bude, agent for the Osages, calling his attention to the destitute condition of said Indians, and asking on behalf and at the request of said Indians what steps, if any, have been taken to obtain from Congress an appropriation from their own funds to relieve their present necessities and to aid them to plant crops in the coming spring.

These Indians, numbering three thousand, prior to 1874, lived mainly upon buffalo meat and the proceeds of the sales of robes. On the breaking out of hostilities in that year, between the Cheyennes and other plains Indians and the Government, the Osages were obliged to forego their hunt, and this threw them upon the Government for their entire support. This support was supplied, however, from their own funds, Congress having authorized the expenditure, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and June 30, 1876, of funds then in the Treasury, belonging to them. The same aid was asked at the last session of Congress for the present fiscal year, but this was denied. The failure to make the necessary appropriation prevented the Department from giving the needed assistance in seeds, plowing, and planting, while an unprecedented flood destroyed the largest portion of such limited crops as were raised.

For these reasons the Osages are now in a destitute condition, and although one of the richest nations of Indians on the continent, are on the verge of starvation.

The Department has been enabled to support them thus far during the present fiscal year from the limited amount of funds at its disposal arising from the interest of funds belonging to them and held by the Government.

These funds are now nearly exhausted and it becomes a question of grave importance as to their maintenance during the balance of the current fiscal year.

The following is a statement of the funds held by the Government belonging to the Osages:

Stocks	$40,236 63
Money in the Treasury	1,310,567 66

all arising from the sales of lands, and every dollar of which has been paid into the Treasury, still remains there, and belongs to them.

The aid asked for is not the aid accorded the Sioux, for whom large gratuitous appropriations are annually made. The Osages do not need, neither do they ask, the bounty of the Government; but they do need assistance and ask that the Government allow the use of a small portion of what is their own to save them from utter destitution and, in some cases, starvation.

It seems to me that the request of these people deserves the highest consideration, and for this reason I recommend that Congress be asked to at once afford the necessary relief, and to this end I forward herewith a projet of a bill authorizing the use of $50,000 of their funds now in the Treasury under the act of July 15, 1870, (statutes 16, page 362,) and respectfully request that it be transmitted to Congress and immediate action thereon urged.

Very respectfully, &c.,

J. Q. SMITH, Commissioner.

The Honorable SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Mr. KERNAN. Will the chairman of the committee state whether these Indians have an agent resident here?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir, they have no agent here?

Mr. KERNAN. Is the Senator satisfied that they are in need, and ask this aid themselves?

Mr. ALLISON. I am very well satisfied from the statement made by the superintendent of Indian Affairs, Dr. Nicholson, a very worthy man, and also from the statement of their agent and the letter of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, that these Indians are in such a condition as to require this sum for their immediate support, and to enable them to produce crops next year. They have a very large fund of their own.

Mr. KERNAN. This is for subsistence?

Mr. ALLISON. This is for their present support, and to supply them with seeds, &c., for their crops next year.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for a division on the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the bill read at length on its third reading.

Mr. INGALLS. Before the bill is read I venture to express the hope the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will allow this bill to pass without calling for a division.

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it an exceedingly bad rule to pass a bill of this importance without a quorum of the Senate here. This bill has only been reported this morning. From the letter which has just been read, I have no doubt that it is all right; but I think it is an exceedingly bad rule that we should pass a bill of this importance without any quorum of the Senate being present, and for that reason I called for a division. I do not think there is a quorum present. I have counted the Senate, and according to my count there has not been a quorum present this morning. If we can do business without a quorum, it is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not ask that it be read at length now. I am told what it is.

The bill was read the third time by its title, and passed.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask leave to introduce, without notice and out of order, a bill (S. No. 1108) to enable the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claims against the United States under existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court, and I give notice that I shall move to substitute this for the bill which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] has given notice of his intention to press upon the Senate.

Leave was granted to introduce the bill, and it was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want a vote on the second reading of that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go over.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I do not object to the second reading being made now. I want to find out whether there is a quorum here or not. It is said there is not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill be read a second time?

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 11, noes 0; no quorum voting.

Mr. SHERMAN. Call the roll. There are several present who did not vote. I should like to know how many Senators are present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on the second reading of the bill.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Chaffee, Conkling, Cragin, Davis, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Ingalls, Jones of Florida, Kernan, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Norwood, Paddock, Patterson, Sherman, Withers, and Wright—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Cockrell, Edmunds, and McCreery—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Blaine, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Kelly, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Price, Randolph, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, Wallace, West, Whyte, and Windom—46.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unanimous consent not having been given, the bill goes over. There is no quorum present.

Mr. MORRILL. As I cannot now get up the bill I proposed to call up, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at twelve o'clock and thirty-two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, January 3, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

THOMAS J. ROBERTSON, from the State of South Carolina, appeared in his seat to-day.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the exhaustion of the appropriation for the transportation of United States notes and securities and recommending an additional appropriation of $40,000 for that service for the remainder of the present fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DORSEY presented a memorial of the mayor and city council of the town of Hot Springs, Arkansas; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

A memorial to the Congress of the United States for the disposal of the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists would respectfully represent that they are now, and have been from one to twenty-five years, settlers and residents upon the four sections of land known and designated as the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas. That during said term of years the title has been in dispute, which by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered April 24, 1876, is now wholly vested in the United States. That prior to said decision substantial improvements had been erected, numbering not less than one thousand, and consisting of hotels, store-houses, bath-houses, out-buildings, fencing, street and steam railroads, gas-works, churches, and public buildings, aggregating in value $300,000 or more. Said buildings and improvements, with a few exceptions, represent all the means your memorialists had at the date of said decision, which fact may not be questioned when it is further represented that nine-tenths of the settlers came here as invalids, with exhausted means and impaired health, and remain here for the use of the hot water.

We would further represent that by virtue of law and instructions of the United States Court of Claims, a receiver has charge of all the land and buildings, collecting a yearly rental for the occupation of the buildings and the use of the waters. That has necessarily depressed business, and in a brief time will impoverish the whole people. The annual rental, as fixed and collected by the receiver, will exceed $75,000. In view of the fact that the material value of this property is the result of individual capital and labor, we respectfully ask that your honorable body will, at an early day of the present session, make such disposition of the same as in your wisdom and discretion may be deemed equitable to the settlers and just to the Government and the whole people of the United States.

The Senators and members of Congress from the State of Arkansas are urged and requested to use their best endeavors to secure the speedy consideration of the subject presented in the foregoing memorial; and we will, as in duty bound, ever pray.

Mr. SPENCER presented a memorial of ship-masters, ship-owners, merchants, and others, of Mobile, Alabama, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 3187, to amend the shipping act; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Mrs. Clementine J. Lake, praying compensation for property destroyed by the United States forces, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Macondray & Co., and other merchants of San Francisco, California, praying compensation for losses sustained by them in April, 1854, by the falling of the bonded warehouse where their goods were then stored, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Cole, Sizer & Brink, praying to be compensated for damages alleged to have arisen to them by the failure of the War Department to carry out the terms of a purchase by them from the Government through General O. O. Howard of certain lands, materials, &c., at Augusta, Georgia, known as the Augusta Powder Mills property, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the papers relating to the claim of Martha A. Ashburn, widow of George W. Ashburn, deceased, praying compensation for certain property taken by United States troops during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 531) for the relief of Captain James M. Beeber, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs; which was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1109) relating to public accounts and claims; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

CENTRAL PACIFIC RAILROAD REPORT.

Mr. BOOTH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to communicate to the Senate the last annual report of the Central Pacific Railroad Company.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I now move, pursuant to notice given yesterday, that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I asked the Senate yesterday to consider the bill reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States. I believe it was not taken up. I had the impression at the time that the Senate had agreed to take it up, but the RECORD shows otherwise. The Senate is not very full to-day, and I hope that I may be allowed to present this bill and have it disposed of. It is a matter of public importance. The House has passed this bill correcting omissions in the revision of the laws, and I am very anxious in the public interest, not on personal grounds, that it should be disposed of at this session of Congress. As we go on the difficulties of disposing of a purely business and legal matter will increase. I hope the Senator from Iowa will allow his bill to go over to-day and indulge me in asking the consideration of the Senate to the bill I have named.

Mr. WRIGHT. I feel exceedingly anxious to accommodate my friend from Massachusetts, but this bill was reported at the last Congress from the Judiciary Committee, and it fell of course with that Congress. At the last session it was reported again. It has been upon the Calendar from that time to this, and is among the first bills upon this Calendar. If it is a matter of any importance to be acted upon it is meet and proper that it should be acted upon at once or at as early a day as possible. I do not think myself that it ought to take much, if any, time. My impression is that the bill itself is so plain upon its merits, and will be accepted by the Senate as so just and proper that but little, if any, discussion will be necessary. I shall, therefore, with every disposition to accommodate my friend from Massachusetts, feel it to be my duty to ask a vote of the Senate at least upon taking up this bill. I have nothing to say with reference to the merits of the bill at this time. The question has been pending before the Departments for some years. There have been different constructions of the statutes, and the Judiciary Committee has esteemed it important to have a construction of the law by Congress at as early a day as possible to avoid the granting of further lands and subsidies in aid of this road. If the Senate, when they come to consider the bill, think that the door ought to be still left open and the bars down, they can so determine. We have deemed it necessary and proper, absolutely advisable, to pass some such bill as this. In view of the length of time that the bill has been pending, twice reported from the committee, the fact that I have on several occasions made an effort to get it before the Senate constrains me to insist at this time upon having a vote of the Senate at least upon taking it up.

Mr. MORRILL. Will the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to call up a bill that will only take the time necessary to read it in order to have it passed? It has been reported unanimously from the Committee on Finance, and ought to have been passed at the last session. It is merely for the relief of a collector in Georgia, a case of a great deal of hardship, and the bill ought to be passed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I prefer that my friend would at least allow this bill to be taken up; and I will yield to him, when it is taken up, with very great pleasure.

Mr. INGALLS. I trust the Senate will concur with the request made by the Senator from Massachusetts, to proceed to the consideration of the bill reported by him in regard to the revision of the statutes. That certainly is a matter of very great and very urgent and very immediate importance. I suppose there is no subject before the Senate which the attention of the Senate is more frequently called to than this. There can be no question that it should be acted upon promptly and without any further delay. The bill that the Senator from Iowa asks the Senate now to consider is one, as he himself says, that asks the Senate and Congress to put a construction upon a statute that has been for some twelve or fifteen years in force as a law. It has always seemed to me that the construction of statutes is a matter for the courts to determine and not for Congress; that when Congress has once passed a law and rights have vested or accrued under it, the question as to the existence of those rights or the construction of that statute is for the courts and not for Congress.

So far as the immediate question involved in this bill is concerned, if the necessity for it ever existed it has long since passed away. There has been no action by the corporation before the Departments or before any of the branches of the Government for the last four years. They pursued what they thought to be their legal rights in the tribunals that were established by the statutes under which they claimed those rights, to their final determination, and there the matter rests. They are not here; they are not before any Department of the Government, asking any further relief. There is no measure here asking for bonds, or for a grant of land, or for any further interpretation of the statutes. Therefore, the necessity for the action that is now invoked by the Senator from Iowa has long since passed away. It is no longer a matter of the slightest concern to Congress or to any branch of this Government. The corporation themselves have proceeded under what they conceived to be their rights to construct twenty miles more of road beyond the one hundredth mile which they reached in 1868. That twenty miles will soon be in active operation. When it is in operation, then under existing statutes the corporation will have the right to apply to the Departments for an adjudication as to their rights to claim further grant or aid in bonds or in lands. It, therefore, seems to me that it is superfluous and unnecessary to take up the time of the Senate upon a matter of this kind. Beyond that, it is unjust because the statute having been passed twelve or fourteen years ago and this corporation having proceeded under it, it is now certainly grossly in violation of principles of law and equity to ask Congress to pass an act that shall forbid any Department of the Government from putting any other construction upon that statute than that which is now urged to be the proper one by the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. WRIGHT. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa will state his point of order.

Mr. WRIGHT. The point I make is this: If the merits of this bill are to be discussed on a motion to take up, I want to understand it so that I may discuss the matter also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas will confine himself to the question of taking up the bill, and not enter upon the merits.

Mr. INGALLS. That is what I was doing closely. I was endeavoring to show the Senate why it was desirable and reasonable and proper that they should proceed to the consideration of the bill asked by the Senator from Massachusetts rather than to that asked by the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have only one word to say about this matter. All the suggestions made by the Senator that the Departments have suspended any action are well answered by the fact that the action already taken by the Senate in the resolution under which the Committee on the Judiciary made its report has tied up the Departments, for they were expressly told not to take any action until this report came in. If this Congress shall adjourn without taking action upon this bill, then their hands will be untied again and they will be at perfect liberty to go on and dispose of these lands and grant these subsidies under the decision that has been made there.

As a reason for taking up the bill, I have only to say in conclusion that it is among the oldest bills on the Calendar. It is a matter involving about $8,000,000 in lands and bonds. It is for the Senate to say whether they will take it up at this time or whether they will vote it down, for a vote refusing to take up the bill I shall regard as settling the bill upon its merits and I shall not seek further to make an effort to take it up.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa bases his reason for asking the immediate consideration of this bill by the Senate upon the fact that unless the action he invokes is now taken the Departments may proceed to act and thereby involve the Government perhaps in the appropriation of $8,000,000 in bonds and in lands. I beg simply to say, in answer to that one suggestion alone, that that action of the Department was suspended on the 12th day of March, 1873, upon a resolution offered at a special session of the Senate by the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] calling the attention of the committee to this subject, and asking that until the report was made no Department of the Government should issue any land patent or bonds to the corporations named in the resolution. In pursuance of that resolution action was suspended. There has never been any action asked for or any action attempted by any Department of the Government at the instance of any one of the corporations named. There is none invoked. I am authorized to say that the corporation itself at which this resolution was particularly aimed has no intention of pressing this matter at the present time before the Departments. Therefore, as I say, the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa is without force.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 60.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 35, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Clayton, Cockrell, Conkling, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Price, Randolph, Sherman, Spencer, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Cragin, and Patterson—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Barnum, Blaine, Bruce, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Windom—37.

So the motion was agreed to.

JAMES ATKINS.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Iowa was kind enough to say that if this bill were taken up he would give way informally for the Senate to act upon Senate bill No. 1040.

Mr. WRIGHT. I give way informally, of course.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 1040) to allow the late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia his salary hitherto withheld.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Finance with an amendment to strike out the preamble and all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of the State of Georgia, be, and he is hereby, allowed, in the settlement of his accounts, the sum of $7,750.03 on account of items of assessments and abatements, and the further sum of $1,415.08 on account of expenses incurred by him in the performance of the duties of his office.

Mr. MORRILL. There is a report. If any one desires further information in relation to the bill I am ready to give it, or the report may be read. I will simply say that this man collected over $3,000,000 at the South immediately after the war; that some of his deputies were defaulters; that he lost all of his property, $25,000; and that his accounts still remain unsettled, no allowance having been made for his salary. The Committee on Finance were unanimous in believing that it was a case of great merit, and the Department of Internal Revenue have sent a letter with full details in relation to the matter, saying that the party is entitled to the sum reported in the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say in corroboration of what has been said by the Senator from Vermont, that it once became, perhaps twice became, the duty of the Committee on Commerce in another regard to investigate this matter. They were satisfied, as the Senator from Vermont says the Committee on Finance were satisfied, of the merit of the case, of its equity and propriety. I would inquire of the Senator from Vermont whether a slight addition which was proposed to the bill as reported at the last session has been made, an addition necessary in consequence of the fact to which the Department called attention in a letter which was mislaid but which perhaps has been found since.

Mr. MORRILL. We have reported it according to the letter of August 14, 1876.

Mr. CONKLING. So I understand the change to which I have called the Senator's attention has been made, and I make no objection to the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I will say that this is not as much as the party himself thinks he is entitled to, but he would rather receive this sum than to have no action at all on the subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize sundry allowances to James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia, in the settlement of his accounts."

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. WRIGHT rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa now asks for the consideration of the bill temporarily laid aside.

Mr. WRIGHT. Yes, sir.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes. It declares that neither the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; nor the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;" nor the act approved July 3, 1866, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862,' approved July 2, 1864;" nor all of these acts, nor any section or sections, portion or portions, of all or any thereof, shall be so construed by any officer or department of the Government as to authorize the issuance to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, or the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, of any bonds of the United States, or of any patents for lands, as subsidies for the construction of any extension of the road provided for in the thirteenth section of the act approved July 1, 1862, in excess of one hundred miles next to the Missouri River; nor shall any action of any officer or department of the Government of the United States heretofore, or that may be hereafter, taken, or of any railroad company, be so construed as to authorize the issuance of bonds or patents for lands for any such extension, it being declared to be the true intent and meaning of the acts named that, for the construction of the road contemplated by section 13, lands and bonds were granted for one hundred miles next to the Missouri River, and no more.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I have no desire or purpose to discuss this bill upon its merits unless some inquiry shall be made by Senators or unless some explanation shall be asked.

The bill has been twice reported by the Judiciary Committee. There was when it was first reported a somewhat lengthy report setting forth all the facts and the grounds upon which the committee based its conclusion. That report has been upon the files of the Senate for some two years and more. Standing at present upon this report and what I believe to be the clear merits of the bill itself, unless it is desired on the part of some Senator that there shall be some explanation, I shall not take up the time of the Senate with discussion. If there shall be such request I shall take pleasure in making a statement of the bill, its objects and purposes. Perhaps I had as well do so briefly, inasmuch as though the facts are not very complicated, a short statement may aid very much to the solution of the question.

Under the legislation giving aid to the railroads in the West in 1862 and 1864 and subsequently, provision was made for the aid of three roads, as I will now term them, to connect with the Union Pacific at the one hundredth meridian. It is well that this be understood to start with. Three roads were provided for, one starting from Sioux City, another starting from the Missouri River at Omaha and Council Bluffs, and the other from the mouth of the Kansas. Thus it will be seen that there were three roads starting from the east of the Missouri River to connect with the main line at or near the one hundredth meridian. Each of these lines of road was to have subsidies in the form of lands and bonds. Then a provision was made for the aid of an intermediate road or branch between the mouth of the Kansas and Omaha, the road known as a connection or continuance of the Hannibal and Saint Jo, and it was to pass through Atchison. It was contemplated at that time that this fourth branch or arm would connect with the road starting from the mouth of the Kansas, at about a distance of one hundred miles from the Missouri River. It was expected that the road from the mouth of the Kansas running to the one hundredth meridian, so as to connect with the main line at or near that point, would so run in a northwest direction as that the road from Saint Jo through Atchison would connect at about the distance of one hundred miles. The law provided that this road, now known as the Union Pacific Central Branch, should have aid for the distance of one hundred miles and no more. Whether it took one hundred and fifty miles or one hundred and twenty-five or any number of miles to reach the point contemplated on the road from the mouth of the Kansas, it was to have aid for the one hundred miles and no more.

Subsequently Congress provided that the road from the mouth of the Kansas, instead of striking the main line at the one hundredth meridian, might strike it at any point west of that, thereby, you will see at once, contemplating or allowing a divergence to the west farther west than was originally contemplated; and subsequently still Congress provided that this same road might be so constructed as to strike the Union Pacific road at any point not farther west than fifty miles west of Denver, and the road was so constructed as that it went to Denver and thence north to the Union Pacific road at Cheyenne.

It will be seen at once that under this last legislation the route of this road from the mouth of the Kansas was so changed as that the intermediate road, or what I term the Union Pacific Central Branch, could not reach this line within one hundred miles. Thereupon this company that was entitled to a subsidy for one hundred miles in lands and bonds claimed the right to occupy the ground from the point they would have struck the road as originally expected from the mouth of the Kansas to the one hundredth meridian, making a distance of about two hundred and twenty-five miles, and to get bonds and lands for the whole two hundred and twenty-five miles. In other words, they claimed that, as the company running a line from the mouth of the Kansas were allowed to change its route by the subsequent legislation of Congress, this route, which was originally expected to be occupied by the road from the mouth of the Kansas River, was left unoccupied and that they themselves had a right to build to the one hundredth meridian, or near there, and take lands and bonds in place of the other road. This question was submitted to the Departments. It was decided against the company by the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Browning. It was again brought to the attention of the Department while Governor Cox was the Secretary of the Interior and decided again against the company. It was referred to the Attorney-General, Mr. Akerman, who examined it very fully and delivered to the Secretary of the Interior a very elaborate opinion, very full upon all the facts and all the law, against the right of the company to those lands. The company by their counsel insisted that that opinion should be reviewed. The Secretary of the Interoir suggested a review of the opinion. The Attorney-General said he was prepared to review it, if they could present any new facts or suggest any ground to satisfy him that he was probably in error. While the matter was thus pending the company withdrew their claim; no longer insisted upon having it decided by the Attorney-General. The Attorney-General returned the papers and said that he in no manner changed his opinion, but adhered to what he had said touching the rights of the company and the obligations of the Government. Again it was referred to the Department, the company going before the Department and insisting on these lands. Mr. Williams being the Attorney-General declined to take it up for the reason that he had been of counsel in some way connected with this question before he was Attorney-General. It was then referred to the Solicitor-General, Mr. Bristow. He stated that he felt that it would not be proper on his part to examine the question, as it had been decided by the prior Attorney-General and as the then Attorney-General declined to take cognizance of it. They still persisted, and it was presented to Mr. Phillips, Solicitor-General, and he decided that they had a right to build the road and take the lands and bonds

While the question was in this condition the resolution which led to the present bill being reported was introduced, and the matter has been tied up from that time to this.

The committee, after examining the whole question in all its facts as we think with exceeding great care, in view of the departmental history, in view of what had been decided by the Attorney-General of the United States, in view of what is unquestionably correct under the statute, reported this bill, by which it will be seen that the Departments are prevented from issuing any other bonds or lands in aid of this road. The grounds upon which we base this conclusion and this recommendation are set forth in the report. The law is clear, explicit, that they are entitled to subsidy for the one hundred miles, and no more. We hold by this report, and believe it to be the law, that it was entirely competent for Congress to change the route of the road starting from the mouth of the Kansas; that when these persons took under this law allowing them a subsidy for one hundred miles, they took with perfect knowledge that Congress would have a right to change the route of that road, and that there was no failure on the part of the company starting from the mouth of the Kansas to build as contemplated by these laws to fulfill their contract, and that they acted in accordance with the law of Congress authorizing them to change their route, and when they changed the route this company having the right to build this road could go on and build it to the one hundredth meridian if they wanted to do so. There is no question about that. But they took their grant with the knowledge that under the law they could get subsidy but for the one hundred miles. They can build, but they can get no subsidy beyond that distance. The object of this bill is to prevent any increase of that subsidy or their getting an acre of land or a dollar in bonds for any mile beyond the one hundred miles.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I believe there is a written report accompanying this bill. I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers do not show a report.

Mr. INGALLS. There is a report made at the Forty-third Congress, first session, Report No. 169.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the report submitted by Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, on the 10th of March, 1874.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore, (at one o'clock p. m.) The morning hour has expired.

Mr. WRIGHT. I trust we shall proceed with the consideration of this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of the bill pending at the close of the morning hour?

Mr. BOUTWELL. I do not like to object, but enough has been disclosed by the discussion and by the reading of the report as far as it has progressed to show that the object is now merely to declare by congressional enactment what is the true interpretation of a law passed ten or fifteen years ago. I submit to the Senate that there are other matters much more pressing and in their results much more important to the country than the declaration by a legislative assembly of the true interpretation of a statute. If it is to be interpreted, it should be interpreted by the courts; and I think I may add that anything we may do will not affect the decision of a court in any particular if any case growing out of this controversy should be before any judicial tribunal of the country. I think we had better take the vote of the Senate on the question of proceeding, and I object for that purpose.

Mr. WRIGHT. I supposed the bill being before the Senate there would be no objection to continuing its consideration after the conclusion of the morning hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is not unanimous consent given, it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business. The Chair will do so if the Senator from Massachusetts persists in his objection.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Yes, sir. I think it my duty to object to the consumption of time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move then to postpone——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will entertain the motion after calling up the unfinished business, which is Senate bill No. 1108. The question is on ordering the bill to be read a second time. The Senator from Iowa moves the postponement of the present and all prior orders for the purpose of continuing the consideration of Senate bill No. 60.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to have the Clerk report the title of Senate bill No. 1108.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. No. 1108) to enable the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company to submit its claims against the United States under existing laws to the decision of the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the unfinished business. The question is on postponing it and continuing the consideration of Senate bill No. 60.

Mr. INGALLS. I desire to say a single word, and that is that this bill was arrested on its second reading yesterday by the objection of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] who desired in that way to ascertain whether a quorum of the Senate was present or not. In the present condition of that bill I suppose it cannot be offered as a substitute for the bill that is now before the Senate, and I presume that no Senator desires to interpose any objection to the second reading of that bill, the necessity for which the objection was first made having passed away. I ask that the bill may be read a second time, as of course, and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the bill being read the second time? The Chair hears none.

The bill was read the second time by its title.

Mr. INGALLS. Let it lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the bill will lie on the table.

PRODUCTION OF TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move now that the Senate proceed with the consideration of Senate bill No. 60.

The question being put, the ayes were 20.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let us have the yeas and nays. There is certainly a quorum here.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORTON. Before that is done I ask leave to make a report, accompanied by a resolution, which I ask to have laid on the table and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WRIGHT. Not to displace this matter?

Mr. MORTON. Not at all. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection. The Secretary will read the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by resolution of the Senate to inquire into the facts attending the late presidential election in the State of Oregon and concerning the casting of the electoral vote of that State, beg leave to report to the Senate:

That one William M. Turner was called as a witness by the said committee, and, after having been duly sworn, had the following questions propounded to him and made the following answers thereto:

Question. (by the chairman.) Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had asked to have that canvass withheld until he could get there?

Answer. I cannot answer that question.

Q. Have you any knowledge on that subject?

A. No, sir; nothing that could be made public.

Q. Explain what you mean by that.

A. Our knowledge on political subjects and all others, of course, has to be very sacred. It would be a violation of the law of the State to divulge anything that passes over the telegraphic wires and also a violation of the rules of the company.

Q. I propose to ask the witness the question if he knows of any dispatch passing through that office, on the part of Mr. Patrick or any one else, asking that that canvass be deferred until he could get there.

A. I ask to be excused from answering that question.

Q. You decline to answer?

A. I must decline.

Q. Upon the ground before stated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you cannot divulge anything passing on the wires?

A. I cannot do it.

Q. What do you know, if anything, in regard to $8,000 being transferred from New York to Salem or to Portland at any time after the election in November and up to the time that the electors cast their votes?

The WITNESS. Transferred in what manner?

The CHAIRMAN. What do you know about money being sent from New York or persons there being authorized to draw for $8,000?

A. I do not know anything with regard to the transfer of any money that would be a public matter. We have a great deal of business of that kind going through the offices, and as a matter of course it only concerns those who are interested.

Q. Do you know of any dispatch being sent to Salem or to Portland from New York authorizing any person there to draw for $8,000?

A. I must decline to answer that.

Q. Do you know of any dispatch having been sent by Charles Dimond, or a man named Dimond, in New York, to Ladd & Bush, in Salem, in regard to $8,000 or any sum of money?

A. I cannot answer.

Q. Do you mean to say that you cannot answer or that you decline to answer?

A. I decline.

Q. You decline to answer?

A. I decline to answer any question touching anything that passes over the telegraph wires.

Q. Did you simply say that you decline to answer or do you mean to say that there was no such dispatch?

A. I decline to answer questions of that character.

Q. Now I propose to ask this witness the question directly, if there was not a dispatch passing through that office from Charles Dimond to Ladd and Tilton, in Portland, authorizing them to draw for $8,000.

A. I must be excused from answering any questions of that character.

Q. I put this as occurring subsequent to the 25th of November, and before the first Wednesday in December.

A. I decline answering any questions, as I remarked, touching the business over the wires.

Q. I ask if you know anything in regard to another sum of $17,000 that was authorized in New York to be drawn by Ladd and Tilton, in Portland, subsequent to the presidential election?

A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it.

Q. You do not then decline to answer that on this ground?

A. I decline on the same ground.

The committee have been informed that it is important to have the witness answer these questions, as the answers may be material in the investigation of the matter intrusted to the committee, and submit to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That William M. Turner is in duty bound under his oath to answer the questions that have been propounded to him as above stated, and that he cannot excuse himself from answering the same by reason of his official connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company as the manager of their office at Jacksonville, Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report and resolution will be ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORTON. I give notice that I will ask to have the resolution taken up for action to-morrow morning.

BILL RECOMMITTED.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to recommit to the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (S. No. 611) relating to the equitable and legal right of parties in possession of certain lands and improvements thereon in California, and to provide jurisdiction to determine those rights. One of the members of the committee who had it in charge is informed that the proofs were not presented as they were intended to have been, and it is desirable to have the case re-examined. I move that the bill be recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa has moved the present consideration of the bill S. No. 60, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The yeas and nays were taken.

Before the result of the vote was announced,

Mr. PADDOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has yet appeared on this vote. The Chair thinks there is a quorum in the Senate and has been this morning. The motion of the Senator from Nebraska is not in order unless there is a quorum disclosed on the vote.

Mr. WRIGHT. Would it be in order to move a call of the Senate at this time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be.

Mr. INGALLS, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. NORWOOD, Mr. MAXEY, and Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania, entered the Chamber and voted.

The result was then announced—yeas 32, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Bogy, Booth, Burnside, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Cockrell, Conkling, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Eaton, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamilton, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Morrill, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Price, Randolph, Spencer, Wallace, Withers, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Bruce, Cragin, Ingalls, Mitchell, and Sherman—6.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Barnum, Blaine, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dawes, Edmunds, Goldthwaite, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Johnston, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Whyte, and Windom—37.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, July 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, this bill now being before the Senate, I desire to state that some years ago I had occasion to examine the legal rights or the claims made by the Central Branch Pacific Railroad, and I came to the conclusion after a careful examination that they had no claim and no right against the Government of the United States. They had received the money to which they were entitled for building one hundred miles of railroad and all the land grant, and if they chose to extend their road beyond that they could not claim more than the land grant and certainly had no right to claim bonds. I have so voted three or four times. The Senator from Iowa knows the position I occupy on that subject. But I submit to his good judgment whether it is wise to take up a bill that is controverted by private parties as well as by local interests, and endeavor to pass it through the Senate with barely a quorum in the city. I shall vote with him on the final passage of the bill if the bill reaches that stage; but it must be manifest to him and to the Senate that this bill cannot be acted upon in the present condition of things here because a claim is made in behalf of this railroad company and in behalf of local interests that will be benefited by the completion of this road; and we cannot preclude them at least from the right to a suit at law, and we cannot by our legislation cut off any remedy they may have. Therefore it is unwise, it seems to me, to press this bill at this time.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] has a bill that is rather a matter of detail but will take considerable time; and therefore it seems to me that by common consent this bill ought to be laid aside, and that taken up which may be considered without any question in regard to a quorum. Otherwise the sooner we adjourn the better it seems to me. Hence I voted to-day on the second vote against taking up this bill, on the ground that it would be simply time wasted and that the members of the committees who are engaged now in the performance of important duties would be simply called away from the performance of those duties without making any possible progress in the matter pending before the Senate.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator from Ohio, although he has taken his seat, allow me to make an inquiry of him? Are we to understand that, according to his impression of this subject, in spite of this act which may be passed these parties can go into court and litigate with the Government?

Mr. SHERMAN. On the contrary, I understand that they have no power to get into the courts unless a law is passed for that purpose, and therefore an affirmative act must be passed to give them even the right to sue, and I say that strengthens the argument that we ought not now to hold the Senate here in its present condition by attempting to pass a bill against which there is local opposition not only from private parties but from localities. It had better be postponed to a more convenient time, when I have no doubt I shall vote for it. I can say that the Senator from New York and I years ago, not less than eight or ten years ago, I think, acted together in opposing a measure in the interest of this Central Branch Pacific road. I took then the same view of the law that he did, and I presume I do now; but I do not think it worth while for us to waste time on it to-day.

Mr. CONKLING. I misapprehended the remark of the Senator from Ohio, as I find. This subject is what a distinguished member of this body now gone used to like sometimes to call "an old customer." It has been here a good many times. It has been the misfortune of the Senate to listen to me a good many hours, first and last, on this subject. I wish to assure all Senators who are present and those who are absent if they shall read the RECORD, that I do not intend to inflict myself upon the Senate at length on this subject again. I wish, however, to say this: The claim, if it be a claim, the argument, if it be an argument, of these partics involves a very large sum of money. It involves a large quantity of land. It involves lands which, in the mean time, under grant by Congress, have passed to other persons. It involves, therefore, not only the rendition of a large sum in bonds, the grant of a vast area in lands, but the opening and resettlement, if resettlement there could be, of legislative transactions with other grantees under which in the mean time they have taken undoubted vested rights, so that recompense and indemnity would be necessary over to parties on the other side if allowance were made to parties here.

I say so much to indicate not only the importance but the somewhat complicated nature of this transaction. For ten years, as the Senator from Ohio has remarked, and for more than that, the persons concerned with an assiduity and an enterprise seldom equaled have waged in the two Houses of Congress in the Interior Department, in the Department of Justice, and before the President of the United States personally, I ought not to say a war, but an endeavor consisting of a great variety of arguments and of allegations for the purpose of obtaining these bonds, the moneys, the lands. At times, as the Senator from Iowa has indicated, before some officer of the Government they have succeeded once or twice. At times they have succeeded in procuring in the one House or the other, the passage of a bill, the effect of which would have been to give them what they allege are their rights. And now for more than ten years this important, disturbing, open controversy has gone on, sometimes happening in the Senate, sometimes in the House, sometimes suddenly transplanted to the Interior Department, and followed by a resolution of the Senate requesting or directing the head of that Department not to act until he had authority from the legislative branch of the Government, and sometimes appearing elsewhere. It seems to me it is a matter which ought to be settled,—settled by those who, as the Senator from Ohio, began ten or twelve years ago to understand it, who are certainly much more likely to understand it and able with less effort to understand it, than those who come after us will be.

Now if at this moment it stands in the way of something urgent and important, I see the full force of the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio; but I should like to know what the measure is in whose way this bill stands to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was the bill about the revision of the laws that I referred to and had in my mind.

Mr. CONKLING. I have a great respect for the bill for the revision of the laws; I have a profound respect for the Committee on the Revision of the Laws; and I bow with submission to every judgment and yield to every wish of the chairman of that committee; but I really think that the committee and the Revised Statutes, and the country, and "whom it may concern," in the language of Mr. Lincoln, will all survive if that bill should not be acted on until to-morrow or next day. If I were going to have a conjecture about it, I would suppose that the country could survive until next week; and now the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] corroborates it. He says he believes the country could survive until next week if the bill for the revision of the laws were not acted on. Therefore I cannot believe that it is worth while to take up this subject, hear the Senator from Iowa, listen to a long report yet not completed, and then lay it down and take it up on some other day, and then postpone it again. On the contrary unless there is something very important in the way, we ought to go on with it. If there were an appropriation bill here, if there were some other bill of leading consequence here ready for action, I would say "yes, let this give way;" but if it is only that the Senate may adjourn until to-morrow, if it is only that the Senator from Massachusetts may be allowed to proceed with his bill, the merits of which I do not doubt, which in a general sense is important, but which can just as well be taken up next week, then I suggest that economy of time and trouble to the Senate should move us to proceed and end the pending measure; and I say that some time and somewhere, and I think that time is now and that place is this, there should be an end put to the question whether the assignees of the Hannibal and Saint Jo road have this enormous claim upon the Government or not. What is it? These assignees were given permission and subsidies to build a road one hundred miles, which they projected, profiled, mapped, published, gazetted to the country as a road to run from Atchison to Junction City or to Fort Riley, and there to connect with the Leavenworth, Pawnee, and Western road, which would have given them a communication all the way around to the Grand Trunk Pacific Road. They changed that intention and built one hundred miles of road, not running toward Pike's Peak southwest, but projecting due west across Clifton and other townships and ending nowhere; and they did that because another road was expected to go up one fork rather than the other fork of the Kaw River, as it had a right under the law to do. Now, these original parties come to the Government and say "We have put our track on the ground pointing west and northwest in place of running down to a communication and fixed junction," which passing around by Cheyenne, Wells, and Denver would have given them a communication with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railroad as they were entitled, but having failed to do that, having built in another direction a road ending nowhere and requiring some fifty miles—for I have passed over the ground myself and have observed it very carefully—of additional road in the direction that they took, making one hundred and fifty in all, to give them their communication. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is more fresh in this matter than I am, and doubtless he knows the fact of which I am speaking. Having taken a direction, I say, which would have required the building of a road of one hundred and forty-eight or one hundred and fifty miles to make connection in that direction, turning away from the connection which they intended, which they projected; which they mapped, which they profiled, which they filed in the Department of the Interior, which they had Colton and others publish in railroad maps, and which was the design, the question is whether they are now entitled to come here and require from Congress lands, bonds, moneys to make them good for this venture of their own; and that although these lands have been granted in the mean time, a large body of them, in alternate sections to a parallel road—I mean the Platte County road, and I am speaking upon a recollection now some years old; I have not gone over this case recently, and I may possibly misplace a name, but the Senator from Iowa knows the road to which I refer, the parallel road, which began at Saint Jo, the Platte County road, and went west. The grantees of that road have taken under that grant a large part of the lands which were pursued by this claimant and have been pursued to this day. Now, I say it is time that the truth or the groundlessness of that claim should be affirmed, and that it should not be allowed to drift until some day unexpectedly, by the action of some executive or even ministerial officer, or somebody else, we may find the Government cast or entangled in the meshes of this very large and very complicated claim. So that, I shall vote to support the Senator from Iowa in pressing this bill, in the hope that after such a statement as may be made on either side, and as I may have occasion to make myself in addition to what statment I have made, we may get a vote.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from New York alludes to the fact that this claim is what he calls an old customer, and has been here many times during the last ten or twelve years. In justice to the corporation, and in order that no odium may be cast upon it from the fact of its antiquity, I want to call the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that the corporation is now before the Senate upon his own motion. The corporation which the Senator has attacked is not here of its own volition. Its claim may be very antique; it may be, as he terms it, an old customer; but he brought it here on the 12th of March, 1873, by his own resolution. It has since that time been pending here before the Senate, one year and two days I believe having elapsed between the passage of his resolution and the report of the Committee on the Judiciary, and the bill having since reposed upon the Calendar in peace. Therefore, as the corporation is not here of its own motion, as it is not here of its own volition, the Senator from New York certainly ought not to attempt to cast odium upon it because the claim is ancient.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator will allow me a moment. I have neither cast nor sought to cast odium on the corporation he refers to or anybody else. I rose, however, to make a little more exact his statement. He says I brought this matter here. O! no, Mr. President, I did not. I offered a resolution, the effect of which was to bring this corporation away from the Interior Department, where, I was informed by a reputable person, it was about, without the knowledge of the Senate or the House, to become party to a proceeding which might estop and entangle the Government and cost it much money, which in the judgment of a large body of the two Houses of Congress was never due. It was to arrest that proceeding, to call a halt until this should be looked into, that I offered the resolution to which the honorable Senator has referred. I did not bring this matter here in any other sense. Upon a review of the case by the Judiciary Committee, that committee reported this bill, and did so for the reason that, in the judgment of the committee, unless the legislative arm was interposed this corporation or its representatives were about to possess themselves of a large amount of money and a great quantity of lands which in the judgment, as I say, of a large number of the members of this body and of the House who had investigated the matter were not due. That is all.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not understand, Mr. President, that I am at all corrected by the interruption of the Senator from New York. If I understood his statement in commencing his remarks, it was that this was an old customer and that this corporation had been, with considerable assiduity and with a great deal of pertinacity, pressing what he believed was an unjust claim before the Interior Department and other branches of the Government. I stated that the corporation was not before Congress of its own motion, that it was not here by its own volition, that it did not desire to come here, that it was at the present time and had for nearly four years last past been here by the direct action of the Senator from New York. If his statement has convinced anybody that I am wrong I shall be very glad to be corrected.

The Senator from New York states that this is a matter, in his opinion, of very great importance, as it affects the Treasury of this Government; that if this claim is allowed to be enforced it will result in securing to this corporation a great amount of bonds and a vast amount of lands to which he and a considerable number of members of both Houses believed the corporation not to be entitled. He states that in his judgment an end should be put to this question. In that I fully agree with him. I agree with him that an end should be put to the question; but the statutes under which these claims have been enforced provide the tribunals for the adjudication of these claims, and it is for the Senate to determine whether or not an end can be put to the question by a declaration of both Houses of Congress as to what was the true intent and meaning of a statute that was passed in 1862. I believe that it has been repeatedly held that an act of Congress is not "due process of law." I am not disputing whether this corporation is entitled to these lands or not. I do not care whether it is or not. It is immaterial to me whether it is or not. I am willing to concede that it is not entitled to them, and so far as I am concerned——

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator say that an act of Congress is not "due process of law?"

Mr. INGALLS. I do mean to say that an act of Congress is not

"due process of law" as understood by the language of the Constitution, which declares that no man shall be deprived of his life, liberty, and property without due process of law.

Mr. CONKLING. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. INGALLS. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. I am somewhat surprised to hear him say that, as the Supreme Court has said the reverse; and I will refer the Senator from recollection to the case of the Government against Swartwout in one of the volumes of Howard, where the court held expressly that a statute under which an executive officer proceeded to sell property and take it away absolutely was "due process of law" and equivalent to the phrase of the common law "the law of the land," and satisfies the phrase in our Constitution "due process of law;" and the Senator has referred to the very provision of the Constitution under which the Supreme Court made that decision.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is of course presumptuous in me to differ with authority so eminent as that of the Senator from New York, but, notwithstanding the quotation that he has made, I repeat the assertion that by repeated declarations of the Supreme Court vested rights cannot be removed by subsequent legislation; that it is not under the Constitution "due process of law."

Mr. CONKLING. That, if the Senator will pardon me, is a wholly different proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. That is precisely the proposition I am contending for.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator's first statement was that a statute was not due process of law—and that property could not be taken under a statute because that was not due process of law. Now, the honorable Senator says that the Supreme Court has held that vested rights cannot be retroactively affected by a statute. That is a very different proposition.

Mr. INGALLS. That is precisely the proposition that I first advanced, and it is not within the power of the Senator from New York by any twisting or tortuous construction of language to evade that issue. The question that is now before the Senate is whether or not, under the statutes of 1862, 1864, and 1866, the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company obtained any rights to an additional grant of bonds and of lands beyond the one hundred miles they constructed. That is precisely the point. I contend that, if they have any rights under those statutes, they have already accrued. It is a question for the courts to determine; it is not a question for Congress to determine, because an act of Congress cannot deprive a party of his vested rights without making due compensation for them. In other words, in the case I have named, if this corporation have any rights at all under those statutes, it is for the courts to determine them, and not for Congress. Therefore I say that, as the Senator from New York has said, it is desirable that an end should be put to this question. An end cannot be put to the question by passing this act. It is a question that ultimately the courts will be compelled to determine under the statutes themselves. I believe that the Supreme Court, therefore, will sustain the view that I first announced, that if these are vested rights an act of Congress is not "due process of law."

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Kansas is correct in saying that whatever property belongs to this railway company Congress has no power to take from it by a simple and direct act of legislation, appropriating it to itself instead of to some public use; and that is not this proposition at all. But the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom this bill was referred, after a very careful examination of the subject, believed that this company had no right to obtain from the United States any more lands or any more bonds than it had already obtained; and the object of the committee was to prevent the United States from being deprived of property without due process of law. That is what the committee were after, and we intended, if we could get the Senate to agree with us, to provide that no Secretary of the Interior and no Attorney-General and no anybody else of the Executive Departments of this Government should part with the property of the people of the United States or with their money upon any judgment that might be squeezed out of them, as they are not judicial bodies and are confessedly under the control of Congress. So this bill provides merely that the acts referred to shall not be construed by any of the Executive Departments of the Government to authorize them to give to this company money or property now in the possession of the people of the United States. That is all there is to the bill. It does not undertake to foreclose any legal right that this company may have as a matter of law in the Court of Claims or elsewhere against the United States; but it does undertake to prevent the Department of the Interior and the Attorney-General, if there is now any danger of such a thing, from parting with the property that belongs to the people and to the Government, as we believe, on their own mere motion or on any amount of pressure that may be brought to bear upon them or their subordinates by interested parties. That is all. And so I do not perceive why my friend from Kansas should lay so much stress in his opposition to this bill as he does, because, if I correctly understand him, he says that he does not wish this company to get anything that it is not lawfully entitled to, and that he in what he says does not pronounce any opinion upon what it is lawfully entitled to. If that be so, if he and other Senators will just look at the bill, they will see that the whole scope of it is to stop this constant resort to contrivances, (they may be perfectly just contrivances,) this constant resort to devices, (they may be perfectly just devices; I do not say; I do not know,) but to means of getting the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Solicitor-General or somebody or other to find out all at once that the United States ought to push out a few hundred thousand more acres of land or a few hundred thousand more bonds of the United States. We want to put a stop to that; and that is exactly, as I understand, what this bill does, and nothing else.

Mr. BAYARD. May I ask the Senator from Vermont this question: Is this act intended or does it propose to control judicial interpretation of statutes already passed by Congress?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not in the slightest degree. It says, if the Senator will look at page 2, that none of these various acts "shall be so construed, by any officer or Department of the Government, as to authorize the issuance to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, or the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, of any bonds of the United States, or of any patents for lands."

Mr. BAYARD. The Senator will see the reason of my question. Declaratory acts are not a very safe species of legislation. Where the legislative branch has seen fit to declare its will in known words, those words must speak for themselves, and I hold that it is not a wise or perhaps justified character of legislation by declaratory acts to invade the province of what I may call the interpreting branch of the Government. The legislative has it in its power in the first place to express its will in its own way, but having used language it must be held to have meant what it said. My disposition to object to the present bill was that it seemed to authorize an invasion of the judicial province in the interpretation of acts of Congress made heretofore on these subjects. But with the understanding that this is simply to control the action of ministerial officers or officers of the executive department, that they shall not make law or construe law against the meaning of the act, I do not know but that my objection is in a great measure removed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, as the law now stands, the judicial department of the Government, in my humble opinion—and I have heard nobody assert the contrary—has no more to do with this question than the government of Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland has, because the only tribunal competent to decide this case, as the law now stands, is Congress itself. The Court of Claims has no jurisdiction of it, and the judicial courts under the Constitution as distinguished from the Court of Claims—which may still be a judicial court; I do not say how that is—cannot, except by a mandamus to compel this person to issue a particular thing, have any possible jurisdiction; and on the decisions they have made on applications for that sort of writ it is perfectly plain that this company has no status in any judicial court whatever. It claims that it has a right to certain lands and bonds of the United States, or one or both of them, I do not remember at this moment whether they claim lands or not, and it is no matter whether they do or not.

Mr. WRIGHT. Both.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They claim both. That is perfectly natural. Most of these companies if they claim lands claim bonds also, because they believe that "one good turn deserves another."

Now I wish to say one single word in reference to what the Senator from Delaware has said about what our competence is. I wish to state as positively as I can, that the Congress of the United States, on a question of any claim of right between a citizen of the United States or anybody else and the Government, is just as much a tribunal, impartial and independent, as the Supreme Court is. If the claim is of such a nature that it belongs to our jurisdiction and it requires an application to Congress to decide it, then I, for one, and I believe every Senator will agree with me, do not hold myself in the attitude, when I consider that claim, of being an opposing party, but in the attitude of being a sworn, just, and impartial judge, as much so as if I sat on the bench, and I will give that claimant justice and the law and nothing else, neither more nor less. If I give him more it falls under another branch of jurisdiction, that of granting gratuities and favors, if we have any such authority, to people that we think stand in special need of that sort of thing.

Therefore, inasmuch as it is perfectly plain and has never been otherwise contended, that this subject as it now stands belongs entirely to Congress and not to the Departments, it appears to me perfectly obvious that instead of allowing this company, by intrigue or by persuasion or by just means, to induce the Departments of this Government to part with the property of the United States on a disputed and doubtful question of law, we ought to provide that if this company has any claim it shall bring it here for fair and impartial consideration, as it often has done, but never so far with success. It is one of the good fortunes of claimants in such cases in this tribunal, as distinguished from the judicial tribunals, that when a case is once decided against, even by a unanimous opinion of the tribunal, it may still come again the next year; it may begin again over and over again, so that while with the judicial tribunals a matter once fairly heard and decided is determined forever, as it ought to be, with us—judges in just as high a degree and having just as little personal interest in the questions we decide as the judges of the Supreme Court and the other courts have—with us, I say, if the Senate of last year decides that this is no case, the Senate of next year is called upon to review it and try it over again and decide that it is a case, and so on, and so on, and so on, through the whole history of the Republic, because there are still, I believe, some claimants that come up here once every year or two that go back almost to the very foundation of things, and we cannot help it.

But now coming back to this bill, I do beg Senators to just look at it, and see that it being a subject of executive and congressional action, all that there is of this bill is not to prevent this party, as he has the right, from petitioning to-morrow to have this grant made good to him as he claims, but simply to say that none of the Executive Departments of the Government shall be authorized to give it to him until Congress has passed upon the claim. Really this is without any good ground of objection to it at all. It does not foreclose their rights although they have been often considered and generally voted against, but they stand to-morrow with the right of petition just where they did before. But it will prevent the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and whoever the proper people may be who have to deal with that sort of thing, from setting up their judgment in parting with public property in what at least is a very doubtful case, against the will of Congress. That is all. It has been found, whenever Congress has turned its back for the last few years to go home to get a little breathing spell, that some Assistant Attorney-General or some Assistant Secretary of the Interior or somebody has seen his way suddenly clear upon some new brief to get just ready to push out more bonds and more money to this company, and it is not, in my opinion, the right way to do things, and I do not believe in allowing these Departments to have the possible authority in this case or any other like it or anywhere near like it, to trifle with the rights of the people of the United States to their possessions, which in some way or other at last come out of the people by taxation as all public property and all appropriations do. If the gentlemen interested in this company wish to try now to have the matter investigated by Congress, an impartial and just tribunal and the only one having jurisdiction over it, then let them try, and for one, although I have examined it two or three times and I have now forgotten all about what the point was, only I know they wanted lands and bonds, notwithstanding what I may have said or thought before, it may be that I should see it in an entirely different light. At any rate, for one I should be perfectly willing to give them a respectful and, as far as I am capable of it, impartial hearing. But here is the proposition to put an end to this everlasting tinkering of Departments with claims that are doubtful and disputed when Congress is away, in order to get what in the judgment of Congress it has not appeared clear the claimants ought to get.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont is singularly inaccurate when he states that Congress is the only tribunal that has jurisdiction of these questions. If he would take the trouble to refresh his recollection, that is usually so very specific and minute, and examine the statutes under which this company was incorporated, he would find that the Secretary of the Interior, the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and the Department of Justice are specially authorized to take jurisdiction and make determination of these very identical questions. The statute under which this corporation was incorporated, under which they are now claiming their rights, provided a tribunal in which these questions should be determined.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator kindly read that statute that we may see what it is?

Mr. INGALLS. I will not, because I have it not here before me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have not any knowledge of any such statute, and should be glad to have the Senator produce it.

Mr. INGALLS. I state in general terms that when the company had constructed twenty miles of their road the statute authorized them to apply to the Secretary of the Interior for the determination of the question whether they had complied with the statute and were entitled to the lands and the bonds, and it authorized them still further to apply to the Department of Justice for the determination of these questions in case the Department of the Interior refused to act. Now, sir, the corporation has done exactly what the statute required it to do. It has enforced its rights, insisted upon their recognition in the tribunals created by the statute. Now the Senator from Vermont comes and says that Congress is the only tribunal having jurisdiction to determine this question. It seems to me that is a most extraordinary proposition. Even if it were true, here is a case involving, as he says, the appropriation of a great many millions of dollars in bonds and a great many millions of acres of land, to be determined as a judicial question by the Senate, the highest tribunal of the country! Looking about me I suppose there are perhaps twenty-five or thirty Senators present out of seventy-five or seventy-six comprising the body. Out of those who are present I venture to say that ten are not familiar with the two measures pending before this body, the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, Senate bill No. 60, and the bill introduced by me yesterday and twice read, Senate bill No. 1108; and probably not five of those present are at all acquainted with the report of the Judiciary Committee. Yet the Senator says here is confessedly a great judicial question, a question involving the rights of this corporation under these statutes to millions of dollars in bonds and millions of acres of land, to be determined by the decision of seventy-five men, of whom thirty are present, and probably one-third of those have not read or heard the report of the committee!

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will pardon me for suggesting to him that I have not said anything of that kind, to the best of my knowedge; that here was a great judicial question. I did not know that I had said anything of that kind, and if I had said it it would have been a great mistake.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont said that the Senate of the United States or the Congress of the United States was the only tribunal that had jurisdiction. Jurisdiction to do what? What does "jurisdiction" mean? If I understand the significance of legal terms, jurisdiction means the power to hear, to try and determine. Then by the use of the term "jurisdiction" he means that Congress has the power to hear, try, and determine what? The rights of this corporation under those statutes passed by Congress. The Judiciary Committee appears to have resolved itself into a grand returning board for the purpose of enforcing its own particular views not only upon the Senate but upon Congress; not only upon Congress, but upon all the Departments, and not only upon all the Departments of the executive branches of the Government, but upon the courts, for I pretend to say, if there is any meaning to be attached to language, that the words of this bill are an absolute inhibition upon any officer of this Government, whether he is executive or judicial, from entertaining any opinion that is not in conformity with that of the Judiciary Committee of this body. Let me read it:

> That neither the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862—> nor the act approved July 2, 1864, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862;" nor the act approved July 3, 1866, entitled 'An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862,' approved July 2, 1864;" nor all said acts, nor any section or sections, portion or portions, of all or any thereof, shall be so construed, by any officer or department of the Government as to authorize the issuance to the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, or the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, or its successors or assigns, of any bonds of the United States, or of any patents for lands, &c.

The Senator from Vermont says that is no exercise of authority on the part of Congress except upon the executive officers of the Government; that it is merely directory upon the Secretary of the Interior as to what he shall do, the Commissioner of the General Land Office as to what he shall do; but it goes further and declares what the Attorney-General, who is a legal officer of the Government, shall do, because it is intended to prevent the accomplishment of a decision already rendered by the Department of Justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator desire to speak?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not wish to interrupt my friend unless it is entirely agreeable to him.

Mr. INGALLS. Entirely so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to call his attention to the language of the Constitution, as he has criticised the word "department" as seeming to imply, although he has not said so, that that covers judicial power. Speaking of the powers of the President for the appointment of officers, &c., in section 2 of article 2, familiar to my friend, the Constitution says:

> But the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

The word "department," therefore, when used in a law refers to those executive branches of the Government falling under the executive power, and does not refer to the courts of law which try causes and dispose of them not as departments of the Government, but as exercising judicial functions, as a part of the judicial power, in the very language of the Constitution, which distinguishes between the departments and the courts of law. If there be any possible doubt in my friend's mind really that this word "department" would prevent the supreme court of the District of Columbia or the Supreme Court of the United States on appeal or originally, if it had jurisdiction, from passing upon any legal right presented, I, for one, although I do not know what my friend in charge of the bill would think, should be quite willing to insert "executive department" so as to leave out of all possible question the application of the word "department" to the judicial courts of the United States. But the committee thought, in view of this language of the Constitution and of the universal practice ever since the Government began as to what is meant by "department," that it was not open to any possible question. If my friend thinks it is, I, certainly, for one, should be quite willing to put in the qualifying clause.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont can split judicial hairs better than any member of this body; and in his reference to the technical language of the Constitution he may endeavor to lead the Senate to suppose that there is no inhibition either attempted or intended upon the judicial department of the Government. My understanding is that the power of this Government is divided into three departments, so expressly named and nominated and considered by all courts—the executive department, the legislative department, and the judicial department, and they are independent of each other, and neither has any control over the other. But if the language of line 24 is not open to the objection which I have urged in relation to its being an attempt to impose an inhibition upon the judicial department, let me ask the Senator what the latter part of the section means:

Nor shall any action of any officer or department of the Government of the United States heretofore, or that may be hereafter taken, or of any railroad company, be so construed as to authorize the issuance of bonds or patents for lands for any such extension, it being hereby declared to be the true intent and meaning of the acts aforesaid that, for the construction of the road contemplated by said section 13, lands and bonds were granted for one hundred miles next to the Missouri River, and no more.

If the bill attempts simply to say that the Executive Departments shall not use any other construction than that entertained by the Judiciary Committee, what does it mean further by saying that no order taken by such officers shall be construed by any other tribunal to mean anything but that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does not say "shall be construed by any other tribunal" at all.

Mr. INGALLS. It says "construed." That must mean something.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It does mean something, but it does not mean "any other tribunal." That is in the imagination of my honorable friend. What it means is perfectly apparent to every Senator who in committee or otherwise is acquainted with the history of the most extraordinary performances that have gone on in reference to this claim for lands and bonds in these various Departments.

Mr. INGALLS. May I interrupt the Senator a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, with pleasure. I am taking my friend's time.

Mr. INGALLS. No, I merely want to ask one question. Inasmuch as the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New York have alluded to what, in general terms, they have been pleased to denominate the extraordinary methods that have been adopted and pursued by this corporation in the enforcement of what they considered their claim before the Departments, may I ask either of the Senators to state to the Senate what they have done that was outside of the law? What action have they taken that was not contemplated by the statute under which they received their rights? To what officer have they appealed that the statute under which they were organized did not authorize them to appeal?

Mr. EDMUNDS. As the detail of this matter is considerably out of my mind, I do not think I can give a very full answer, but I can give a part of an answer. There is one principle of law that has been pretty generally settled in the course of this Government; and that is, when the head of a Department has once decided adversely upon the claim of anybody that that Department should do something for his interests, it is not competent for his successor to turn around on fresh pressure and more solid reasons and re-open that decision and begin again. In this case, if I correctly recollect, one or more Secretaries of the Interior to whom the Senator has alluded as being persons who were to issue lands and bonds from time to time as certain events should transpire, being applied to to give lands and bonds, or lands alone, beyond the one hundred miles which the language of the law in explicit terms says shall be the limit, refused, and decided against the claim. A change in the course of affairs arises and there is a fresh Secretary of the Interior, or a fresh Assistant Attorney-General assigned to the Interior Department, or a fresh Commissioner of the Land Office, or a new somebody; and presently Monsieur Tonson comes again, and with better reasons, more or less solid, persuades that person to believe that after all the whole thing had better be re-opened and the lands and bonds had better be given. Now, I do say that I think that is an extraordinary performance. There is some other performance that I have a more personal knowledge of, (and from sheer mortification I should be greatly disinclined to say anything about it, but it did once happen to me, and as these are times when everybody ought to confess probably, as everybody has to be conscientious,) when somebody who professed that he was connected with this company, if I am capable of taking a hint, rather suggested that a few sections of land would be a good thing for me to take for the company down in that region, and so on. Of course it is rather unpleasant for a modest young Senator like me to even hint to the Senate that somebody has been trying to bribe him; but I have a very vivid recollection of a very disagreeable circumstance of that character. I do not speak of it as against this company, because I cannot help hoping and believing that the officers of the company knew nothing about it, and that it was only a bummer who came around to me to see whether some landed interest might not influence my views in relation to the law of this case. But that was not the extraordinary performance to which I have alluded as connected with the Executive Departments. Those extraordinary performances are found among the facts that after the thing has once been decided in the regular way under the statute that these people were not entitled to this land beyond the one hundred miles and to this money, yet because there is a change in the personnel of the Departments, the thing must needs be re-opened and tried over again, and some new inducement, not like that which was offered to me or hinted to me perhaps, but some new inducement of some good kind brought to bear. I do think that is an extraordinary performance and one which the Senate of the United States ought to put the seal of its condemnation upon. If these people have any rights, let us review again and again for a hundred years, if you like, their claim here, but do not let us find some day when we have gone home that some Assistant Attorney-General or some Commissioner of the Land Office or somebody has issued patents and bonds of the United States upon a case of this sort. That is my proposition, and that is all that this bill is.

Mr. INGALLS. The railroad bummers and the lobbyists of corporations generally know whom to approach. I never was approached by this corporation or any other with any intimation that it would be a good thing for me to get lands or any other valuable consideration in connection with the passage of a bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They knew the virtuous man and did not know the other.

Mr. INGALLS. I do not kpow that it is true that this corporation has ever had any agents here who were authorized to make such propositions to the Senator from Vermont or not. If they did it, I presume they had good reasons for doing so; but so far as my knowledge of the corporation is concerned, and its agents, it is sufficient for me to say that I never have known of their attempting to enforce anything but what they believed to be their legal rights, in what they also believed was a perfectly legitimate manner. The Senator from Vermont continues in his allegation that the object and purposes of this bill are only to impose an inhibition upon the Executive Departments of the Government, and he professes that he is willing, so far as one member of the Committee on the Judiciary is concerned, to have the term "Department" qualified by the use of the word "executive." Am I correct?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, I am perfectly willing to agree to that if there is any necessity for it. I do not see how it could be made any stronger.

Mr. INGALLS. But the Senator from Vermont has omitted to state what is the intention of the final clause of the bill. If there is simply a design or purpose to prevent the Secretary of the Interior, or the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or the Attorney-General of the United States, from taking but one view of the meaning of these acts, what is the necessity of further putting in a clause that no other officers than these shall put any other construction upon the acts?

Mr. EDMUNDS. My object, if the Senator is waiting for a reply from me, is just as his object would be if he were drawing a bond which he thought his satanic majesty was going to have the handling of, to make it as strong as he possibly could, so that he could not get around it, to double the dose if necessary, and to have the beginning and the end of the bill to be a prohibition upon everybody who acts under the authority of Congress from doing this thing; and I think that is a sufficient answer. This is merely a résumé, a conclusion which flows from what has preceded, and perhaps it is not indispensably necessary. I do not think it is indispensably necessary myself; but when we know the ingenious resorts that skillful men make in these Executive Departments to the language of statutes and the want of language to get what they desire, and how unhappily often they are successful in getting what Congress never had in its mind they should get, then it behooves us in legislation upon such a subject to make very sweeping declarations indeed, so as to leave no loophole for the clerks and for the Asisstant Attorneys-General and everybody else (I believe none of them are now in office who have had these things to do with) from getting around the intent of Congress that these people shall not get this land and this money which is now in the possession of the United States until Congress says so, or until by some regular and judicial suit at law it turns out that they have a right to it.

Mr. INGALLS. I believe this debate has been to a certain extent what might be termed interlocutory, and that it commenced upon a suspension of the reading of the report. I ask that the reading of the report of the committee may now be resumed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ALLISON in the chair.) The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the report.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the report submitted by Mr. WRIGHT on the 10th of March, 1874, as follows:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 12th of March last, have made the inquiry therein directed and submit the following report:

The resolution is in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire and report at the December session of the Senate whether the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any company authorized to build a branch road to connect therewith, or any assignee of such company, will be entitled to lands or bonds for any road which such company may hereafter construct; and that, until said committee shall report, the executive officers of the Government are requested to issue no bonds or patent-certificates that may be claimed for roads constructed and reported after this date."

By its terms the resolution directed us to inquire "whether the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or any company authorized to build a branch road to connect therewith, or any assignees of such company, will be entitled to lands or bonds for any road they may hereafter construct." The investigation, however, discloses that the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company is the only one making such claim; and we have hence, as we suppose, properly and necessarily confined ourselves to this claim. The history of this claim runs through many years, is found in the action of the company, the rulings of the Departments, the legislation of Congress, and is not a little difficult to understand. As an answer to the inquiry, however, is found largely in several acts of Congress, it will be our first duty to present, as briefly as may be, this legislation.

On the 1st day of July, 1862, an act was passed "to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," which, as far as material, contained the following provisions:

The persons named in the first section were created a body-corporate by the style of The Union Pacific Railroad Company; and the said corporation was authorized "to lay out, locate, construct, furnish, maintain, and enjoy a continuous railroad and telegraph line, with the appurtenances, from a point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, between the south margin of the valley of the Republican River and the north valley of the margin of the Platte River, in the Territory of Nebraska, to the western boundary of Nevada Territory, upon the route and terms hereinafter provided."

By the third section it was provided "that there be, and is hereby, granted to the said company, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores thereon, every alternate section of public land, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of five alternate sections per mile, on each side of said railroad, on the line thereof, and within the limits of ten miles on each side of said road, not sold, reserved, or otherwise disposed of by the United States, and to which a pre-emption or homestead claim may not have attached at the time the line of said road is definitely fixed."

The fourth section provides that where the company shall have completed forty consecutive miles of said road, ready for service, &c., three commissioners shall be appointed by the President to examine the same, and if it shall appear that such forty miles have been completed, &c., patents shall issue for the lands aforesaid, and so on, for each forty miles, as the same may be completed. Then follows the proviso: "That no such commissioners shall be appointed by the President of the United States unless there shall be presented to him a statement, verified on oath by the president of said company, that such forty miles have been completed in the manner required by this act, and setting forth with certainty the points where such forty miles begin and where the same end; which said oath shall be taken before a judge of a court of record."

The fifth section declares: "That for the purposes herein mentioned, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon the certificate in writing of said commissioners of the completion and equipment of forty consecutive miles of said railroad and telegraph, in accordance with the provisions of this act, issue to said company bonds of the United States of $1,000 each, payable in thirty years after date * * * to the amount of sixteen of said bonds per mile for such section of forty miles."

Other portions of the act, material, are as follows:

"SEC. 7. And be it further enacted, That said company shall file their assent to this act, under the seal of the company, in the Department of the Interior, within one year after the passage of this act, and shall complete said railroad and telegraph from the point of beginning, as herein provided, to the western boundary of Nevada Territory, before the 1st day of July, 1874: Provided, That within two years after the passage of this act said company shall designate the general route of said road as near as may be, and shall file a map of the same in the Department of the Interior, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lands within fifteen miles of said designated route or routes to be withdrawn from pre-emption, private entry, and sale; and when any portion of said route shall be finally located, the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the said lands hereinbefore granted to be surveyed and set off as fast as may be necessary for the purposes herein named: Provided, That in fixing the point of connection of the main trunk with the eastern connections, it shall be fixed at the most practicable point for the construction of the Iowa and Missouri branches, as hereinafter provided.

"That the line of said railroad and telegraph shall commence at a point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, west from Greenwich, between the south margin of the valley of the Republican River and the north margin of the valley of the Platte River, in the Territory of Nebraska, at a point to be fixed by the President of the United States, after actual surveys; thence running westerly upon the most direct, central, and practicable route through the territories of the United States, to the western boundary of the Territory of Nevada, there to meet and connect with the line of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California.

"That the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas are hereby authorized to construct a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River, at the mouth of the Kansas River, on the south side thereof, so as to connect with the Pacific Railroad of Missouri, to the aforesaid point, on the one hundredth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, as herein provided, upon the same terms and conditions in all respects as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph line first mentioned, and to meet and connect with the same at the meridian of longitude aforesaid; and in case the general route or line of road from the Missouri River to the Rocky Mountains should be so located as to require a departure northwardly from the proposed line of said Kansas Railroad before it reaches the meridian of longitude aforesaid, the location of said Kansas road shall be made so as to conform thereto; and said railroad through Kansas shall be so located between the mouth of the Kansas River as aforesaid, and the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, that the several railroads from Missouri and Iowa herein authorized to connect with the same can make connection within the limits prescribed in this act, provided the same can be done without deviating from the general direction of the whole line to the Pacific coast. The route in Kansas west of the meridian of Fort Riley to the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude to be subject to the approval of the President of the United States, and to be determined by him on actual survey.

"That the said company chartered by the State of Kansas shall complete one hundred miles of their said road, commencing at the mouth of the Kansas River, as aforesaid, within two years after filing their assent to the conditions of this act, as herein provided, and one hundred miles per year thereafter until the whole is completed. * * * And the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad, the Pacific Railroad Company of Missouri, and the first-named company, or either of them, on filing their assent to this act, as aforesaid, may unite, upon equal terms, under this act, with the said Kansas company in constructing said railroad and telegraph to said meridian of longitude, with the consent of the said State of Kansas.

"The track upon the entire line of railroad and branches shall be of uniform width, to be determined by the President of the United States, so that, when completed, cars can be run from the Missouri River to the Pacific coast; the grades and curves shall not exceed the maximum grades and curves of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; the whole line of said railroad and branches and telegraph shall be operated and used for all purposes of communication, travel, and transportation, so far as the public and Government are concerned, as one connected, continuous line.

"That the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Railroad Company of Missouri may extend its roads from Saint Joseph, via Atchison, to connect and unite with the road through Kansas, upon filing its assent to the provisions of this act, upon the same terms and conditions in all respects, for one hundred miles in length next to the Missouri River, as are provided in this act for the construction of the railroad and telegraph lines first mentioned, and may for this purpose use any railroad charter which has been or may be granted by the Legislature of Kansas: Provided, That if actual survey shall render it desirable the said company may construct their road, with the consent of the Kansas Legislature, on the most direct and practicable route west from Saint Joseph, Missouri, so as to connect and unite with the road leading from the western boundary of Iowa at any point east of the one hundredth meridian of west longitude, or with the main trunk-road at such point; but in no event shall lands or bonds be given to said company, as herein directed, to aid in the construction of their said road for a greater distance than one hundred miles. And the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company of Kansas may construct their road from Leavenworth to unite with the road through Kansas."

The fourteenth section authorizes the Union Pacific Railroad Company to construct a road from the western boundary of Iowa to connect with the line of said company at some point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, and also, in a certain event, a road from Sioux City to a point so as to connect with the road to be constructed from the western boundary of Iowa, or with the Union Pacific Road, said point of junction to be fixed by the President, but not farther west than the one hundredth meridian.

The fifteenth section gives to any other company the right to connect with the "road and branches" provided by this act.

Then, by the seventeenth and eighteenth sections it is declared "That if said roads are not completed, so as to form a continuous line of railroad, ready for use, from the Missouri River to the navigable waters of the Sacramento River, in California, by the 1st day of July, 1876, the whole of all said railroads before mentioned, and to be constructed under the provisions of this act, together with all their furniture, fixtures, rolling-stock, machine-shops, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, and property of every kind and character, shall be forfeited to and be taken possession of by the United States. And the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line, and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times (but particularly in time of war) the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time—having due regard for the rights of said companies named herein—add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act."

By the act of the 3d of March, 1863, the gauge of the Pacific Railroad and its branches, throughout its whole extent, was established at 4 feet 8½ inches.

On the 2d of July, 1864, an act amendatory to the act of July 1, 1862, was passed, which contains among others the following provisions:

Section 5 extended the time for designating the general route of said Union Pacific Railroad, and filing the map of the same, and for the completion "of that part of the railroads required by the terms of said act of each company" one year from the time in the original act designated.

Section 9 has this provision: "That any company authorized by this act to construct its road and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the initial point aforesaid may construct its road and telegraph line so as to connect with the Union Pacific Railroad at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case such company shall deem such westward connection more practicable or desirable; and in aid of the construction of so much of its road and telegraph line as shall be a departure from the route hereinbefore provided for its road, such company shall be entitled to all the benefits and be subject to all the conditions and restrictions of this act: Provided further, however, That the bonds of the United States shall not be issued to such company for a greater amount than is hereinbefore provided if the same had united with the Union Pacific Railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude; nor shall such company be entitled to receive any greater amount of alternate sections of public lands than are also herein provided."

The twelfth and sixteenth sections, having, as is urged, an important bearing upon the questions involved, are here quoted in full:

"And be it further enacted, That the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, eastern division, shall build the railroad from the mouth of Kansas River by the way of Leavenworth, or, if that be not deemed the best route, then the said company shall, within two years, build a railroad from the city of Leavenworth to unite with the main stem at or near the city of Lawrence; but to aid in the construction of said branch the said company shall not be entitled to any bonds. And if the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall not be proceeding in good faith to build the said railroad through the Territories when the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, now known as the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, shall have completed their road to the hundredth degree of longitude, then the last-named company may proceed to make said road westward until it meets and connects with the Central Pacific Railroad Company on the same line. And the said railroad from the mouth of Kansas River to the one hundredth meridian of longitude shall be made by the way of Lawrence or Topeka, or on the bank of the Kansas River opposite said town: Provided, That no bonds shall be issued or land certified by the United States to any person or company for the construction of any part of the main trunk line of said railroad west of the one hundredth meridian of longitude and east of the Rocky Mountains, until said road shall be completed from or near Omaha, on the Missouri River, to the said one hundredth meridian of longitude."

"And be it further enacted, That any two or more of the companies, authorized to participate in the benefits of this act, are hereby authorized at any time to unite and consolidate their organizations, as the same may or shall be, upon such terms and conditions and in such manner as they may agree upon, and as shall not be incompatible with this act or the laws of the State or States in which the roads of such companies may be, and to assume and adopt such corporate name and style as they may agree upon; with a capital stock not to exceed the actual cost of the roads so to be consolidated, and shall file a copy of such consolidation in the Department of the Interior; and thereupon such organization so formed and consolidated shall succeed to, possess, and be entitled to receive from the Government of the United States, all and singular, the grants, benefits, and immunities, guarantees, acts, and things to be done and performed, and be subject to the same terms, conditions, restrictions, and requirements, which said companies respectively, at the time of such consolidation, are or may be entitled or subject to under this act, in place and substitution of said companies so consolidated respectively. And all other provisions of this act, so far as applicable, relating or in any manner appertaining to the companies so consolidated, or either thereof, shall apply and be of force, as to such consolidated organization. And in case upon the completion by such consolidated organization of the roads, or either of them, of the companies so consolidated, any other of the road or roads of either of the other companies, authorized as aforesaid, (and forming, or intended or necessary to form, a portion of a continuous line from each of the several points on the Missouri River, hereinbefore designated, to the Pacific coast,) shall not have constructed the number of miles of its said road within the time herein required, each consolidated organization is hereby authorized to continue the construction of its road and telegraph in the general direction and route upon which such incomplete or unconstructed road is hereinbefore authorized to be built, until such continuation of the road of such consolidated organization shall reach the constructed road and telegraph of said other company, and at such point to connect and unite therewith; and for and in aid thereof the said consolidated organization may do and perform, in reference to such portion of road and telegraph as shall so be in continuation of its constructed road and telegraph, and to the construction and equipment thereof, all and singular, the several acts and things hereinbefore provided, authorized or granted to be done by the company hereinbefore authorized to construct and equip the same, and shall be entitled to similar and like grants, benefits, immunities, guarantees, acts, and things to be done and performed by the Government of the United States, by the President of the United States, by the Secretaries of the Treasury and Interior, and by commissioners, in reference to such company, and to such portion of the road hereinbefore authorized to be constructed by it, and upon the like and similar terms and conditions so far as the same are applicable thereto. And said consolidated company shall pay to said defaulting company the value, to be estimated by competent engineers, of all the work done and material furnished by said defaulting company which may be adopted and used by said consolidated company in the progress of the work under the provisions of this section: Provided, nevertheless, That said defaulting company may at any time before receiving pay for its said work and material, as hereinbefore provided, on its own election, pay said consolidated company the value of the work done and material furnished by said consolidated company, to be estimated by competent engineers, necessary for and used in the construction of the road of said defaulting company, and resume the control of its said road; and all the rights, benefits, and privileges which shall be acquired, possessed, or exercised pursuant to this section shall be to that extent an abatement of the rights, benefits, and privileges hereinbefore granted to such other company. And in case any company authorized thereto shall not enter into such consolidated organization, such company, upon the completion of its road, as hereinbefore provided, shall be entitled to, and is hereby authorized to, continue and extend the same, under the circumstances, and in accordance with the provisions of this section; and to have all the benefits thereof, as fully and completely as are herein provided, touching such consolidated organization. And in case more than one such consolidated organization shall be made pursuant to this act, the terms and conditions of this act, hereinbefore recited as to one, shall apply in like manner and force and effect to the other: Provided, however, That rights and interests at any time acquired by one such consolidated organization shall not be impaired by another thereof. It is further provided, that should the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California complete their line to the eastern line of the State of California before the line of the Union Pacific Railroad Company shall have been extended westward so as to meet the line of said first-named company, said first-named company may extend their line or road eastward one hundred and fifty miles, on the established route, so as to meet and connect with the line of the Union Pacific road, complying in all respects with the provisions and restrictions of this act as to the Union Pacific road, and upon doing so shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, and benefits conferred by this act on said Union Pacific Railroad Company."

The fifteenth section, it is necessary to here state, provides that the several companies are required to operate and use said roads for all purposes of commerce, travel, and transportation, so far as the Government and the public are concerned, as one continuous line.

It is provided in the eighteenth section that the Burlington and Missouri Railroad Company may extend its road from the point where it strikes the Missouri River, south of the mouth of the Platte, to a point not farther west than the one hundredth meridian. To enable it to do this it is given the right of way through the public lands, the right to take stone, timber, earth, and all materials, and, to further aid, alternate sections of land are granted to the amount of ten sections on each side.

The next act in order in any way bearing upon this inquiry is that of July 3, 1866; the first and only section, material, being as follows:

"That the Union Pacific Railroad Company, eastern division, is hereby authorized to designate the general route of their said road, and to file a map thereof, as now required by law, at any time before the 1st day of December, 1866, and upon the filing of the said map, showing the general route of said road, the lands along the entire line thereof so far as the same may be designated shall be reserved from sale by order of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That said company shall be entitled to only the same amount of the bonds of the United States to aid in the construction of their line of railroad and telegraph as they would have been entitled to if they had connected their said line with the Union Pacific Railroad on the one hundredth degree of longitude, as now required by law: And provided further, That said company shall connect their line of railroad and telegraph with the Union Pacific Railroad, but not at a point more than fifty miles westwardly from the meridian of Denver, in Colorado."

From this legislation it will be seen that the main trunk of the road was to commence on the one hundredth meridian, and that there were to be four branches—one from Sioux City; one known as the extension of the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Road from Atchison; one styled "the road through Kansas," and the fourth from Omaha. This omits the Burlington and Missouri branch from the Missouri River, as provided by the act of 1864, which need not be now included, but which is of some importance in the argument, as we shall hereafter show.

In this inquiry it is only necessary to advert to the road from Atchison and the road "through Kansas."

The road "through Kansas" was to be constructed by the Leavenworth, Pawnee and Western Railroad Company, from the mouth of the Kansas River to the one hundredth meridian. The Hannibal and Saint Joseph road was to extend from Saint Joseph, Missouri, via Atchison, to connect (conditionally) with the road through Kansas.

The "Central Branch," the only company now claiming additional lands and bonds, it is not denied, for the purposes of this report, has succeeded by regular assignment to all the rights of the Hannibal and Saint Joseph Company.

The "road through Kansas" designated its general route and filed a map in the Department of the Interior on the 19th of July, 1862, and also filed a new map of general location on the 1st day of July, 1865, both setting forth the design to connect with the main trunk at the one hundredth meridian. The Central Branch filed its map June 27, 1863, and completed its one hundred miles from the Missouri, via Atchison, within the time required by law, to wit, on the 30th day of December, 1869. The commissioners reported on the 13th of January, 1868, and it was accepted by the President on the 20th of the same month, and the company received its bonds and a portion of its lands.

The "road through Kansas" has not completed its road within the time required by the acts of 1862 and 1864, but had complied with all statutes in force bearing upon it up to the passage of the act of July 3, 1866.

By reference to the map it is found that the initial points of these two roads on the Missouri River are about thirty miles apart; and that the Atchison road is one hundred miles or more below where the Burlington and Missouri road crosses, the latter being about twenty-five miles below Omaha.

And thus having all the legislation bearing directly or indirectly, as is believed, upon the question before us, we turn to its departmental history; for it has such history, having been before the Departments in various forms at various times; has been considered apparently with great care, after the most elaborate argument by the most eminent counsel, and the rulings made assist not a little in the solution of the vexed problem.

We will endeavor to state this history as nearly in its chronological order as possible.

December 5, 1866, this company (then the Atchison and Pike's Peak Company) first made claim to extend its road to connect with the Union Pacific road, and to receive subsidy, &c.

There is nothing on the files to show when the "eastern division" commenced work under the act of July 3, 1866, but they filed a map of general route July 11, 1866, and of definite location May 8, 1869.

On the 10th of March, 1866, the Secretary of the Interior made an order restoring to market the lands theretofore withdrawn upon the application of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, "eastern division."

The Atchison and Pike's Peak Company (or, as we shall hereafter call it, the Central Branch) having requested him to reconsider this order, he, on the 19th of February, 1869, addressed a letter to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, reviewing the application, the claim being that under the law the said company was entitled to extend its road from its intersection with such vacated line, and on the latter to the one hundredth meridian, and to receive aid in the way of lands and bonds. This letter (from the then Secretary, Mr. Browning) fully reviews the entire claim, declines to withdraw the lands, and very clearly and unequivocally denies the right of the company to build the road over the vacated line and claim subsidy and lands therefor. And this opinion was reiterated in the annual report of the Secretary, of 1868, wherein he refers to the completion of the one hundred miles of their road.

In this connection it further appears that a petition, similar to that afterward presented to the present Secretary of the Interior, (of April 12, 1871,) was presented to Secretary Browning, of date February 8, 1869, and that Mr. Browning indorsed thereon as follows:

"There are intricate and difficult questions involved in this case, as it is now presented, affecting very large and important interests, and requiring more time for their examination, consideration, and decision than it is in my power now to bestow, and I deem it my duty, therefore, to let the whole subject go over for my successor.

"O. H. B.

"MARCH 3, 1869."

It also appears that Secretary Cox, on the 28th of March, 1870, made an order withdrawing certain lands for the benefit of the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company; and upon being interrogated whether such reservation was intended for the benefit of the claimant, answered, on the 27th of May following, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C., May 27, 1870.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry, I would state that the reservation of any existing adverse rights, whether individual or corporate, &c., in the order of March 28, last, directing a withdrawal of lands on account of the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, was intended for the benefit of the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company in case their right to construct their road to a connection with the Union Pacific Railroad should be recognized by proper authority or by Congress, and the representatives of the former company were so informed when the order was issued.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. D. COX, Secretary.

E. H. NICHOLS, ESQ.,
Treasurer Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company, Washington, D.C.

The Central Branch (for the hundred miles west of the Missouri River) filed a map of the general route on the 8th of July, 1863, and of definite location March 4, 1866.

On the 27th of January, 1870, Secretary Cox, in a letter to the President, refers to the decision of Secretary Browning, to the fact that counsel for the company had asked that the question should be re-examined; says "that he has determined not to disturb the decision" before made; and states, not, however, at very great length, the considerations influencing his conclusions.

On the next day, January 28, 1870, the Secretary made known to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, by written communication, that he should not disturb the rulings of his predecessor; and concurs in the opinion "that the asserted right of the company to subsidies in lands and bonds in aid of the construction of a road on such vacated line cannot be recognized under existing legislation."

Prior to the 8th of May, 1871, the company filed its petition to the Secretary of the Interior, (Mr. Delano,) asking to file its map showing the extension and continuation of its road to a connection with the one hundredth meridian, to withdraw lands, &c. The President, on the 20th of April, 1871, refers the petition, requesting the Secretary to hear the parties and decide the claims on its merits. The Secretary accordingly, on the said 8th of May, 1871, addressed a communication to the Attorney-General, in which he recites quite fully the legislation, what had been done by the several companies thereunder, and asking his opinion upon the questions involved, and especially upon this: "Is the Central Branch authorized to file its map of the route of such extended road, and entitled upon the completion of the same to the lands originally granted to the 'road through Kansas?'" To this the Attorney-General responded on the 3d of June, 1871, reviewing at great length all of the legislation, as also the acts of the company, and concluding with the opinion that the claim of the company should be rejected. The opinion is very full, discussing all the points raised, and to it we may refer more at length hereafter.

June 19, 1871, the Attorney-General being absent, Mr. Bristow, Acting Attorney-General, telegraphed him that the attorneys for the company had addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior asking a rehearing, and that the Secretary concurred in the opinion that such hearing should be had. To this the Attorney-General replied on the next day, "No objection to rehearing on new facts."

August 11, 1871, the Attorney-General wrote to Hon. S. C. Pomeroy that he could have no further connection with question unless requested thereto by the Secretary of the Interior; that he presumed that the Secretary would not make such request unless apprised of new facts, and that if such facts exist he should not object to a reconsideration of the subject.

August 25, 1871, Mr. Nichols, one of the attorneys for the company, presented to the Secretary a quite lengthy and detailed statement as a ground for a review of his decision by the Attorney-General, showing or tending to show surprise, want of full opportunity on the part of the company to be heard, &c. This was transmitted to the Attorney-General on the 9th of September, 1871, and on the same day Mr. Nichols was advised by Mr. Akerman that he was willing to hear the parties further, by a time named by him; after that, in view of engagements, he would not promise to hear them; that he would, however, review his opinion, and if led to believe that any material consideration had been overlooked he would invite further argument, and give notice accordingly; but if he had no cause to suspect error or oversight, the opinion before rendered would be considered as final upon the question involved.

August 28, 1871, the Acting Secretary, (Cowan,) referring to this opinion, as also to a letter from the Attorney-General to Hon. S. C. Pomeroy, (without date,) and also to the fact that the company had submitted a statement embodying new facts, as they claimed, (meaning this statement of Nichols and others, doubtless,) returned to the Attorney-General his opinion "in order that the same might be reconsidered."

October 23, 1871, the Secretary, referring to the opinion and the letter of the 28th of August, proceeded to state that on that date the company had withdrawn their application to file map and have lands withdrawn; that the same has been granted, and that nothing being before the Department there was no necessity for giving the subject further consideration.

On the 30th of the same month the Secretary advised the President, by letter, that he had received from the company a map showing the general direction and route of their road from its terminus to the one hundredth meridian, as also a resolution of the company adopting said route as a continuation of their road, if approved by the President. The map and resolution were transmitted with the letter, showing the request of the company of the 26th of the month, that the map and route might be approved by the President.

On the next day E. C. Ingersoll, attorney for the Saint Joseph and Denver City Railroad Company, addressed a letter to the Attorney-General, asking him to transmit to the Department of the Interior his opinion of the 3d of June, 1871, to the end that it might be promulgated without unnecessary delay. To this the Attorney-General, on the 19th of November following, replied that he had informed the Secretary of the Interior that his opinion upon the subjects involved was unchanged, and, further, that the opinion referred to would be transmitted to the Secretary if he wished it.

August 29, the Attorney-General asked of the Acting Secretary a copy of the statement of the company asking a re-examination of their claim, and this was transmitted to him on the next day.

September 5, 1871, the Attorney-General addressed a letter to the Secretary of the Interior, setting forth that Mr. Nichols, of counsel for the company, was entirely mistaken as to the attention which the question had received at his hands when giving his opinion on the 3d of June. He proceeds to state that counsel were heard for several hours, and to set out in detail the papers, laws, opinions, speeches, letters, and other facts and documents examined by him. He further states that he will still hear counsel during that week, either at his office or in New York.

November 17, referring to the letter of the Secretary of the 23d ultimo, advising him that the company had withdrawn its application &c., he takes occasion to refer to the application of the company for rehearing, to his expressed willingness to hear them; that while matters were in this position the opinion had been returned to him; that no cause to change his opinion had been shown; that the parties had declined to avail themselves of the opportunity to present the case when offered; that the opinion was subject to be transmitted to him if desired; that it was duly rendered; that it was never intended in consenting to a rehearing to recall it, nor as a suspension of his opinion; and that the views expressed remain unchanged.

On the 15th of March, 1873, the Secretary of the Interior advised the Attorney-General that the company had asked that the lands along the contemplated extension, (from Fort Riley to the one hundredth meridian,) might be withdrawn; and the inquiry was submitted whether it would be proper for the President to approve the map for said extension with the distinct understanding that it was done solely for the purpose of causing a withdrawal of the lands, and without committal upon the question of the right of the company to the lands. To this there was a response on the 17th of the same month, by Solicitor General Phillips, that the lands might be conditionally withheld, and that a provisional approval of such map, "made expressly for such purpose alone, and without prejudice to the right of the President of disapproving it in the end," would be proper, and would not commit him in regard to his final action.

There is no question as to the assent of the company to the provisions of the act of 1862. This was formally resolved on the 16th of June, 1863, and the Government duly notified.

The files and records in the Interior Department contain nothing to show that the President ever "approved of the route in Kansas west of the meridian of Fort Riley to the point on the hundredth meridian," under the ninth section of the act of July, 1862.

The map of the Central Branch from Fort Riley to the one hundredth meridian, with the letter accompanying of the treasurer of the co mpany, of the 26th of October, 1871, was transmitted to the President on the 30th of the same month, with the letter of the Secretary above referred to of that date.

On the 27th of February, 1872, by direction of the President, his secretary referred all said letters to the Attorney-General, with the request that he would inform the President whether his approval of the map would be sufficient authority for the company to make the proposed extension under existing laws. The Attorney-General (Williams) indorsed on the paper that, having been of counsel for a claimant adverse to the Central Branch prior to his appointment, he referred the whole matter to the Solicitor-General. Following this, upon the papers was an indorsement by the then Solicitor-General (Bristow) to the effect that for reasons personal to himself, as stated to counsel when the papers were submitted, he was unwilling to express any opinion in the case.

Thus the matter stood until January 10, 1873, when Solicitor-General Phillips gave to the President an opinion that the Central Branch, under the act of 1862, had the right to file a map with a view of constructing that part of the Pacific Railroad between the meridian of Fort Riley and the one hundredth meridian; that this right is confirmed by the said act, in connection with the act of July 2, 1864, and the events which subsequently happened, and that this was not divested by the amendatory act of July 3, 1866.

Soon after this the resolution upon which we are now reporting was passed, and no further step has been taken by any of the Departments.

And now, in the light of this legislation and the action of the Executive Departments, we are to determine, under the resolution of the Senate, whether the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company is entitled to build a road from its present western terminus to connect with the main branch of said road at the one hundredth parallel and receive subsidy in lands and bonds therefor. The distance is from two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty miles; and if the right exists, then follows the obligation of the Government to give lands and bonds to the amount or value of seven or eight millions of dollars. We thus refer to the large amount involved, not because it should by any means influence the conclusion to be reached, but to show the necessity of greater care and deliberation in appreciating and determining the questions involved. The fact, too, that the rulings of the Departments have not been uniform, as also the further one that several most eminent counsel have in argument controverted the opinion of the late Attorney-General, should, and of course would, counsel yet more careful thought in reviewing this record.

Appreciating, as we trust, fully, all these things, let us see, before we proceed, what it is we are to decide; and first, what it is we are not to decide. We submit not whether this company made a hard (as they term it) contract; nor yet whether good faith demands that Congress should legislate to relieve them from the position in which they are now placed. It is no part of our duty to inquire whether the company acted wisely or unwisely, upon proper or improper views of the legislation of Congress; whether the Kansas company exercised good or bad faith; whether it would be just or otherwise to now aid the company to make the proposed connection. And hence we dismiss all that is said in the several arguments, and all appeals touching the good faith of the Government, and the hardship to this company if they do not get this subsidy; esteeming them of no possible moment in this inquiry, as questions with which we have nothing to do, except as they may be legitimately considered as tending to throw light upon the intention of Congress.

And in this connection we remark, further, that we give but little heed to the suggestion of counsel that neither the committee nor the Senate should undertake to decide upon their rights, but rather provide for leaving the whole matter to the courts. As the question stands, and under the inquiry submitted, we can conceive of no sufficient reason why, if in our opinion the company is entitled to this subsidy, we should not say so; and if not so entitled, why we should not as explicitly so declare. It has remained, in all reason, long enough a subject for examination and re-examination, for discussion and rediscussion before the Departments, and a theme for comment in the press and forum, to be set at rest by the earliest and most authoritative action. It is not the least of the just complaints against our legislation and system of disposing of the rights of individuals and adjudicating claims that few things are ever conclusively and definitely settled. And while we would be most reluctant to countenance the least invasion by the legislative of the judicial department of the Government, we can conceive of no possible objection to declaring the true intent of an existing statute. This is of almost every-day occurrence. Indeed, we know of no higher duty devolving upon the law-making power—and especially when the rights of the Government are involved—than to prevent, by the speediest action, as far as possible, wrong to the Government or an infringement of the rights of individuals. Congress is supposed to stand indifferent between the individual and the Government; as ready to relieve the one from actual injury or to prevent threatened wrong as to protect the other against a claim not founded in justice or law. And, therefore, without pretending to exercise judicial functions, it, in virtue of its sovereign and unquestioned power, may most appropriately declare what, in its opinion, are the rights of the Government; what has been granted and what not; and what the rights of those claiming adversely. And this the more readily since, if such adverse claimant has vested rights, the declaration of the law-maker could not, by possibility, interfere therewith, nor affect in the least his standing before the judicial tribunals.

We repeat, therefore, that, dismissing all question of what ought to have been the legislation thus far on this subject—as also of what would be right hereafter, and not in the least doubting our right and duty even to prevent action by any department of the Government which we believe to be in conflict with the law—we are remitted to the inquiry, singly and properly, whether this company, under the law, is entitled to locate and build this two hundred and twenty-five or more miles of road and claim subsidy therefor.

For reasons which we will proceed as briefly as possible to state, we feel constrained to answer, most decidedly not. And we are the more justified in consulting brevity in view of the decided current of departmental action, and especially the opinion of the law-officer of the Government, of the 3d June, 1871, which is exceedingly clear in its statements, and to which, in all the arguments, we have found no sufficient answer.

Let us consider some of the difficulties in the way of any other construction. And, first, by the ninth section of the act of July 1, 1862, it is expressly declared that "the route in Kansas, west of the meridian of Fort Riley, to the aforesaid point on the one hundredth meridian of longitude, (is) to be subject to the approval of the President of the United States, and to be determined by him on actual survey." Without this actual survey and approval there was no right to build. True, the company might proceed to survey and build, but without the approval contemplated there would be no right to the lands and bonds. For this provision there were beyond doubt good and sufficient reasons, upon which we need not enter. Indeed if we should even conclude that the provision was quite unnecessary, the fact would remain that the law so speaks, and we have no right to disregard it. And now when it is remembered that there never was an actual survey of this route by any one, (unless by the company setting up the claim which we are now considering, which we shall notice hereafter,) and also that there is no evidence that the President ever approved any such route or survey—we say, when these things are remembered, we can hardly conceive upon what ground the claim for lands and bonds can be predicated.

Until it was thus located and approved, the Central Branch could not complete its road, even to the contemplated junction with the road through Kansas; for nothing can be clearer than that claimant was bound to build, not just one hundred miles west from the Missouri River, but more or less as it might be necessary to make such connection. The one hundred miles was the limit of the subsidy, but not of the length of its line.

Looking for the present, therefore, at the act of 1862, it seems very obvious that until there was such actual survey and approval there could be no point of junction, for, in the language of the thirteenth section of said act, it could not otherwise "connect and unite with the road through Kansas." It might build ever so many miles of road, whether for the purpose of going directly to the one hundredth meridian on the Union Pacific road or to a point east thereof, "to connect and unite with the road leading from the western boundary of Iowa," (section 13, act of 1862,) or to connect with the road through Kansas, (it being conceded that it was contemplated primarily that it should connect with the latter,) and yet, by the very terms of the act, the bonds and lands are to be given for one hundred miles, and no more. And recurring here for a moment to the sixteenth section of the act of 1864, (and upon which claimant, as we shall see hereafter, mainly relies,) we find that not until it had "completed its road" would it have the right, or be entitled or authorized, to extend and continue the same in the general direction and route. If it be said that it was contemplated and expected that the route of the road through Kansas would be so located as that it could be struck within one hundred miles west of the Missouri River, the answer is that this, conceded, would not much, if any, advance the argument. It may be admitted as true, and that claimant had good reason to so expect, and yet the fact would remain that it might be so located in strict compliance with the law as to make the point of junction much more than that, and in that event the building of one hundred miles would no more give the right to proceed by reason of the so-called default of the Kansas Company than would the building of ten. So, too, if there never was a line actually surveyed and afterward approved, so as to present a point of junction, the building of one hundred miles would not be a completion of its road by this company any more than the building of one hundred miles in the direction of the road from the western boundary of Iowa would be such completion. Is it said that it never could have been intended that this road was to be so completely at the mercy or subject to the action or non-action of another company? The sufficient answer is that it accepted the grant upon the terms so nominated, and, if unfortunate "in having a privilege so beset with difficulties and contingencies, it was, nevertheless, the will of Congress to thus qualify it, as it was of the company to accept it so qualified and restricted." The eastern terminus was therefore definite and well understood. The western was not fixed or named. It depended upon a contingency. It was to be somewhere upon a line to be run or surveyed by another party, which was to be approved by the President. That line never was located, never was approved; there was hence no point of junction, hence no completion, and as a consequence no right to continue in the general direction or route of the defaulting line. For, to here leave this part of the argument, suppose the actual survey had been made, and the President had refused to approve the route, where would the point be to which claimant might build and say its road was completed? Why one point more than another? And why say such point has been reached at just one hundred miles from the Missouri River, any more than this or the other side of such one-hundred-mile stake? In any view, it seems to us clear that it never has, in contemplation of law, completed its road, and hence cannot be entitled to further subsidy in bonds or lands.

Second. But it is insisted that, though the road through Kansas never made such actual survey and never had such executive approval, the Central Branch, upon the default of the Kansas company, did make such actual survey from the meridian of Fort Riley to the one hundredth meridian, and that it is now before the President for his approval. And it is also claimed that it should be approved, the lands withdrawn from market, and the Central Branch permitted to proceed with the construction of the road and take bonds and lands to the same extent in every respect as the Kansas road might or could if it had complied with the law. This presents the substantial and all-important question in this case, and we approach it with the most abiding conviction that it has even less to support it than the one (somewhat more technical) above discussed. Many are the considerations bearing upon it, and and we must necessarily dispose of them briefly.

It will be borne in mind that by the ninth section of the act of 1864 the right was given to any company authorized to construct a road from the Missouri River to the initial point (one hundredth meridian) to so construct it as to connect with the main line at any point westwardly of such initial point, in case said company deemed such westwardly action more practicable or desirable. This, it will be seen, included the road through Kansas, and clearly authorized it to make connection at any point east of the junction of the Union Pacific with the Central Pacific. An important proviso was added, however, that no greater amount of bonds and lands was to be given than if the union had taken place at the one hundredth meridian, as contemplated by the original act. Instead of leaving the matter thus indefinite, the act of 1866 provided that the "road through Kansas" (known as the Union Pacific Railway Company, eastern division) should make this connection at a point not more than fifty miles west of Denver, Colorado.

That it was entirely competent to authorize this change, either as contemplated by the act of 1864 or 1866, of course no one can doubt. And especially so in view of the express power given in the act of 1862 (section 18) to "add to, alter, amend, or repeal" said act. We may add, in this connection, the significance of this provision in the act of 1866, when we recur to the right there given to designate the final route at any time before December, 1866, and the renewed provision that it was to have no greater amount in bonds than if it had united with the main line at the one hundredth meridian.

Now, let us see when the only map of survey was filed under which it is or can be claimed the right to build the road to the one hundredth meridian exists. We find it was on the 26th of October, 1871, or more than seven years after the authority was given to change the line to any point westwardly of such initial point, and more than five years after the point of junction was substantially fixed hundreds of miles west of that originally contemplated. Not only so, but the Central Branch finished its own hundred miles in 1869, (December,) more than five years after the first, and three years after the second, act authorizing the change. Then, too, long prior to this, to wit, in July, 1866, the road through Kansas filed a map of general route on the new line. (The map of definite location was filed in February, 1869.) In addition to this, the Secretary of the Interior, as early as March, 1866, made an order restoring the lands to market theretofore withdrawn, from the meridian of Fort Riley to the originally proposed initial point. This remained undisturbed until the claimant asked that the order should be rescinded, when the Secretary, in February, 1869, re-affirmed the previous direction and denied the application.

Now, in view of this plain legislation and undisputed facts, what shadow of foundation can there be for this claim? What was it the Government wanted? Legislating for the people and for their interests, what was primarily contemplated? The answer is, that the road through Kansas should connect with the Union Pacific road. In other words, that the road starting from the mouth of the Kansas River should at some point unite with the main line; and in aid thereof there was a clearly defined purpose to aid in bonds and lands, but in no event to a greater amount than if the road had been constructed to the point first designated. Did Congress ever intend to aid the changed line to this amount wherever it might unite, at a point westwardly of the initial point, (say ten, twenty, or fifty miles, more or less,) and duplicate the bounty to another line running parallel therewith to the original point? Was it ever contemplated in authorizing this change that it was keeping alive or transferring this bounty to another company, which was especially limited in aid to one hundred miles, and which, if by possibility entitled to any additional right, must rest it alone upon the claimed default of the very company which was relieved from its obligation to build on the original line by the very power to which these companies, if they did not owe their lines, at least owed their right to claim such bounty? And especially can this be believed, when we find that Congress, in the very act which authorized a change of line, provided for aid (in lands) to another company (the Burlington and Missouri) crossing the Missouri River between the road from Atchison and that from the western boundary of Iowa, and connecting with the main line at a point not farther west than said one hundredth meridian? The subsidy to this new line would seem not unreasonably to have been based upon the prospective change of the Kansas road, and the design to still give aid to some road south of Omaha and running to the main line. We say prospective change, because it will scarcely be denied that a change was not only possible but beyond all doubt intended by the new legislation. If not, it was a most idle and useless grant of power.

It is said, however, that by the sixteenth section of the act of 1866 any two or more of the companies engaged in or authorized to build their several roads were empowered to unite or consolidate their organizations, with certain consequent rights and privileges, and that if any one of the companies should not enter into such consolidation it was entitled, upon the completion of its road, "to continue and extend the same under the circumstances and in accordance with the provisions of said section, and to have all the benefits thereof as fully and completely as if it had entered into such consolidated organization." As to the companies so consolidating, the right to continue, upon the part of any company, after completing its own, was dependent upon the failure of the company whose duty it was to build to construct its road as contemplated by the law, and the company so failing was styled a "defaulting company."

It is a question of fair doubt whether the Central Branch was contemplated by this action, or any other than the Union Pacific and Central Pacific lines. Waiving this, however, we shall assume that the Central Branch was included, as well as others, and thus meet the questions presented.

The Central Branch never entered into such consolidation. Nor did it (or the Hannibal and Saint Joseph company) ever unite with the road through Kansas, as provided by the tenth section of the act of 1862, by filing their assent or otherwise.

The argument, however, is, that being one of the non-consolidating companies, and having completed its road, it now has the right, by reason of the default of the road through Kansas, to continue the construction to the one hundredth meridian on the same terms, and under like circumstances, as said Kansas road might or should have done.

One, if not the pivotal element of this proposition is that the Kansas road was in default. This we referred to, somewhat incidentally, above, but the importance given to it by claimant demands more extended remark.

The default evidently contemplated was in not constructing the number of miles in the time required by the statute, (act of 1862, section 10, and 1864, section 5,) to wit, one hundred miles in three years after July 17, 1862, (the time of assent to the act,) and a like number annually thereafter. And as claimant, in this view, could only take benefit from the failure to construct the line between the point of expected or contemplated junction and the one hundredth meridian, and as there is no pretense that there was failure on the part of the Kansas road to build east of that point, we are remitted to the inquiry whether, beyond said point of junction, there was the default meant by the statute upon which the right would ensue to claimant to continue and extend its road. In other words, was there such failure on the part of the Kansas road as that the Central Branch, on the completion of its road, might extend it to the one hundredth meridian.

If default or failure, it must have resulted from non-compliance with or non-fulfillment of some duty or obligation imposed by the statutes. And it would seem also to logically follow that the default must have been such as that the Government could either insist upon some forfeiture or base thereon the right to enforce some claim or remedy against the defaulting company. This must be so, unless this claimant, by reason of some vested, perfected, or executed right, stands in such an attitude that the Government could not, by a release from the consequences of the supposed default, interfere with the rights so acquired. For, if such rights existed or were acquired, then the action of Congress at this time could not divest them, as in such a case the right would be beyond legislative control. And we may remark in this connection (as pertinent to what has been before said) that, if there was such vested right, the company has for many months had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the courts (by mandamus) to enforce the same, and not all the legislation of Congress, at this or any subsequent session, could, of itself, impair such right. For, beyond doubt, the rule is that if Congress shall, by statute, ex moro motu, give to a citizen property which shall be accepted, it thereby becomes a gift executed, and can no more be reclaimed than if given by an individual under like circumstances. A repeal or change of the statute after the acceptance would not, we need scarcely add, divest the property. It is otherwise, however, where the right is merely executory, not vested, or does not become executed before the repeal, for then it falls with the repeal and cannot be enforced.

Now, what are the facts in this case? Claimant's right to connect so as to get to the main line, in the first instance, depended upon the compliance with the law on the part of the Kansas road. The grant was accepted upon this condition. In this the Government took no other part than to announce the conditions, claimant being entirely free to accept or refuse the same. Coupled with this proposition, and a part of the terms of acceptance, as much so as if written therein at length, was the one that Congress might "add to, alter, amend, or repeal the act" under which the right was claimed. True, this right was reserved "the better to accomplish the object of the act," which was expressed to be "to promote the public interest and welfare," and to secure "to the Government at all times the use and benefits" of said road for postal, military, and other purposes, ("having due regard for the rights of said companies.") But no one will certainly pretend that Congress was not to be the exclusive judge of what would best "accomplish the object of the act." (We thus state the propositions, leaving out of view for the present all question of vested rights.) So, too, it was for Congress to determine whether any proposed action did or did not have due regard to the rights of these companies. This company and all others consented to this as clearly and unquestionably as if the very words of the section from which we have above quoted (act of 1862, section 18) had been written in each of their resolves of acceptance. It was a part and a most important part of the contract. It will not do to say that so long as such subsequent congressional action had, in the estimation of the companies and other persons, "due regard for their right" it was valid, and when in their opinion it did not it was invalid. The companies consented that Congress should judge of this, and however unwisely or harshly it might judge, while such judgment might be criticised or complained of as ever so unjust, it could not therefore be held or treated as of no force. In the exercise of this right, Congress, in 1864, authorized the Kansas road to change its line. This the Central Branch knew, and consented by its act of acceptance it might do. This right was again recognized, if possible, more definitely, by the act of 1866. And this the claimant knew and agreed might be done. It will not do to say that the company never expected or anticipated that Congress would thus disregard what appears to be so clearly against their interests. It will not do to say, because this change of line leaves the Central Branch, at the end of one hundred miles, "suspended in mid air, ending nowhere, connecting with nothing," that, therefore, Congress has acted so unjust and unequitable that this company should be allowed to travel on until it joins the main line. Such suggestions, if entitled to any weight, address themselves rather to the law-making power for relief than to your committee, who are called upon to construe the law as they find it, and not to determine what it should have been. If such failure attended claimant's enterprise, (of which we know nothing, and, indeed, with which we have nothing to do,) it resulted not from an unwarranted exercise of power on the part of the Government, but rather from a mistaken confidence in the act of the Kansas company, connecting therewith, possibly, a faith that Congress could only seek to "promote the public interest and welfare" by leaving intact the lines of road as contemplated by the original act. If in all this they were mistaken, the reflection is that the power to determine otherwise was "nominated in the bond," to which they were doubtless willing and hopeful parties.

But let us here recur to some facts before we state the conclusion of the argument in this part of the case. The Central Branch on the 1st of July, 1866, had, as is claimed, twenty miles of road built, forty graded, and contracts outstanding for the other forty. Two years before this, Congress had authorized the Kansas road to change its line. The Central Branch completed its one hundred miles the 30th of December, 1869—three years after the passage of the act of 1866. The Kansas road filed, in due time, its assent to the provisions of the act of 1864, and also claimed the right under the ninth section to so construct its road as to form a connection with the Union Pacific at a point westwardly of the one hundredth meridian. On the 21st of February, 1866, it presented a map showing a new route west from Fort Riley, known as the Smoky Hill route. The Attorney-General decided that, as three years had elapsed since the taking effect of the act of 1862, the company could not file a map delineating a new line of road, and the request for a withdrawal of lands was refused. The act of 1866 authorized the company to designate the general route, which was filed within the time required, (to wit, July 11, 1866, that of definite location May 8, 1869,) both showing an almost entire departure from the original line west from Fort Riley.

By what authority were these changes made? By that of Congress. The Central Branch had the right to unite with the Kansas road, not a franchise therein, upon the failure to build the road. As Secretary Browning says, this implies, it is true, the prosecution by the Kansas company of its work upon the line which was originally contemplated, and perhaps we might add, adopted by the company. Congress, however, sanctioned a departure with the express saving of the right to bonds and lands upon filing its intended new line. If there was default, it was by consent of the power which could claim and insist upon the consequences of such default, and that, too, at a time when the Central Branch had a mere or simple right to unite, which might be taken away, and when, in no just sense, could it be said that there was a vested or executed right. It is, to our minds, a misapprehension of facts and law alike to speak of the failure of the Kansas company to build the road west from Fort Riley as a default within the meaning of the statute, when it was released therefrom by the clearly expressed will and consent of the very power which had imposed the obligations. "A breach of condition or requirement imposed by law is contemplated, involving a forfeiture of some pre-existing right. Such a breach cannot be predicated of an authorized abandonment of a portion of the old line. * * * The original route from Fort Riley has been vacated by authority of law," and we are utterly unable to see how any company can be entitled to bonds and lands to aid in the construction of a road upon it. If claimant can so construct this road, and is entitled to the subsidy, then, as it seems to us most clearly, in the face of the legislative will, it would occur that there were two distinct and independent grants of subsidies, both of which would be available; one on the vacated and one on the new line. The act of 1866 did not make a new grant, but simply recognized a continuing right. In the language of the Attorney-General, (Akerman,) the acts of 1864-'66 (and the act of March 3, 1869, in no way conflicts with this view) "authorized this (the Kansas) company to deviate from the route originally contemplated; * * * the identity of the road in the relation of the Government to it was still preserved." The departure authorized worked no forfeiture of the benefits granted. No duplication or other increase of subsidies was intended. There was nothing for the Central Branch to take, except what the Kansas company lost. The latter company lost nothing, and there was hence nothing for the former company to take. But one subsidy was ever granted for building the road, and as there can be no question that the Kansas company is entitled to one, we cannot recognize the right of substitution on the part of the Central Branch.

But this report is already too long, and we must omit further comment. In its support we invoke the unquestioned weight of the decisions of the departmental officers. This is clearly seen by what we have quoted, and it is equally true of others to which we might refer, but which we have not deemed necessary.

The attempt found in some of the papers and arguments to show that the question was not understood; that the decisions were based upon a partial presentation of the facts; that the whole matter was regarded as still open; and the claim not finally adjudicated, is without the least support. We doubt whether any question was ever more elaborately argued, or more thoroughly understood, by the Departments. No claimant could possibly be more persistent; none more diligent in effort to obtain favorable action. This very suggestion or argument is itself but further proof thereof, and is attempted to be maintained on part of claimant by taking detached sentences from this order or that opinion, and basing thereon the conclusion above indicated. We need not say that this would be unjust to the Departments, and is without warrant in any fair investigation. We need not discuss how far the opinion of the Attorney-General becomes binding upon the Department asking it. We deem it but proper to say, however, that all suggestions that the opinion of Attorney-General Akerman was not final, or so regarded by him, are unwarranted. It is but too clear that, while he manifested every disposition to give claimant a further hearing, the failure to have it was no fault of his, and that his last act in connection with it abundantly indicated, to use his own language, that "the views expressed remained unchanged." But this we need not discuss, for in our opinion the law is clearly against the right claimed.

To talk about the act of 1866 not repealing the former acts, so far as they relate to this right, is, in our minds, to discuss an immaterial issue, if not to ignore the clear purpose of the statute and well-settled rules of construction. We know that repeals by implication are not favored. This is but the statement of a general proposition. A repeal by implication however, is just as effectual and complete as if ever so express. This undeniably takes place where the latter statute is repugnant and contrary to the former, though there be no words of express repeal. And it is equally true that the real inquiry in all such cases is, Did the legislation intend to repeal or take away the former law, or was the new statute intended to be merely cumulative? In construing the subsequent act, if it makes a different provision on the same subject and is incompatible with the former, it is not to be taken as merely explanatory or cumulative, but as an implied repeal of the former act.

These are but brief statements of rules invoked by claimant, readily found in the books, and to support which authorities are not necessary. What have they to do with the question before us? We submit, little, if anything. If the Kansas company was asking the subsidy on the old line, (abandoning the new,) the rules applicable to implied repeals might be invoked. It might then be claimed (with what plausibility we do not stop to inquire) that the act of 1866 provided for a new, other, and different line, with new, other, and different subsidies, and the old grant could stand consistently with the new. But claimant never had a grant for the old road. It merely had the (so to speak) inchoate or possible right to unite with the Kansas road, or upon its failure, under certain circumstances, to take its place, and acquire thereby or thereupon certain rights. When Congress said to the Kansas road, "Change your line; you shall have the former subsidy, but change your line," who will say that the old law remained in force so as to give to another company, having a contingent right, the old subsidy in all its original scope and extent?

But admit there was no repeal, which is true to a certain extent, nothing is gained. The right or power to build the Kansas road was continued. The right to change its terminal point west, however, was given. The right to do this was expressly reserved by the original act. After the act of 1866 it might build to the one hundredth meridian or to a point west. It could not build to both, however. And having elected to build, and having actually built to a point hundreds of miles west of that meridian, it cannot on the original line. Nor do we see how the Central Branch can do more, or, if it can, how it could get subsidy for more than the first hundred miles from the Missouri River.

And especially so, as it must not be forgotten that claimant takes it, if at all, under a grant from the Government. Shall this be construed most strongly against the Government, so that claimant shall take this entire subsidy, not under an express but an implied grant? The rule certainly is that such a grant is not to inure upon mere implication. The construction is to be in favor of, and not most strongly against, the Government. And hence, for any purpose, any enterprise, any work, be it the most meritorious possible, a subsidy or bounty is not to be implied, nor yet to be presumed, in the absence of an express and unequivocal direction or expression of the legislative will. Any other doctrine would violate all canons of interpretation, all well-settled rules of construction, and the property of the Government would be subject to disposition, not according to the clearly-expressed will of the law-making power, but the implications of courts and the presumptions of officials, whether judicial or otherwise. If repeals by implication are not favored, much more, and, if possible, in a more important sense is it true that grants and subsidies by implication are not only not favored, but are and should be disfavored.

And we conclude, therefore, upon any and every possible view of this subject which can fairly be taken, that the Central Branch Pacific Railroad Company is not entitled to the claimed aid of bonds and lands for any road it may hereafter construct from its present terminus to the main line; and your committee accordingly report the accompanying bill and recommend its passage.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

Mr. PADDOCK. The Senator from Kansas yielding the floor I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of executive business. I understand that there are some matters which are important, that require attention in executive session.

Mr. INGALLS. I have no objection to yielding to a motion for that purpose with the understanding that I may resume the floor when the bill is next before the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only desire to say that if the Senate were not, as now, without a quorum and so situated that there is great difficulty in getting a quorum at this time, I should object to this motion and insist on proceeding with the consideration and disposition of this bill; but under the circumstances I shall not object to the motion with the understanding that this bill shall be the unfinished business for to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were re-opened, and (at three o'clock and thirty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, January 3, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The SPEAKER. On the last day of the session of the House a quorum did not appear, and that point having been raised the Journal of the preceding day's session was not read. The Chair will now direct the Clerk to read the Journal of Friday last and afterward the Journal of Saturday last.

The Journals of Friday and Saturday last were then read and approved.

COUNTING BALLOTS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE-PRESIDENT.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of bankers, capitalists, and merchants of the city of New York, asking an amicable adjustment of the pending political difficulties. I ask that the memorial be read, printed in the RECORD, and referred to the select committee of seven upon that subject.

The SPEAKER. If the memorial is read it will necessarily be printed in the RECORD. The first question is upon granting unanimous consent for the presentation of the memorial.

Mr. HALE. What is the title of the memorial?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] stated that it was a memorial from bankers, merchants, and others in the city of New York, asking for an amicable adjustment of the pending presidential controversy.

Mr. HALE. There is no objection to that memorial being read.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I am sure no one will object to it.

No objection being made, the memorial was received and read, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, representing a large proportion of the financial and commercial interests of the city of New York, beg leave most respectfully to express their great satisfaction at the action of your honorable bodies in appointing committees of conference to consider the proper mode of counting the ballots for President and Vice-President of the United States.

They hail this action as an indication that the two Houses of Congress are desirous of settling this complicated question in a spirit of moderation and conciliation; and they beg leave to represent that, in acting thus, your honorable bodies have the cordial sympathy of the great mass of the American people, irrespective of party.

Your memorialists most respectfully, but most earnestly, pray that all mere party considerations may be thrown aside, and that in this crisis in the history of the United States the pure and unselfish patriotism which inspired the founders of the Republic may guide your legislative action, and that you may thus relieve the country from its present uncertainty and apprehensions by a prompt determination of the mode in which the pending momentous issue shall be decided.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.,

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I move that the memorial be referred to the select committee of seven upon the subject of counting the electoral vote.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table——

Mr. HALE. One moment, if the gentleman pleases. I move to reconsider the vote by which the memorial just read was referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OWNERS OF SCHOONER FLIGHT.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table House bill No. 732, which has been returned from the Senate with an amendment, for the purpose of moving that the House concur in the amendment of the Senate. With the permission of the House I will make a brief statement. As the bill passed the House it appropriated $3,000 to Mrs. Catherine Thrush, and others, owners of the schooner Flight, for the loss of their vessel. The Senate refused to concur in the appropriation and amended the bill so as to refer the claim to the Court of Claims. I presume there can be no possible objection to the reference of the claim to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill and amendments be read.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Catherine Thrush, widow, and William B. Stone, owners of the schooner Flight of the city of Baltimore, Maryland, the sum of $3,000 in full compensation for the loss of their schooner Flight in Chesapeake Bay October 8, 1873, by a collision with the United States steamer Tallapoosa.

The amendment of the Senate was to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

That the claim of the legal owner or owners of the schooner Flight, her cargo, freight, and personal effects, alleged to have been sunk by collision with the United States steamer Tallapoosa October 8, 1873, be referred to the Court of Claims to hear and determine the same for judgment, with right of appeal as in other cases; Provided, That no suit shall be brought under the provisions of this act after six months from the date of the passage thereof.

Amend the title so as to read as follows:

An act referring the claim of the owners of the schooner Flight to the Court of Claims.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. MONROE. I would inquire of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] if this bill was regularly reported from a committee?

Mr. O'BRIEN. It was, and was passed unanimously by the House.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. O'BRIEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PAGE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield to me to introduce a bill for reference merely?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to offer a resolution, to which I think there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from California [Mr. PAGE] that there are one or two matters which members desire to present to the House, and to which the Chair thinks there will be no objection.

Mr. PAGE. I will withdraw the call for the regular order.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGLAS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4289) to amend an act entitled "An act amending the charter of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Select Committee on the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and ordered to be printed.

LEONARD L. LANCASTER.

Mr. RUSK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4290) for the relief of Leonard L. Lancaster, late sergeant Second Regiment Cavalry, Wisconsin Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PHILIP PENDLETON.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 735) for the relief of Philip Pendleton be taken from the Speaker's table, in order that the amendments of the Senate may be concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will be read, the right being reserved to any member to object afterward to their consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5 strike out the word "or."
In lines 6 and 7 strike out the word "equitable" and insert the word "true.'
In line 7 strike out the words "errors and losses of."
In line 7 after the word "money" insert "charged as."
In line 8 after the word "paymaster" insert "and not in fact received."
In lines 8 and 9 strike out the words "growing out of shorts in package of money received by him."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the bill, as it will stand with these amendments, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proper accounting officers of the Treasury be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to re-open and re-adjust the accounts of Philip Pendleton, late a paymaster in the United States Army, and allow him such additional credits in the settlement of his accounts as under the circumstances or in the opinion of said accounting officers may be just and true, for money charged as received by him as such paymaster, and not in fact received, which shall be established before them by satisfactory evidence.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. MILLIKEN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

INTERSTATE RAILROADS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals:

Resolved, That the Committee on Railways and Canals be requested to take into consideration and report to the House whether it is wise and expedient to provide by law for the appointment of a national board of engineers to supervise the condition of interstate railroads as far as their safety to citizens traveling upon them is concerned.

STANDARD SILVER DOLLAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill providing for the free coining of the standard silver dollar and restoring its legal-tender character.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I make the point of order that this bill does not belong properly to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. KASSON. It should go to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which any member may object to its introduction.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill providing for the free coining of the standard silver dollar and restoring its legal-tender character.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be, from time to time, coined, at the mints of the United States, silver dollars, of the weight of 412½ grains standard silver to the dollar, as provided for in the act of January 18, 1837; and that said dollar shall be a legal tender for all debts, public and private, except where payment of gold coin is required by law.

SEC. 2. That hereafter no charge shall be made for converting standard silver bullion into coin dollars herein provided for.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to receive from miners and owners standard silver bullion for conversion into silver dollars herein provided for, and he shall proceed to have the same coined with reasonable dispatch; and he is hereby authorized and directed to establish such additional depositories and refineries of standard silver bullion as may be necessary to facilitate its coinage.

SEC. 4. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask that this bill be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] asked unanimous consent to introduce the bill, and the Chair reserved to any member the right of objecting to its introduction after it had been read.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I object to the introduction of the bill with the reference proposed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain a conditional objection.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. Then I object unconditionally.

Mr. FORT. A member ought to be allowed to have his bill referred to whatever committee he may desire.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say, in reply to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] has no right except by unanimous consent to introduce any bill at this time.

Mr. FORT. I presume there is no objection to the introduction of the bill.

Mr. BRIGHT. I understood that unanimous consent had been given for the introduction of the bill and that objection was afterward made.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rule now as he always has done that full opportunity should be given to the House, after the reading of a bill has been asked for, to determine whether the bill should be introduced or not, and therefore he has always reserved to members the right to object to the introduction of any bill until after it has been read for the information of the House. There can be no doubt as to the propriety of such action on the part of the Chair.

Mr. O'BRIEN. There is no objection to the bill if it be allowed to be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] has objected unconditionally to the introduction of the bill, and therefore it is not now before the House.

PRE-EMPTORS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4291) to extend the time of pre-emptors on the public lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

APPRAISEMENT OF LANDS.

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas, also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4292) to provide for the appraisement of certain lands; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

Mr. YOUNG. I ask unanimous consent to present the following preamble and resolution for action at this time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the alarming frequency and increase of accidents upon railroads in different parts of the country, by which hundreds of persons are annually maimed and killed in the most horrible manner, requires some uniform system of legislation by either State or Federal authority to prevent the occurrence of such accidents and to protect the safety and lives of persons traveling by railway communication: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America, That the committee of said House upon the judiciary be, and is hereby, directed to inquire how far and to what extent the Congress of the United States has the constitutional right and authority to regulate and control by appropriate legislation railway travel and transportation in and between the different States of this Union; and if the members of said committee should be of the opinion that Congress possesses such constitutional power, then they are hereby instructed to frame and report such bill as will in their judgment most certainly provide for the safety and protection from injury and death of persons traveling over and upon such railways.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the introduction of that resolution, provided it be so modified as to go to the Committee on Commerce instead of the Committee on the Judiciary. It properly belongs to the Committee on Commerce, which has, under the rules of this House, the consideration of all such questions. With that change I do not object.

Mr. YOUNG. If the gentleman will look at the resolution carefully he will, I have no doubt, agree to withdraw his objection. A bill was introduced a moment ago looking partially to the accomplishment of the same object which I have in view. The reason why I prefer to have the resolution go to the Committee on the Judiciary is because it involves a question of constitutional law as to whether or not Congress has the right to legislate on this subject. The Committee on the Judiciary is instructed to look into the precedents and report to the House as to the jurisdiction of Congress over the subject.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee to introduce the resolution for adoption at this time.

Mr. YOUNG. Certainly; and the resolution itself provides for the reference of the subject to the Committee on the Judiciary. The gentleman from Texas, however, objects unless the resolution goes to the Committee on Commerce. I have suggested the reference of the subject to the Committee on the Judiciary, as I have already stated, because there is involved a grave question of constitutional law.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Texas, if there be no objection.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if there is any use for the Committee on Commerce in this House, it is to determine the very class of questions involved in this resolution. Indeed, no question comes before the Committee on Commerce which does not involve more or less the power of Congress, and yet that committee under the rules of this House is continually considering just this very class of questions. It is made the duty of that committee to consider this class of questions, and therefore the resolution should properly be referred to that committee instead of to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. YOUNG. I have no objection to letting the resolution be modified as suggested by the gentleman from Texas, and take reference to the Committee on Commerce instead of the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I object unless it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make a qualified objection.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Then I object unconditionally.

The SPEAKER. The resolution then is not before the House.

JAMES B. BELFORD.

Mr. KNOTT, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted a report on the credentials of James B. Belford, and moved that it be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HURD, by unanimous consent, presented the views of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary, on the same question, and also moved that they be printed to accompany the majority report and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BUCKNER, by unanimous consent, (at the request of the commissioners of the District of Columbia,) introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4293) to provide for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee for the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

PREVENTION OF ELECTION FRAUDS.

Mr. HUNTER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4294) to provide for the election of Federal officers and to prevent frauds in such elections; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ALSEA BAY.

Mr. LANE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4195) to provide for the survey and improvement of Alsea Bay, in Benton County, Oregon; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET HUNTER HARDIE.

Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4296) granting a pension to Margaret Hunter Hardie, widow of James A. Hardie, Inspector-General of the United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF GREAT KANAWHA RIVER.

Mr. HEREFORD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4297) to authorize a further appropriation to continue the improvement of the Great Kanawha River, in West Virginia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committe on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

E. W. BARNES—A RECUSANT WITNESS.

The SPEAKER. On the 21st day of December the House directed the Sergeant-at-Arms to take into custoday the person of E. W. Barnes, and produce him at the bar of this House. The Sergeant-at-Arms having informed the Chair that the said person is in his custody, the Chair now directs that the said Barnes be brought to the bar of the House.

The SERGEANT-AT-ARMS (Mr. JOHN G. THOMPSON) appeared at the bar, having in his custody E. W. Barnes, and said: In obedience to the order of the House, I have now here the witness E. W. Barnes, whom I was directed to bring to its bar.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms has now at the bar of the House E. W. Barnes, alleged to be in contempt of the privileges of this House, in that he refused to bring before a committee of this House, sitting in New Orleans, certain telegrams which said committee made demand of him for, and which said committee was authorized by this House to call for. The Chair desires in connection with this subject to submit to the House a communication which the Clerk will read.

WASHINGTON, January 3, 1877.

SIR: Referring to our conversation last evening relative to our wish that the appearance of Mr. Barnes may be delayed until two o'clock on Friday next, we have the honor to ask that you will give your favorable consideration to this request, and oblige us by allowing us till the time mentioned to confer with Mr. Barnes relative to the answer to be presented on his behalf to the House of Representatives.

We have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servants,

GROSVENOR P. LOWREY,
J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
Of counsel for E. W. Barnes.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the following resolution, and on it demand the previous question:

Resolved, That E. W. Barnes be allowed until Friday the 5th day of January, 1877, at two o'clock p. m., to make his answer at the bar of this House to the charge of contempt of its authority and breach of its privileges pending against him; and that said Barnes be remanded to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms and by him safely held until the judgment of the House be had on said charge.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The witness then withdrew in custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

IMPROVEMENT OF YOUGHIOGHENY RIVER.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4298) for the improvement of the Youghiogheny River in Pennsylvania; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

RECONSIDERATION OF REFERENCES.

Mr. KASSON. I call for the regular order; and, pending that, I move to reconsider the various references of matters this morning by unanimous consent, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is unnecessary. The fact that those matters came in under unanimous consent prevents their being brought back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. KASSON. Then I call for the regular order.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour commences at fifteen minutes to one o'clock, the business of the morning hour being the call of committees for reports. The call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

There were no reports from the Committee on Military Affairs.

EFFICIENCY OF SEAMEN IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4299) to promote the efficiency of seamen in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. HALE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was recommitted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SAILMAKERS IN THE NAVY.

Mr. ROBBINS, of Pennsylvania, also, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4300) to regulate the appointment of sailmakers in the United States Navy; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FEES OF CLERKS OF UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 3776) fixing the fees of clerks of United States district and circuit courts.

The bill was read. It provides that thereafter the clerks of the several circuit and district courts shall charge twenty-five cents for every search for any particular mortgage, judgment, or other lien; and he shall charge for searching the records of the courts for judgments, decrees, or other instruments constituting a general lien on real estate, and certifying the records of such search, fifteen cents for each person against whom such search is required to be made; and said clerks shall account for the same as other fees are accounted for by him. It provides further that any person certifying said search except the clerk shall, upon indictment and conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 for each offense.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out the words:

Any person certifying said search except the clerk shall, upon indictment and conviction thereof, be fined in a sum not exceeding $100 for each offense.

Mr. DURHAM. I can explain the object of this bill in a moment, if I can have the attention of the House.

Those gentlemen living in cities are more especially interested in this matter than those who live in the rural districts, and especially those living in the city of New York.

Clerks have been in the habit of making what they call searches for judgment records, and things of that sort, by deputy, and never accounting for the sums they receive. I believe it was ascertained by the committee that a very large sum in the city of New York, where these investigations are especially made, amounting to twelve or fifteen thousand dollars a year, is received, and yet the clerks have never rendered accounts for the services rendered.

Under the law as it stands the clerks of these courts are entitled to a fixed salary of $3,500 a year. Now if that is a fair compensation for them, after they have been paid the salary allowed by law and all their clerk hire and office rent and their incidental expenses are paid, then it certainly is not right that they should put in their pockets from twelve to fifteen thousand dollars a year, as they do in some instances, without accounting for it. And the Committee on the Expenditures in the Department of Justice, having considered the matter, have come to the conclusion that they ought to account for these fees as other clerks account for the fees they receive, and that is the sum and substance of the change as proposed in the existing law.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask the chairman of the committee a question.

Mr. DURHAM. Not as the chairman of the committee, but as the member reporting the bill, I will answer all questions.

Mr. FORT. I understand that all money that is collected through and by a United States court passes through the hands of the clerk and he charges a commission on that money of 1 per cent. Is that so?

Mr. DURHAM. No, it is not. The marshal collects the money.

Mr. FORT. I am told by a member of this House that although the marshals collect the money they are required to pay it over to the clerks, and after the marshal has taken out his commission the clerk also takes out another commission, and I am told of a particular instance where he had bid off property; he not only paid the marshal's fee of several hundred dollars, but also was compelled to pay the clerk's fee of $400, when there was no money passed at all in the transaction, the property having been bid off for the plaintiff and then the plaintiff was compelled to pay the clerk's fee of over $400 for simply passing a check through his hands, and when no money passed at all. I am told that by a member of the House.

Mr. CAULFIELD. There was such a case.

Mr. DURHAM. That is true.

Mr. FORT. If that is true it seems to me that now is the best time to correct that evil by amending this bill.

Mr. CAULFIELD. A separate bill has been introduced for that purpose.

Mr. FORT. I am told by my colleague in front of me [Mr. CAULFIELD] that a bill has been introduced for that purpose, and I trust the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] will allow this bill to be recommitted, so that it may be amended so as to include that provision.

Mr. DURHAM. That is altogether disconnected with this subject. The proposition stated by my friend is really correct, but his original question was not correct. All the money does not pass through the hands of the clerk, but certain moneys do, and they collect the percentage upon that. We propose to rectify that matter in another bill. I will now yield to the chairman of the committee [Mr. CAULFIELD] if he desires to make any further explanation in regard to the bill.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I hardly think it necessary to go into any extended argument in regard to this bill. It has been reported by the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice after having made an investigation which satisfied that committee of the absolute necessity for such a bill. Unless such a bill as this should be passed by both Houses of Congress a great deal of the money that goes through the hands of these clerks will go into improper channels, fees will be charged to which they are not properly entitled, and the public, the litigants before the courts, will consequently suffer.

It was for the purpose of correcting these evils that the committee has thought proper to report this bill, and I hope that no objection will be made to it, but that it will be allowed to pass at once in order that it may go through the Senate and become a law before this Congress adjourns.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

Mr. DURHAM also, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 3775) fixing the compensation of United States marshals and deputies.

The bill was read. It provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1876, the compensation allowed the marshals of the United States shall not exceed $5,000 per annum, or exceeding that rate for any time less than a year; and the compensation of deputy marshals shall not exceed $5 per day while actually engaged in their duties, nor shall their whole compensation exceed $1,200 per annum. Any marshal who shall procure from his deputy a receipt for a larger amount than he pays said deputy, and files said receipt, and procures a credit for the same in the settlement of his accounts with the proper authorities of the United States, shall be liable to indictment therefor; and upon conviction thereof shall be fined $500 and confined at hard labor for a period of not less than one year nor more than five years.

All acts and parts of acts in conflict with the bill are repealed.

The amendment reported by the committee was to strike out from line 10 down to line 19 of the bill, as follows:

Any marshal who shall procure from his deputy a receipt for a larger amount than he pays said deputy, and files said receipt, and procures a credit for the same in the settlement of his accounts with the proper authorities of the United States, shall be liable to indictment therefor; and upon conviction thereof shall be fined $500 and confined at hard labor for a period of not less than one year nor more than five years.

All acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are repealed.

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

And every such marshal shall procure from such deputy a receipt for the actual amount which he may pay such deputy on an account, and shall file such receipt and have credit for the same in the settlement of his accounts with the proper department.

Mr. DURHAM. I notice from the reading of the bill that the time for it to go into effect is stated to be the 1st day of July, 1876. It was intended to be 1877, and I will ask that that correction be made.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the change will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. DURHAM. I can state the object of this bill in a moment or two, if I can have the attention of the House. The law as it now stands fixes the compensation of United States marshals at $6,000 a year, provided the fees of the office amount to that much. In addition to that amount, each marshal gets his clerk hire, office rent, fuel, &c., and is permitted to retain as much as three-fourths of the amount of the fees earned by his deputies. By the bill under consideration it is proposed to reduce his compensation from $6,000 a year to $5,000 a year, or the same as the pay of a member of Congress, which we suppose to be enough for a United States marshal.

In the second place, we propose to limit him to $5 a day in paying the deputy marshals. The reason of that is this: Some instances have come to the attention of the committee——

Mr. HUBBELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DURHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HUBBELL. Does the $5 a day to deputies include traveling expenses?

Mr. DURHAM. The traveling expenses are paid in addition to the $5 a day. There is now a provision in the law allowing not only marshals but deputy marshals their traveling expenses.

Mr. HUBBELL. The reason I ask the question is this: There are portions of the country where $5 a day would not pay even the traveling expenses of a deputy marshal.

Mr. DURHAM. I am aware of that; but this bill does not interfere with the payment of traveling expenses. It merely fixes the amount which the principal marshal shall pay his deputies. The reason for limiting the amount to $5 a day is this: some instances have come to the attention of the committee where marshals have gone before the proper officers of the Government and asked and received a credit to the extent of three-fourths of the amount of fees earned by their deputies, and at the same time they did not pay their deputies more than one-half of the amount received from them. I remember one case where a marshal took from his deputy and received credit for over $2,000 in the settlement of his accounts, and yet he did not pay his deputy more than $750 of that amount. Our object is to put a stop to all that kind of dishonest practice by United States marshals.

The committee consequently propose to limit the pay given by marshals to their deputies to $5 a day each, and then to require the marshal to file a receipt for the actual amount only which he has paid to his deputies. The whole object of the bill is to remedy the defects which now seem to exist in the present law. We deem $5,000 a year, the pay of a member of Congress, to be ample compensation for a United States marshal. And when in addition to that amount their traveling expenses are paid, we believe that $5 a day is sufficient pay for any deputy whom the marshal may employ.

Mr. CONGER. I had thought that there was an amendment agreed to by the committee which I do not find here, and which I think should be incorporated in this bill. This bill proposes to limit the pay of deputy marshals to $5 per day during their actual employment. It then goes on to limit the whole compensation to an amount which would be less than $5 a day if they are continuously employed during the year, as to my knowledge marshals having certain duties to perform connected with the customs laws are employed and must necessarily be employed. This bill limits the whole compensation of a deputy marshal to $1,200 per annum, which would be less than $5 a day for even the working days of a year. With the consent of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] having charge of this bill, I would like to try the sense of the House upon a motion to strike out that limitation of $1,200.

Mr. DURHAM. I consented that my colleague on the committee [Mr. CONGER] should have the opportunity to move the amendment he has indicated.

Mr. CONGER. As the bill now reads it contains this provision:

And the compensation of deputy marshals shall not exceed $5 per day while actually engaged in their duties, nor shall their whole compensation exceed $1,200 per annum.

I move to amend by striking out the words "nor shall their whole compensation exceed $1,200 per annum," leaving the bill to provide that the compensation of deputy marshals shall not exceed $5 per day while actually engaged in their duties. It is known that there are certain marshals connected with the customs whose duties continue day and night during the year, or for so much of that time at least as they have power and ability to perform their duties; that I know of my own knowledge. With the limitation already provided in the bill I think that the clause I have indicated should be stricken out, or the bill will work injustice to all that class of marshals whose duties are connected with watching the frontiers under the customs laws.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that the question will first be taken on the amendments reported from the committee; then the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan will be in order.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; I only desire that my amendment shall be submitted to a vote of the House.

Mr. DURHAM. Unless some gentleman desires to discuss this subject further, I ask a vote on the amendments of the committee. After that vote is taken the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] can submit his amendment and have it passed upon by the House.

The amendments reported by the committee were adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I now move to amend by striking out in lines 8, 9, and 10 of the bill these words: "or shall their whole compensation exceed $1,200 per annum."

Mr. CAULFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state the objection to this amendment. The Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice found in the course of their investigations that where there was no limited sum fixed as salary for these deputy marshals they adopted certain means which were considered very oppressive to litigants for the purpose of making more than their ordinary per diem. For instance, we found that if a capias were issued in the morning for the arrest of a person, it would be held by the deputy until late in the evening, when the man would probably be arrested on his way to his home, and, rather than suffer confinement during the night, would pay to the deputy $20, $30, $40, or $50 for staying with him that night and relieving him from the necessity of going to prison. This method of obtaining from possibly innocent parties fees which the deputy would not otherwise be allowed appeared to us oppressive; and we therefore thought it advisable to allow to these officers a salary which should not exceed $1,250 a year. As one member of the committee, I found, upon consultation with many of these deputies in the city of New York, that they preferred to receive a fixed salary rather than be subjected to these temptations. I believe that this measure will not only meet the approval of the marshals and deputies themselves, but will prove a benefit to every community in which the practices of which I speak have heretofore prevailed. For this reason I oppose the amendment of my colleague upon the committee, and hope it will not be adopted unless he puts it in some shape which will give to the deputy marshals a fixed salary beyond which they cannot receive the benefit of fees.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, the bill as it has been read provides that deputy marshals shall receive $5 a day while actually engaged. Certain deputies—the most useful perhaps of all, those connected with the customs service—perform duties which are continuous night and day throughout the year. If they receive $5 a day during the year, their annual compensation would be $1,825. This bill limits the salary to $1,250. If these officers receive $5 a day for all the working days of the year, excluding Sundays, they would receive $1,565. There is no reason why this class of men, whose duties are the most laborious in the whole service, and necessary to be performed during the entire year, should not receive for their services $5 a day. On the frontier, from Maine to the Pacific, wherever customs officers are required, they are on watch night and day.

The object of Congress will have been attained when we prevent the improper collection of fees by these officers. We have limited the amount of their compensation to $5 a day while actually engaged; and while so engaged they should receive that compensation. I think there can be no possible objection to this amendment. It does not interfere with any of the desirable objects of the bill, while it prevents results which would be injurious to the customs service.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask whether this bill includes marshals in the Territories?

Mr. CONGER. It includes all marshals of the United States courts.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say in this connection that heretofore marshals of the Territories have been in many cases so inadequately paid, especially where their services required them to travel long distances, that there has been almost a denial of justice. Hence the question is whether these officers should be included in the bill.

Mr. CONGER. It reaches all marshals of the United States.

Mr. GARFIELD. I observed some years ago when visiting one of the Territories that in the latter part of the year, when the allowance for these services had run out, a marshal could not serve a subpœna or make an arrest unless he did it at his own expense, which no officer can be expected to do. Therefore the administration of justice lags. I do not know whether this bill meets such a case. Does it do away with mileage or does it allow the mileage to continue? I think that some special provision ought to be made in regard to marshals of the Territories.

Mr. DURHAM. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] that this bill does not interfere at all with the mileage; it leaves that as it has been.

In response to my colleague upon the committee, [Mr. CONGER,] I will say that, personally, I do not know anything about the duties performed by these customs officers, as there is none in my section of the country. If their duties are so onerous as my friend from Michigan states, I do not suppose that the present compensation is too high; but I am satisfied that, so far as regards deputies everywhere else, $5 a day for the time actually employed, or $1,200 annually, with mileage in addition, is ample compensation.

Mr. CONGER. This cannot alter the rule at all. It does protect the rights of a certain class of officers who, within my own knowledge, are most faithful watchmen of the interests and revenues of the United States. If I could make any change at all I would make the compensation of that class of marshals who are connected with watching smuggling on our frontier, very laborious and hard, requiring day and night service continually—I would make that greater than the compensation of those who perform duties in day-time whenever they choose. I would give them their compensation of year's pay at $5 a day. I think the amendment a proper one and ought to pass.

Mr. DURHAM. Let us have a vote.

The question recurred on Mr. CONGER's amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 46, noes 80; no quorum voting.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a further count. I thought the bill was to be reported in this way, and think I cannot be mistaken, and therefore I move to go through all the forms.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I ask unanimous consent to make a proposition, which I think the gentleman will acquiesce in.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the Chair will hear what the gentleman has to say.

Mr. CAULFIELD. My proposition is, if the gentleman will prepare an amendment, and it will take only a moment, which will except the particular officers he has mentioned, I think the House will accept it. As a member of the committee, I will say I will be in favor of an amendment which will except that particular class of deputies, but I am not in favor of an amendment which will let in these hordes of deputies all over the country, many of whom have nothing on earth to do, and to my knowledge the courts of this country are sometimes opened when there is no business before them, and only in order that the deputies of the courts may get their per diem.

Mr. CONGER. If the objection be of the least possible weight, the gentleman has provided in his bill that men shall at least have an opportunity of getting $1,250 who may not have served necessarily more than a week.

Mr. CAULFIELD. No; that is when actually engaged.

Mr. CONGER. The "actually engaged" clause is the same in the amendment I have proposed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being demanded, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. DURHAM and Mr. CONGER, no quorum having appeared on the last vote.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, noes 83; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DURHAM. I think I can obviate the present difficulty.

Mr. CLYMER. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I understand this comes up as the first business in order to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate adopted yesterday, a copy of the annual report of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California for the year ending the 30th of June last; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

Mr. CONKLING. I have been requested to present a petition weighty by reason of the subject to which it relates, and by reason also of the number and character of those who sign it.

The petitioners are citizens of New York, distinguished not only for their prominence as members of society, but for the large and varied interests they represent. They are men prominent in each of the great political parties of the country.

I observe among the signatures names of eminent bankers, merchants, manufacturers, ship-owners, scholars, professional men, and other names, long and honorably associated with leading enterprises and industries. It would be difficult to select in any State of the Union one hundred and fifty individuals and firms who represent a greater sum of property, intelligence, and character, or who as petitioners deserve more consideration.

The petition is brief, and I will read it:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, representing a large proportion of the financial and commercial interests of the city of New York, beg leave most respectfully to express their great satisfaction at the action of your honorable bodies in appointing committees of conference to consider the proper mode of counting the ballots for President and Vice-President of the United States.

They hail this action as an indication that the two Houses of Congress are desirous of settling this complicated question in a spirit of moderation and conciliation; and they beg leave to represent that, in acting thus, your honorable bodies have the cordial sympathy of the great mass of the American people, irrespective of party.

Your memorialists most respectfully but most earnestly, pray that all mere party considerations may be thrown aside, and that in this crisis in the history of the United States the pure and unselfish patriotism which inspired the founders of the Republic may guide your legislative action, and that you may thus relieve the country from its present uncertainty and apprehensions by a prompt determination of the mode in which the pending momentous issue shall be decided.

And your memorialists will ever pray, &c.

The signatures are too many to read. In laying this petition before the Senate, it may not be amiss to add an avowal of my sympathy with its appeal for orderly, lawful, and patriotic action.

In executing the Constitution in any instance, and especially in an instance so grave as the one referred to, partisan feeling as a guide and rule of action can rightfully have no place. Obedience to law, the observance of the Constitution, and the maintenance of truth, is not a party question or proceeding; it is beyond party, and above party.

Parties may contend, and I believe it wholesome in a free government that parties should contend over measures and candidates. But when the contest has been submitted to the ballot-box, the final arbitrament of popular contests known in our system, the only duty, the only lawful proceeding connected with it which remains is to find the honest, true result, to declare it, bow to it, and stand by it. That is the duty of the hour. It rests on the two Houses of Congress, it rests on the nation, it rests on every citizen of the Republic.

That it will be done, and done peacefully, decently and in order, these petitioners do not I think disbelieve. They in common with all men may derive confidence from the fact that interest and expediency not less than patriotism and honor point in one direction, and teach one lesson.

Whoever stands on right and truth will not fall—whoever attempts to stand on wrong and falsehood will be overthrown.

I move the reference of the petition to the select committee to which it appropriately belongs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the select committee relative to counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also fourteen memorials signed by a large number o ship-owners and shipmasters remonstrating against the passage of the bill (H. R. No. 3187) to amend title 53 of the Revised Statutes relating to merchant seamen, recently passed by the House. I move the reference of these memorials to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS. I present a similar petition to the one which the Senator from New York [Mr. CONKLING] so well described a moment ago, from citizens, bankers, &c., of New York, and I move that it be referred to the select committee to report a mode of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WALLACE. I present a similar petition from citizens, without distinction of party, of Columbia, Lancaster County, Pennsylvania; and I move that it be referred to the select committee to report a mode of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CRAGIN presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Hampshire, praying the passage of House bill No. 2685 for the distribution of the unappropriated moneys of the Geneva award; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HAMILTON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1850) granting a pension to Harvey B. Kilbourn, private in Company C, Thirtieth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 935) granting a pension to Bridget Collins, widow of John Collins, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WITHERS. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of A. B. Meacham, praying compensation for injuries received in the Modoc Indian massacre while acting as chairman of a peace commission in treating with the Modocs under a flag of truce, ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. I will state that this petition has been before the Committee on Claims and by them it was referred to the Committee on Pensions. The petitioner asks that $30,000 be allowed him for injuries received in the Modoc war, he at the time not being in either the military or naval service of the United States, and the Committee on Pensions deem that they cannot properly take cognizance of such a claim.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to state that I think the petition went to the Committee on Pensions through a misapprehension. I am very glad that it has been reported back and is to be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Mary M. Berry, mother of Lieutenant James W. Berry, late of Company H, One hundred and sixth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered by her son during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. BRUCE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3035) granting a pension to Smith Bell, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 922) for the relief of Crary & Carter, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 327) for the relief of Dr. J. J. Gibson, of Corinth, Mississippi, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the petition of John G. Miller, praying compensation for thirty-two bales of cotton taken from him in February, 1865, by the United States, have had it under consideration and find that this petition was presented in January, 1875, was represented in January, 1876, and that there is no testimony of any kind whatever accompanying it, nor has any been filed since. We, therefore, ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the claim be rejected.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WRIGHT. The same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Mrs. Catherine M. Pritchard, of New Orleans, praying to be paid certain rentals, costs of repairs, &c., upon her property in New Orleans, occupied by the United States during the rebellion, or that her claim for the same be referred to the commission of claims, or to the United States Court of Claims for adjudication, find that this petition was presented in February, 1875, represented in December, 1876, that no testimony of any kind whatever accompanied the petition, nor has any been presented since; and they recommend that the committee be discharged and that the claim be rejected.

The report was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before I take my seat I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that before the recess I gave notice that I should immediately thereafter, or as soon as I could get the floor, ask the attention of the Senate to a bill that I had presented providing for a court of contest touching presidential elections. I gave notice on Tuesday that I should seek to obtain the floor this morning for that purpose as soon as the morning business should be through. It is my purpose, if the Senate will give me their attention and I can obtain the floor, to discharge that duty after the morning hour, or as soon as the morning business shall be through.

Mr. MORTON. The Committee on Privileges and Elections yesterday reported a resolution relative to the production of telegraphic dispatches. It is a matter of a good deal of importance to have that question decided and decided promptly. If decided in one way it may become necessary to send a distance for witnesses. If the morning business is over, I will ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of that resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there are no further reports of committees, the introduction of bills is next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOUTWELL asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1110) for the relief of Captain Edwin R. Clarke; which was read twice by its title, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1111) for the relief of Thomas E. Maley; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHAFFEE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1112) to divide the State of Colorado into two judicial districts; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

CONTESTED PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I trust that my friend from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] will allow me to call up the bill that I referred to with a view of proceeding to present some considerations in its support at this time. I appreciate the importance of the matter to which he refers, and if it is not to involve discussion and can be disposed of without discussion of course I shall not object.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will involve discussion, of course.

Mr. WRIGHT. I conclude that there is no doubt but that it will involve discussion, and my friend can take up that proposition after I shall conclude.

Mr. MORTON. If I understand the character of the bill referred to by the Senator from Iowa, it involves a very grave question which is now perhaps under consideration by two committees of this body, and perhaps of the other House also. We cannot arrive at any conclusion on that bill to-day, and I think there is some necessity for a decision of the Senate upon this other question. I hope my friend will not object therefore if I move to take up the resolution this morning, and I now make the motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported yesterday by the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understood that I had the floor and made a motion to take up the other bill.

Mr. MORTON. I hope my friend will not press it now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa rose first and yielded to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only yielded to him for a suggestion, and I now renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa states that he yielded to a suggestion and now asks to take from the table the bill he has named,

Mr. WRIGHT. My object is alone to have a reference of it after I shall have concluded what I have to say on the subject.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I certainly hope there will not be any objection to this being done, because it is the usual courtesy of the Senate, when something of very great importance is not pressing, to allow any Senator to submit observations on pending measures at any time that suits his convenience. The Senator from Iowa gave notice some days since that this morning he would like to submit some remarks on the subject of the bill which he has introduced and then to have it referred to a committee. I should be very sorry if anything except the extreme urgency of some other pressing measure should interrupt the courtesy that always exists here.

Mr. MORTON. Is it for the mere purpose of enabling the Senator to submit some remarks with a view of having his bill referred then?

Mr. EDMUNDS, That is what he says.

Mr. MORTON. Of course I cannot stand in the way of a personal courtesy of that kind to my friend from Iowa, but I shall ask the Senate to proceed, after he concludes his remarks, to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That he assents to, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves the present consideration of the bill which he has named.

Mr. WRIGHT. I move to take from the table Senate bill No. 1082.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. No. 1082) to establish a court for the trial of contested elections in the offices of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. MORTON. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Iowa that he allow the resolution to be taken up and laid aside informally and then call up his bill, and when he concludes the resolution will be before the Senate without further action.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think I would prefer proceeding with this matter just as it is at present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to take from the table the bill the title of which has been read.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I concurred in the report of the Judiciary Committee recommending the passage of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution for a different method of counting the electoral vote, and gave it my support in the Senate. This I was induced to do, both because it seemed to be fairly just and equitable, and if the method proposed was no better than the present, I yet thought it more likely to reach results which would command the approval and support of the people. I favored it also because I was ready to do anything legitimately within my power which might tend to allay popular excitement, in so far as it obtains, and solve in a manner as nearly satisfactory to all as possible the questions confronting the Senate and the people of the nation. In a like spirit I have brought forward the bill to which I now invite the attention of the Senate. In doing so I shall aim to avoid for the most part any reference to what are known as the disputed returns from certain States, questions which have already not a little engaged the attention of the two Houses and the country.

The provisions of this bill are easily understood and may be briefly stated.

To the end that the evidence of such a contest, from its beginning to its close, may be carefully preserved and in a department in keeping with the dignity and importance of the office involved, the contestant is in writing to notify the Secretary of State of his intention to contest and the grounds thereof. This he is to do within ten days after the declaration of the result as contemplated by the Constitution and the statute. The Secretary of State is at once to notify the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court, who is to fix a day, not more than ten days thereafter, for the commencement of the trial. He is also to notify the incumbent or contestee, and selects and gives notice to his associates on the proposed board. These associates are to consist of six district or circuit judges, to be selected by the Chief-Justice from those of different political parties, and they are to hold their sessions in the city of Washington. The Chief-Justice is to preside, and together they have power to adopt rules as to pleadings, amendments, witnesses, and the like, and to make and promulgate all those necessary for executing the jurisdiction conferred; but there is to be no unnecessary delay, since all rules, orders, and proceedings shall be such as to lead to a speedy determination of the matters in contest, so far as consistent with their proper and just adjudication. This board is invested with all the usual powers belonging to a court of original and general jurisdiction, as to administering oaths, subpœnaing witnesses, compelling their attendance, sending for persons and papers, and, in a word, all matters necessary or incident to the jurisdiction conferred. All questions may be decided by a majority vote; a quorum consists of a majority of the whole number, and the ninth section points out specifically how or in what manner they are to govern themselves on the hearing and determination of the matters submitted. The last section gives the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, but the judgment of the board is not to be suspended pending such appeal unless so ordered of record by them. The Supreme Court is to give such appeal precedence over all other cases, and proceed at once to its determination and decision.

These are the substantial features of the bill. I think it ought to be amended by providing that no member of the tribunal should be eligible to any office of profit or trust for four years after their service. To avoid any doubt it should be made clear, also, that the Chief-Justice is to select six associates for each case of contest, and not that those selected are to serve in all or subsequent cases. Neither am I by any means prepared to say that it is not advisable to greatly simplify the language used in the ninth section as to how or in what manner this board shall proceed in determining the questions involved. But all these matters can be settled by the greater experience and better knowledge of the committee and of the Senate, and to every effort in this direction I am prepared to give my most cordial co-operation. It may be asked, why not make the judges of the Supreme Court this tribunal? I answer, because I deemed it best to steer clear of the point made by some, that this court, as one of original jurisdiction, should not be called upon to decide, if it can be avoided, political questions; that whatever the result arrived at by them, their motives would be impugned, and thus the influence of this great and high tribunal impaired. And for the further reason, too, that however great my confidence that these judges would decide the case according to the very law and facts, uninfluenced by any possible political bias, I did not know but there might be those who, by reason of the accepted political complexion of the court, would feel otherwise. I am alone solicitous to have a tribunal which shall be as nearly acceptable to all as practicable, one, if to be found, against which no possible charge of political bias shall obtain. This may not be attainable absolutely, but I would have it approximated if it is in the power of legislation to do so.

I have selected a tribunal with judicial powers and given the right to a final hearing before the highest court in the land. And this because I believe the people of this country have a more profound respect for this great co-ordinate department of the Government than any other. If they and we cannot feel assured that in these tribunals we may find integrity and honesty and purity, that in the courts the citizen can find protection in his rights and against wrongs, then we had as well abandon the idea of self-government and become revolutionists and disorganizers. The man who is unwilling to leave any great question affecting his rights or the rights of many, public or private, if it shall become necessary, to these tribunals, admits either a want of confidence in their integrity, or that he seeks some unfair and unconscionable advantage. I have believed and do believe that to none other than a judicial tribunal could we so safely intrust such an inquiry; that in none other would the people have such confidence and that from no other would we be so likely to obtain a decision which would be accepted with such unquestioning and general acquiescence. If in this I am mistaken, then I confess I greatly misjudge the temper of the public mind. Believing that I am not, however, I have proposed this board of contest, with the powers indicated.

But I believe this bill to be right in principle, whatever might be our surroundings. I believe the present condition of things renders it peculiarly appropriate, if not a possible necessity. But however this may be, I repeat that I believe it is right in principle. Not that it is as perfect in all its details, by any means, as it should and may be made, nor that its proposed machinery is necessarily the best. I am not wedded to its methods. I care more, much more, for the principle involved than any details. For I believe it to be consistent with our popular form of government, in harmony with the hereditary love of our people for peaceful, legal methods, consistent with the rights of those seeking the presidential or other office in this nation, abundantly supported by the legislation of every State of the Union, and not in conflict either with the letter or spirit of the Constitution.

There are some, I know, for whose opinions I entertain the most profound respect, who maintain that the presidential office should not be made the football, as they term it, of motions, demurrers, pleadings, and orders in the courts, even the highest of the land; who reason that the fathers intended that this high officer should, when inaugurated, be immovably secure in his tenure, in no manner subject to writs of quo warranto or other like process or inquiry; and that it is better for the peace and quiet of the country and the integrity and harmony of the public service that one as to whose election or right to the office even fair doubts may obtain should fill out the term than that the public mind should be kept in a fever of unrest and the policies and administration of the incumbent crippled or held in check by the fear of possible or pending litigation; that, in a word, it is better to have stability of tenure than to struggle through the mazes of the courts to see whether, possibly, there has not been some mistake, or whether some aspirant for the coveted place has not by possibility been unjustly denied his rights.

In this reasoning, conceding its plausibility, I cannot concur. I believe in the cardinal theory of this Government, that, having regard at all times of course to legal forms and requirements, the popular will should be carried out. Within the rule as stated, nothing should be allowed to stand in the way of this. The man elected by the people, under the provisions and forms of the Constitution, should be the President. This is just as vital, if not more so, in the case of the very highest officer, as it is in the lowest. The legislation or failure to legislate which ignores this principle strikes a blow which may be treated as trivial and of but little moment, but it will as certainly leave scars and wounds which will open in time to deplete the life-blood of the Republic, as that every wrong and every departure from right, by laws the most inexorable, bring their certain and deserved penalties and punishments. There can never be a departure from principle without sooner or later bringing with it consequent injury. All legislation which aids or tends to aid in finding and carrying out this popular will within settled rules is more likely to be in the line of safety than that which hedges in the tribunals of the country, legislative or judicial, by mere unnecessary technicalities. The people have a right to the President of their choice. No man can afford to take the high office who is otherwise chosen. No man at all fitted to assume trusts so high and duties so great will or can dare take the place in opposition to this will. It is more important that this will should be executed than that any man or party should have or lose power; than that any man or party should be voted up or voted down. No party can dare do wrong to gain power. Power thus gained must necessarily be short lived and the party cheated will be assuredly vindicated by the next overwhelming verdict of the people. Power obtained by force, by violence, by intimidation, by trampling down the most sacred rights of the citizen, defying the grandest safeguards and guarantees of the Constitution, all such power is obtained in fraud of the people's will and must and will soon meet their righteous and deserved judgment of condemnation. There can neither in morals nor law be any justification of wrong-doing that power may follow.

By the laws of many of the States and now by an almost unbroken series of decisions, all tribunals exercising judicial powers in matters of contested elections, drive through technicalities and forms, save as they are safe or effectual aids to ascertain the will of those casting their ballots. These forms and rules, of course, are to be upheld in all their integrity in so far as they are aids to legitimate methods in reaching this will. But consonant with the very corner-stone of our institutions, that this is a government of the people, this will is the cardinal thing to be sought for; and so, as I have said, the courts without dissent almost now hold. And as in the States touching the most inferior as well as the most important offices, so it should be in our popular national elections. In national as in State elections the masses of the people are honest. Unlike mere political gamblers—a class who if followed would lead the Republic to Mexicanized anarchy, the terrorism of the sword or the bludgeon, or the equally-to-be-deprecated schemes of the corruptionists—unlike these, I say, the people have no wish to nor should nor must they be driven to resort to artifice or mere forms to support either the intrigues of factions or the plans and purposes of dissatisfied, hungry, and aspiring office-seekers and demagogues.

Again, I know as you do, Mr. President, that grave and radical differences of opinion obtain as to the powers of the two Houses, touching the counting the electoral vote. That these differences, when honestly entertained—in the present condition of the public mind and remembering the strength of political or party bias or convictions—will be difficult if not impossible to reconcile, it needs no argument to demonstrate. If by possibility not thus honestly entertained, the hope of agreement is even more remote or improbable. It is sufficient that these differences obtain. They confront us at the close of a most exciting quadrennial struggle, the prize being the Presidency and the administration of this great nation for four years. The very close vote now between the two leading candidates adds in an unusual manner to the public anxiety and intensifies the apparent set purpose of the two great parties. In any view it is admitted that, referring to the Constitution alone as our guide, as the sole rule for ascertaining what the electoral colleges in the several States have done, we have but few words, and those words susceptible, as is insisted, of different constructions. Under no construction, as it seems to me, can it be claimed that Congress in any capacity (certainly not in the absence of legislation) has judicial powers or any other power than to inquire and declare what the people, through their electors, on the face of the returns have said as to their choice for President. In saying this I do not lose sight of the different theories as to how this result is to be reached and who is to declare it. I am sufficiently understood for my present purpose, I hope, when I repeat that, in the absence of some law, there is no power to investigate and determine whether there was fraud in this State or that; whether the State law was wise or unwise in providing for the organization of its returning boards; whether a hundred men here or a thousand there would have voted differently but for intimidation, corruption, violence, or fraud; whether the returning or canvassing board or tribunal in a State reached the true result from all the facts before them, or the like; for, whatever any one may think as to any of the other powers of the presiding officer or of the two Houses acting separately or together, the law, as gathered from the almost, if not quite, unbroken precedents from the very foundation of the Government, would clearly seem to teach that our powers are purely ministerial, not at all judicial. In the exercise of these powers, however, allow me to say that I do not suggest by any means that either the presiding officer or the tribunal or forum having the right to decide would be concluded by the mere declaration of a result upon the face of a return, if the same paper, return, record, or that which by well-settled rules and fair logic and law is a part of it, shows that the declaration is itself false or untrue. I am clear that neither the presiding officer nor Congress are required to stultify themselves by being ignorant of what the legitimate record before them shows; that we are not required to find and declare that a falsehood in fact, apparent upon the record, which it is ours to scrutinize, is true as matter of law. But at the same time we must be confined alone to such record, and cannot go outside of it.

And this leads me, Mr. President, to depart somewhat from my original and declared purpose, so far at least as to say in this very connection a word, in passing, of the Oregon imbroglio.

I have always been led to think of Oregon as a State in soil rich, climate almost unequaled, advantages beyond computation, and citizens among the most active, enterprising, and shrewd. Since the 13th of December last my opinion of her citizens has culminated into absolute admiration. I always admired, though I might often condemn, a bold, audacious act, and never could resist a friendly side for the comedy in life. And if I did not reflect upon or think of its consequences, involving, it may be, no less than the quiet, the peace, the highest welfare of the country—I say if I did not think of these things I should be inclined to place the actors in that otherwise rich Oregon farce in the very front rank of huge jokers and audacious comedians. If Cronin himself concocted this plan of organizing himself into a full electoral college—if it was the outgrowth of his own gigantic intellect—I greatly admire his inimitable genius, and no less his boldness in executing it. If not, and he was acting as impelled by wires pulled by others, my respect is greatly lessened and indeed quite wanting; for I have no admiration for the man who conceives a mean or cunningly devised scheme and is wanting in courage to execute it, nor any more for the cat's-paw who becomes the dupe and tool of dishonest and cowardly men behind the scenes.

But I repeat if Cronin was his own counselor and was executing his own plans, commend me to him as a genuis, as one worthy the occasion and the object in view. Could anything be more inimitable? Cronin organizing an electoral college! Alone and unaided doing this great feat! True it is that the college in Oregon was required by the law to consist of three persons, and a majority of this number would be two, and no less, under any rule ever known to parliamentary or other law, could constitute a quorum. But that made no difference. Cronin was equal to the occasion, for he was a full quorum and college of electors in himself. The scene was so inviting, and I declare I wish not a little that I could have witnessed it, but it was so inviting that my esteemed friend the senior Senator from that far distant State though he had left his home en route for those duties here which he ever performs so well, and though he had, as I understand, made many hundred miles of his weary journey, yet it was so inviting that, persuaded by glowing lightning accounts from the East and from the West, of the rich comedy in store for his keen optics, he retraced his steps that he might witness what Cronin could do. And Cronin, in his new and comic rôle, did not disappoint him. I can see this quorum Cronin now, in that room with door on noiseless hinges and velvety fastenings, stripped as the athlete or dressed as the sedate thimble-rigger, having long abstained from strong food and like drinks that his brain might be equal to his honest task—in that room, modestly and hesitatingly and with much embarrassment, receiving from the premier of the great governor of all Oregon his credentials, slipped to him noiselessly, for it was befitting the occasion that there should be nothing to disturb the mind of the great actor. It was needful that he should have full possession of all his great faculties. "Grand" (not gloomy) but "peculiar he sat" upon his chair, (not a "sceptered hermit,") but an organized electoral college; presidential aspirants were his "subjects" and the people his "footstool." Over one thousand majority of their votes against him was to him the merest bauble, for he was the man of destiny, and neither the popular will nor the senseless croaking of those who talked about honesty and fair dealing were to stand in the way of the work assigned him, whether evolved from his own great brain or the pure consciences of his employers and backers!

Unfolding his parchment, he finds to his great surprise, of course, that he was an elector, indeed a whole college; that the people, reposing special confidence in his worth, integrity, and ability, had elected him by giving him 1,000 votes less than his competitor! True his memory, like a faithful monitor, reminded him of this and said, You know this parchment tells an untruth when it says you were elected. But this was of no consequence now, for he found that the governor reposed confidence in him, if the people did not, and it was not for him to inquire how nor by what necromancy this was brought about. And now the hour and moment for action had arrived. He could not and did not want to look back. But where were his associates? This again was of no moment to him. He was there, and if they did not come and join him he was a quorum in himself, and was bound to organize! He had respect unto the oath he had taken to do his duty, was bound to cast the vote, bound to have an electoral college, for this was his mission! He wanted to be fair, however! He had a holy horror and dread of cheating and treachery! Above all things else he worshiped fairness and honest dealing in elections! So, as he could not find his fellows, he called the board together, made himself chairman, secretary, teller, voter, and did all things else necessary and requisite for a full and satisfactory organization, and then elected two others to aid him in the fulfillment of his mission. True they had never been voted for by the people, and though they agreed with him politically he so impressed them with the honesty of his motives and movements, and of the necessity that there should be no cheating, and they had such a profound respect for the popular will, that, without any concert of action and without any prior consultation, the two patriotic associates voted for Hayes, while the quorum, Cronin, voted for Tilden! Could anything be more sublime? He could not do a mean or untruthful thing! He could not go back on the people! He would not defy the popular will! He knew too well his mission to do this! The vote was cast. Cronin made himself messenger to deliver the vote. He voted himself thanks for the very able, impartial, and dignified manner in which he had presided. The college was resolved into its original elements, and we shall probably, and I hope never will, "look upon its like again!"

That magnificent feat of parliamentary tactics and of this transcendent political genius, sir, will live in history and in the records of politics long after you and I shall have passed from this Chamber and all those hearing me shall be gathered to their fathers. Cronin shall live forever, for he is the prince of "organizers." He "organized" and flourished in Salem, Oregon. His field of operations was there. He "organized" himself. There was none to aid or assist. As has been said or suggested by some one, he finds a parallel alone in that king of old Salem, Melchisedec, who was without father, without mother, without descent, having neither beginning of days nor ending of years. Cronin was alike blessed—alike fortunate. For as the old king must have "organized" himself, so did Cronin. I say again commend me to Cronin and to the politicians, too, who openly aided him in his thimble-rigging scheme, which was as audaciously bold as it was ridiculously foolish and laughable. You can well imagine, Mr. President, that scene of joy, the firing of guns, shoutings and thanksgiving among the faithful, which followed the announcement that Cronin had found a way to gain the coveted one vote. He alone of all the wise men of the East or the West of the party was equal to the great emergency. In far off Oregon, among a people not supposed to be versed in political legerdemain, in the quiet of their aspiring young capital, in the seclusion of a closed room, was found unexpectedly the man of splendid ability as an "organizer," the man controlling three votes, not one alone; and why should not the State and the politicians backing him clap their hands for joy and be glad. Hereafter Oregon, Grover, Cronin, (but the greatest of these is Cronin,) shall have the highest seats in the political synagogue. Without doubt, Cronin should be called to organize the new cabinet under the New York governor, the new administration, having at all times due regard of course to the "usufruct of incumbents" "and the members of the Oregon electoral college!"

But it is perhaps not all comedy. There is another side to the scene, and to the thoughtful, patriotic, honest people of the country a most serious one. What are the undisputed and indisputable facts? Watts received over 1,100 votes more than Cronin for the office of elector. Watts held a little post-office, more fruitful in labor and trouble than money, which he resigned as soon as elected, and before the result was declared. Not 200 voters knew that he held this high office, not a tithe of those thought of this when voting, not a tithe of this tithe knew that the holding of this office rendered him ineligible when they voted for him. The votes were returned by the proper officers of the several counties, they were canvassed by the State board. Watts had the majority as above stated, clear, undenied, unquestioned, undisputed. The people said they wanted him to act for them and that they did not want Cronin. There was no pretense of fraud, of unfairness, that there had not been a fair and honest election. But the governor in the exercise of powers for which there is no warrant in the constitution, in the law, in history, in morals, in any rule human or divine, said, Watts is postmaster, therefore Cronin is elected. How did he know Watts was postmaster? He could not know it, he did not know it, for there was no way in which he could legally find it out. How did he know that if he held the office this rendered him ineligible? He did not, he could not know it, for he had no legal means to ascertain it, nor power to decide it. How did he know that if ineligible the minority candidate was thereby elected? He did not, he could not know it, for he had neither right nor authority to make the inquiry, and if he had both, the assumption was as bald in morals as it was wanting in legal support. He did not, he could not find or decide that upon him devolved the duty of supplying a vacancy occasioned by the claimed failure of the people to elect. He did not, he could not know this because he was incompetent to take the first, the least step in this direction; he had nothing more to do with it than the most squalid inmate of the State prison. He did not, he could not know that though Watts held the office at the time of election, the resignation immediately following did not remove the difficulty. He could not, he did not know whether this would be true or not, nor anything upon this subject, for he had nothing to do with it and usurped powers which never belonged to him, powers the most dangerous, when he undertook to make any the least order in the premises. He had no power to do anything else than voice the result of the canvass and deliver to the persons having the majority, according to the canvassed vote, the proper certificates of election. When he went beyond this and undertook to inquire whether some one whom the people had elected could or could not hold the office, he was guilty of the most glaring act of usurpation and wrong. His act was ultra vires, nugatory, void, and void things are no things.

Mr. President, Watts, in my judgment, was not appointed an elector within the meaning of the Constitution by the mere casting of the ballots by the people and their canvass in the several counties. In this I know I run counter to the views of other and better lawyers than myself, but this I give as my opinion, and I simply propose in passing to enter my protest against the opposite view without entering into its discussion, for I have not time. But if in this I am mistaken, then I maintain that his ineligibility did not and could not elect Cronin; that at most, if Watts could not serve or qualify, there was but a vacancy, (arising under the "otherwise" of the Oregon statute,) and it was then clearly the duty and within the power of the legal quorum of the board to fill it. This they could do by electing Watts, now having resigned his post-office, or any other eligible voter of the State. And to this I add, for I must pass hurriedly over these matters, that if he had not resigned, yet if he appeared when the electors assembled, was recognized by them as of their legal number, and cast his vote, such vote would not be void, only possibly voidable, for he would have been an officer de facto, if not de jure, and his vote, until set aside by proper proceeding, was just as valid, just as much entitled to be counted here, as that of either of his associates upon the ticket or of any man elected by the 60,000 majority of my own most noble and loyal State.

Is it possible that this trick is to succeed in the American Senate, in the American Congress, with the American people? I will not believe it. It seems to me that I know it cannot. I think I know how it can be defeated in entire consistency with principle and precedents. But the simple fact that it is even possible, possible because of the limited powers of the counting tribunal here, presents a most cogent argument for the organization of a tribunal where the truth can be vindicated and inquiry had, as I have proposed by this bill, according to judicial forms. And yet, in advance of all this, why cannot all unite in condemnation of this gross attempt to cheat the people of the State, this act which adds to and intensifies the unrest and disquiet of the public mind, contributes to the derangement of the business of the country, and leaves still another vile blot upon our political escutcheon. Does not every honest and fair-minded man know that if Watts had agreed with the governor of Oregon politically Cronin would have been left in the quiet of his Portland home, and that as an "organizer" he never would have been known to Tilden or to fame? Does not any one know that, if the contest stood as it does now and no questions were made as to the true returns from any other State, no honest man ever could or ever would take the high office of President conferred by a vote gained and given as this was? And why cannot we all say so and thus discountenance this wicked, mendacious act?

Mr. President, it is a great political sin to drive electors from the polls; it is the basest and vilest political wickedness to deter them by terrorism and intimidation from casting a free ballot; to stuff ballot-boxes or abstract their contents; to fraudulently alter poll-books or returns; to dishonestly count or canvass returns when made; to do anything which tends to interfere with or prevent freedom of choice in this matter so vitally sacred to the very integrity of our Government, or defeat by these or like means the popular will. But for these acts may perhaps frequently be urged in extenuation, certainly not in excuse or defense, the excitements of the hour and surroundings, and the want of responsibility or intelligence of a turbulent body of men, blinded by party zeal or goaded on by the present resistance of political opponents. But when the executive of a sovereign State, in the quiet of his office, with full time to deliberate, impressed as he should be with the gravity of the situation, remembering his oath, remembering that he is the trustee or agent of the people, not of a party, that his is a limited trust in a matter of this character, remembering his duty to carry out, not defeat, the expressed will of the people; when any man thus situated shall deliberately and purposely do an act which is outside of law, in defiance of all well-settled precedents, apparently for the sole purpose of accomplishing a political result, to achieve a party triumph, that man is guilty of a wrong, a political crime, in the presence of which all the others to which I have referred sink into utter insignificance, and he should be shunned and scorned by honest men, irrespective of party. I am glad for the integrity of our politics, for the sacredness of the American ballot, for the purity of our elections, for our common humanity, that no one on this floor has volunteered to defend the act, though, as duty doubtless prompted, they may have apologized for or extenuated it. I earnestly trust and believe, if the facts shall be as I understand them, that in the early future there will be none to either extenuate, apologize, or defend.

But leaving Oregon, Mr. President, I at this point, as it is pertinent to the argument I make as to the advisability and necessity of the bill I am now considering, may not inappropriately advert to what to my mind is the proper and true construction of the Constitution on this subject.

I do not much doubt that it is competent for Congress to declare by law how this vote may and shall be counted. By this, of course, I am not to be understood as holding that the returns can be directed or intrusted to any other than the President of the Senate nor that any other than such President can open the certificates, nor that they can be opened in the presence of any other tribunal as witnesses than the Senate and House of Representatives. But what I mean is that, while all these matters are clearly pointed out and concluded by the most express language of the Constitution, it would nevertheless be competent for Congress, in the execution of the language "and the votes shall then be counted," and other powers too, to provide by law that the count should be made, for instance, by a committee of the two Houses, by the joint action of the presiding officers of each, by their action in connection with the Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court or other person or persons, by the judges of the Supreme Court as a board, (not as a court,) or in any other manner in its discretion. The language "and the votes shall then be counted" does not, in my judgment, conclude the Congress to any special or exclusive method of counting the vote, and yet I agree that it was undoubtedly primarily in the minds of the framers of the Constitution that this duty, ministerial merely, was to be and would be performed by the presiding officer in the presence of the two Houses as witnesses, and that it might be safely intrusted to him.

It is meet that we reflect upon the surroundings of our fathers, that we may know what the Constitution meant when it was made. And this is what we should do in all cases when we come to its construction. What it meant then is what it means now. And we may be aided in ascertaining what it meant then, I repeat, by looking at what they were doing and what they had before them. They unquestionably regarded the selection of electors as an act of the State, for each State was to appoint, "in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors equal," &c. Hence, according to the will of its framers, under this Constitution the power to appoint could be lodged in the people, in the governor, in the Legislature, in the executive council, in the selectmen of the towns, in the judges of the highest court, in any tribunal according to the State legislative will or direction.

The whole matter of selection, I repeat therefore, was intended to be left with the States. The framers of the Constitution, just from the scenes of the Revolution, with their inherited and blood-impressed hatred and dread of a strong central government, looking also to that mediate form of government which avoided a pure democracy as well as the semblance of a monarchy, and, desiring to give to the States, through the anomalous system of an electoral college, the right to select the President, had, I doubt not, more fear of the centripetal than the centrifugal forces of our political system. The theory and expectation, beyond any fair doubt, were that electors, selected in the manner directed by the Legislature, would, without any previous committals, select from the fit and representative citizens of the nation some one for President and another for Vice-President. They had no dream that, as now practiced, the people would virtually vote directly for the candidates for these high offices. But they contemplated that these electors, duly impressed with their high trust and appreciating that upon them devolved the duty, without the trammels and the complications which have since grown up, would carefully and thoughtfully cast their votes and certify the result. For what purpose were they to be thus certified? Simply that they might be counted and the result ascertained. As the old moderator in the town meeting in the New England States, according to the experience and practice of those who had so large a share in framing the Government and the Constitution—as these moderators, I say, had, after the electors of the town deposited their ballots, simply performed the ministerial duty of counting the same in the presence of the people and putting down the result, so the makers of the Constitution contemplated and intended that the will or votes of the States, as certified to the President of the Senate, should be ascertained by looking at these certificates and declaring the result. It probably never entered their minds that anybody should or could, at the Federal Capitol, aside from possibly some after-inquiry, by a proper judicial tribunal, question the right of the State to select any persons it might see fit, if not constitutionally ineligible, and in its own manner to cast its vote for the first and second officers in the nation.

It was deemed more convenient to send these returns or certificates to the Federal capital than to have all the electors assemble at a given place, or to adopt any other method, and yet it was intended that the authorities here were simply to look at these returns and record the result. The list of the votes cast by the electors was to be signed and certified, transmitted sealed, directed to the President of the Senate: these certificates were to be opened by him, the votes then counted, and the person having the greatest number of votes for President, if a majority of all the electors appointed, was to be ("shall be") the President. In all this there is no semblance of judicial power, or of power in Congress, to inquire into how these electors were chosen, or whether they should have voted for one person rather than another. To have recognized such power as existing in the President of the Senate who was to open the certificates, or in the two Houses who were to be present to witness such opening and counting, would have been at war with all their theories of the electoral system and the powers of the States and Federal Governments; for this would have transferred, contrary to their intention, the right to direct the manner of appointing electors from the States to the Federal Congress or some officer there. They intended that the two Houses should be present as witnesses, not actors, to the end that the counting should be public, not in the seclusion of the room of the President of the Senate, or other private place. A mere count of a vote or number of votes, ex vi termini, excludes necessarily the idea of anything like judicial discretion. Of course, however, some one must determine that it is the vote of the State. What that vote is the return shows for itself; and that, for the purposes of the count, is the end of it. There the whole inquiry ceases. In determining whether it is the vote of the State some person must decide from what he finds certified, but not from nor aided by some matter in pais or dehors the record. Who is to determine this in the first instance, if not finally? This is the important and pivotal question. It seems to me by every law governing parliamentary bodies, as well as by the clear meaning and spirit of the Constitution, and in harmony with the contemporaneous history of this clause of the Constitution, as shown by the practice and teachings of the actors therein, that the officer presiding at the count must do this. Some one must, and, if not this officer, then who? There must necessarily be some one to preside in this as in all deliberative bodies. This officer is an actor, not a mere spectator. He is not simply an observator. If any question by possibility should thus arise, there must be, at least in the first instance, an umpire, an arbiter, a determining power. His powers may be ever so limited, and yet they must necessarily be such, if the Constitution is to be executed through human agencies, or is not self-executing or operative, as are adequate, primarily, to reach the result, to wit, the counting of the vote. It is both illogical and practically impossible to conceive that the two bodies, with practically equal powers and prerogatives, should constitute themselves or become, in any sense, umpires or arbiters upon possibly controverted questions.

This view has certainly been recognized as right from the foundation of the Government, and there is neither safety nor warrant for departing from it in times of political excitement or because it may in practice possibly work adversely to our wishes or plans. What is right in a constitutional view in times of the profoundest quiet is equally so amid the greatest turbulence of parties and factions. The Constitution is not an instrument to be made longer or shorter to meet the whims or caprices of political managers. As good citizens, looking to the peace and integrity of the Union, counting that as of more value than the triumph of any man or party, we should, in this Government of law and order—and if not this, then there is an end to all subordination to constituted power—I say, as such citizens, we ought not, upon an emergency, seek to overthrow well-established precedents or usages and drift into a sea as shoreless as it is dangerous.

But we need perhaps to go one step further. And that is: Suppose a decision made by this officer; is it final? From it is there no appeal? Upon this subject I confess I entertain the gravest doubt. And yet, in favor of the prerogatives of the two Houses, acting separately and in entire harmony, with the idea that the President of the Senate is but a presiding officer, leaving out of view for the present the bed-rock idea that the States by this vote are speaking, and the duty is simply to chronicle their will, (a most pivotal and not-to-be-overlooked element I grant,) yet I say I incline to the opinion that an appeal may be taken and that the two Houses acting separately may, by their concurrent action, overrule him. That is to say, if the President of the Senate shall determine that a particular paper or certificate entitles the vote to be counted, the two Houses, upon an appeal taken, may, acting separately and by concurrent action, determine otherwise. So if he determines that it should not, that for certain reasons the certificate is not sufficiently authentic, then again, upon appeal in like manner, he may be overruled. He decides, in other words, whether prima facie the vote shall or shall not be counted. The two Houses, acting upon this decision, which, like all decisions by a competent authority, must be accepted as at least prima facie correct, may overrule it. But as in the case of the presiding officer, so as to the two Houses, they must have regard to and pass alone upon what is certified, must see if the State has voted and what it is. This, to my mind, preserves sufficiently the harmony of the system and upholds the powers and prerogatives of the two Houses. It certainly does the latter quite as much as can with any fair reason be claimed, and I am not certain that it does not go to the very verge if not beyond the constitutional limits of congressional right in the premises.

I have thus stated more at length then I intended my views of this part of the Constitution and have preferred to do so without quoting from or citing authorities in its support. The history of this clause, the earlier and later practice under it, the opinions of the ablest and best statesmen and jurists as to the powers of the President of the Senate, all these are familiar to this body and the country, and I need not here quote or refer to them. When the Senate, in February, 1801, voted to receive the House on a day and hour named "for the purpose of being present at the opening and counting the vote for President of the United States as they shall be delivered to the President of the Senate;" and also further resolved that the President of the Senate "should announce the result, which should be entered on the journals," and that such entry should be "deemed a sufficient declaration of the result," and when the House accordingly attended and Mr. Jefferson, as presiding officer of the Senate, "counted the vote," I say when I find that this was done by the very men who made the Constitution and so very recently after its adoption, I do not feel that I or any of us can be far wrong if we follow in their footsteps. And I might supplement this with many other equally strong and pertinent instances showing the practice and rules of procedure in counting this vote, but they are familiar to all and I should but unnecessarily consume time to quote them.

But, as I have before suggested, all are not agreed as to the true construction of the Constitution or what is the proper practice under it. For myself, I never read this great instrument without being impressed more and more with the wonderful wisdom of the almost divinely inspired men who framed it. Terse, clear, succinct in its provisions, its authors seem to have had almost prophetic views of the future and the clearest appreciation of the great and momentous work in which they were engaged; and yet, in the provision under consideration, if there is not an exceptional casus omissus, there is that which so nearly approaches it as to bring possible fear to the stoutest heart when he reflects how these mooted questions are to be settled in the face of the not infrequent violence and turbulence of party faction and passion.

Now sir, if I know myself, I would not be driven or impelled by threats, or in times of party turbulence, to do anything not sanctioned by convictions of right or the soundest principles of justice. In the unrest as in the rest of the public mind and conscience, there is but one criterion of safety and that is to keep close at all times to what is inherently right and what the honest and enlightened judgment dictates as expedient because it is right. I have no sympathy for patched-up and temporizing compromises. There can be no compromise with wrong and error. It is a fatal and most fallacious misuse of language to talk of a compromise between truth and falsehood, vice and virtue, and the task is as fruitless as the talk is idle. The nation, no more than an individual, can afford to give up principle or surrender the right in answer to appeals or in dread of possible danger. It is bad enough to have fraud and corruption, and violence and intimidation, but it is worse to supplement these by the usurpation of powers not warranted by the Constitution. There is enough of danger in the bare attempt to carry a great election by artifice and a resort to means the most questionable, without incurring the hazard of striking a blow at the very vitals of the Government, by abandoning the safeguards of the Constitution at the demand of incendiary demagogues who would threaten internecine war, with all the ruin and desolation to the country which would follow. It would be a great wrong and misfortune to declare any one elected President who was not so, but better this even than that Congress and the country should be diverted from the line of duty by a ravenous crowd of place-hunters and sensationalists, who care more for their own personal gain, by means the most violent and lawless, than for the welfare, quiet, and perpetuity of this great country. One day's resort to violence or of anarchy would be worse for the people and bring greater reproach to our civilization and our blood-sanctified institutions, in the esteem of all good men, irrespective of party, than four years of administration headed by either Hayes or Tilden. We can stand and the country can live, and, as I hope, prosper under either. It cannot and must not be driven to the ordeal which all law-abiding citizens would deprecate, and to arrest which they must, and I know will, stand together.

The bill which I present, then, Mr. President, is not to be treated as simply a compromise measure or offered as a part of a plan to avoid threatened danger. It is right, for all times and under all circumstances or contingencies. It is right, because it must occur to any one that, in view of the little found in the Constitution on this subject and the differences of opinion obtaining, all good men would care less about the result to be declared in the count named in the Constitution, if an ultimate tribunal shall be provided to which the parties in interest can go with as fair an assurance as is attainable under human institutions, that all the facts and the case on its real and naked merits could be fully, fairly, speedily, and judicially investigated and determined. The judgment and best thought and mind of the country would be thus appealed to and satisfied; or, if not satisfied, we would make as near an approach to it as is possible amid opinions so widely conflicting and differing and in the presence of results so great. Is this not a consummation worthy the most patient effort, and especially when it can be done without the violation of any principle?

I remark, in the next place, that, aside from the effect of the proposed legislation as just intimated, it is intrinsically right and well demanded, in view of the importance of the office and the rights of the people. Whoever shall be recognized as having the right to count the vote, as they cannot be regarded as clothed with other than mere ministerial functions, without the right to go back of the mere paper writings before them, it would seem to be at war with the very genius and spirit of our institutions to say that here all further inquiry should be precluded, and that wrong or injustice should go unremedied. We provide remedies in the judicial forums for the redress of every legal wrong, the least as well as the greatest; and this, too, whether to the individual as such or to him in his official or representative relations or rights. We undertake to protect society against those violating our criminal code, as we do against those in the States or the nation who without right intrude themselves into places of public trust. Why not afford a remedy to one who claims that he was constitutionally elected to this high office, and which, it may be, would have been awarded him but for the limited and circumscribed powers of the tribunal declaring the result? Why not let the people, through the courts, have an opportunity to vindicate their will and wish? For if the contestant is right and is deprived of his place for want of a remedy, the people and our institutions, to that extent, suffer. Why not open the doors of our courts to a proceeding which I propose shall be as nearly summary as possible, to the end that, by an inquiry conducted in a strictly legal manner, the very truth and right of the matter may be ascertained and declared? Who can be injured by such a proceeding? What violence is done to the constitutional or legal rights of any one?

As I have before suggested, it will not do for any man or party to imitate the morals of the highwayman and say, whatever the means employed to secure it, We have this office or place in our power or grasp and we intend to keep it whatever the consequences. That is the morality of the banditti in politics and the bravado in legislative action; it ignores right, represses conscience, sets at defiance the will of the people, underestimates the true and real power and office of the ballot, and brings reproach the most enduring to all who either sanction by inaction the delusive and demoralizing cry or take a portion of the ill-gotten gain following. No, sir; I repeat that only by adhering to what is right and just and true can any political party expect or deserve the continued confidence and support of the people. And whether the departure from the true path consists in a continued disregard of the rights of any, the humblest citizen, in setting at naught the sacred landmarks of the Constitution, in a violent attempt to set aside a result reached by methods adopted by the constituted authorities, in appeals to the baser and meaner passions of the human heart, in denying to any man a remedy for any legal wrong, in holding by force or numbers any ill-gotten gain, whether as to place or means, in whatever it consists the offender must atone to the offended law and sooner or later the punishment will be plenary, and, it is believed, as corrective as full.

Then, too, this measure would tend to repress frauds and violence in our national political struggles. It needs no argument to show that bad, corrupt, and designing men—men who seek power without regard to the means employed—would be likely to engage and succeed in their trade, in proportion as the chances for investigation and their exposure are rendered or made improbable. As success is to such men the goal of their ambition, they become reckless of the means used to bring it about, as the tribunals for investigation are shorn of or are limited in their powers. You open good, honest, thorough methods of inquiry, and such men would be less likely to concoct their infamous schemes or use corrupt, illegal, violent, or fraudulent means to carry elections. Their favorites among the candidates, too, would be less inclined to countenance or actively co-operate in such schemes if they knew that there was an ultimate tribunal having full power to investigate and uncover frauds, rascality, or illegal and reprehensible efforts to cheat and defeat the will of the people. Give an opportunity for judicial inquiry, and I doubt whether either party would attempt to elect a President by a stolen vote; all would be the more induced to labor for the supremacy of a free ballot; there would be less confidence in and reliance upon mobs; greater faith in fair, honest, and peaceful methods, and a more general disposition to leave canvassing boards, returning boards, electoral colleges, and all in any manner connected with the election free from terrorism, bribes, frauds, or aught else to betray or make afraid.

Add the further consideration that one in this high office would less distrust his right in case of doubt or possible controversy, would feel more secure and impregnable as well as satisfactory his relations to the people did he know that an antagonist had a fair, easy, and speedy remedy by an appeal to the judicial department of the Government to assert his claim to the office. If at all fitted to the high trust, he would needs be embarrassed and his relations to his constituency and the States could not be so cordial as the best interest of the public service would demand when he is reminded—if the fact is so—that he holds his office by the slenderest technicality; that he has been declared elected, not because he had an honest majority of the electoral vote, but because there was no tribunal with power to investigate and declare the truth.

Thus, Mr. President, I have given as briefly as possible, and yet I know imperfectly some of the considerations which seem to show the advisability and practicability of this measure. And here I leave it in the hands of the committee and shall abide their action and that of the Senate. I repeat that I do not bring it forward because of any fear that to avoid trouble and violence we must necessarily have now new or different legislation. Those there are, I know, who entertain and express such fears. I do not share them. I deprecate contentions; I deprecate predictions of trouble; I deprecate all utterances which tend to keep alive sectional hates, extreme party differences, or those jealousies and criminations which every political contest engenders, but which should be buried, for a time at least, if not forever, with the close of the ballot-box, or after the people have spoken. There must not be, there will not be, there cannot be, violence and trouble. Peaceful methods are the methods of the people. Other methods will be those of the dissatisfied politician, the hungry and gaunt office-seeker; the indiscreet and unsafe wild ravings of the sensationalist; but such men cannot and will not, in my judgment, have a following to disturb the quiet of a town meeting in any part of this great nation. The choice of the people, as ascertained and declared by the authorities deputed thereto by the Constitution and the law, must and will be the next Chief Magistrate, unless declared otherwise in some legal mode by the civil tribunals of the land. And to this conclusion or complexion we must and will, I doubt not, all come. The people will accept the final decision with loyal acquiescence. This nation can live in peace; it must not, it cannot live amid scenes of violence and revolution. The man who talks of or contemplates such scenes as probable or possible contemplates an end of organized government—the blotting out of the great Republic. The memories are so great and sacred, our mission for humanity and the world so broad, as to lead every patriotic and Christian heart to cling to the Union and its integrity by peaceful means with all the confidence of a friend, the devotion of a worshiper, the unquestioning faith of a child. Tell me not that party differences are to now disrupt and rend this nation. Tell me not that the disappointment of one side or the other, as to their choice for the Presidency, will bring violence and anarchy. I feel as hopeful and confident of a result in accordance with my political views as, perhaps, any one here.

I think I feel as great a pride in the history and record of the great party to which I belong and am as strongly impressed with the advantages to come to the country by its continuance in power as any one in the land. And this because I find that during its continuance in power, amid the ravages of war and all the retarding work of reconstruction, the nation has prospered as never before in its history. I know, too, that twenty years since, springing into life as the creature of new and vital issues, then first evolved in our politics, it came thereafter into power, without experience in administration, in policies untried, without practice in official life, and that it found the Treasury bankrupt and replenished it. It found a worthless paper currency and replaced it with the best the country has ever known. It felt upon its inauguration the tread of armed men and heard the crashing and echoing sound of shot and shell almost within the sound of this great Capitol building. It found those resisting the national authority organized in almost half the States, that authority defied in others, and the stoutest hearts quailing before the impending danger. It found a reduced Army, a scattered Navy, and plundered arsenals. It found a great party, then for the first time in at least twenty years driven from power, smarting under all the mortification, wrongs, disappointments, real or imaginary, ever consequent upon failure in a great and earnest struggle. It found devolving upon it the Herculean task of organizing an army of many hundred thousand, raising money for their pay, their equipment, their subsistence, and all the vast expenses of the most gigantic struggle of the centuries. It passed through all this; has paid rapidly the national debt; reduced greatly taxation and annual expenditures; made treason odious; dispelled, as I hope, forever the dream of secession; delivered the people from those twin relics of evil, caste and slavery; secured the equality of all men before the law; has given us a nation of freemen, the flag inviolate, and, above all and crowning all, a nation saved. Is it any wonder therefore, may I not ask, that this great party, whatever its mistakes, should feel in its just pride that no other ever performed such a mission for humanity, that it contributed more than any other to the saving of that flag, and that now it should be inclined to say, "by the gods, we ought to control it at least for a while?" Is it any wonder, I repeat, that we thus feel, though we may have made mistakes? What party has not? What party will not? And yet, with all this record, all these grand traditions, all these claims, we only ask, expect, or will receive power (I feel that I voice the wish of every thoughtful member of the party) by the choice of the people and under the constituted methods; desiring alone, as I believe also, the best interests of the country, not a mere party triumph.

To those so lately antagonizing the nation in the tented field we appeal with confidence that our policies have for the most part been humane, liberal, and, if accepted in good faith, unifying and calculated to advance, as we have believed, the interest of the whole and our common country. They must remember that no party ever had in our history such grave responsibilities to meet. None other, in my judgment, ever met more bravely, unselfishly, loyally, the great work confronting and devolving upon it. Why should not all now meet upon a common ground and look and labor for a peaceful solution of the complications around us? I know we will. I know it cannot be otherwise. Speaking for the noble and patriotic people of the State I here in part represent, I know I can say that, while they will submit to no compromise with wrong, they will sacrifice feeling, hopes, treasures, all, for the right. They love the country and the whole country, and will surrender all but honor and principle for its maintenance and unity. They have no hostility to sections or localities, and are ready to receive in good faith and award all rights to all those who do sincerely stand by the Constitution as it now speaks and accept the flag as the emblem of freedom and assured protection to all without reference to former or existing conditions in their political and legal rights. They have no registered oath to wrong or do injustice to any party, any citizen, any section; but recognize their individual and common obligation to do justice to all, the humblest as well as the highest, and all in their power to promote the interest of the South and the North alike, and make stronger the bonds which should unite us in a common grand destiny. Living in a State boundless in its resources, infinite in its possibilities, extending to all the largest freedom of choice, developing almost beyond any of the great family, "with charity toward all and malice toward none," confident in the correctness of their political views and of their devotion to the best interest of the nation, they will yield nothing to threats, nothing to that spirit which would break down the sacred landmarks which the fathers have set; but give all things for the supremacy and triumph of the Constitution and the law, the peace, quiet, welfare, of that now happily united country which the best blood of their best sons contributed so largely to save.

Mr. President, I move that the bill be referred to the select committee appointed to consider a mode of counting the electoral votes.

Mr. KERNAN. I ask the Senator to withdraw the motion a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. The motion is debatable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is debatable.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I do not rise to debate at length——

Mr. BOGY. Will the Senator from New York excuse me a moment? I have on my table a portion of the testimony which was taken in New Orleans by the five gentlemen who were sent there on the part of the democratic national committee, and which was not in my possession when I presented to the Senate the report of those same parties. I desire now to present this testimony to the Senate that it may be printed, and that the report of the committee made sometime ago, and which was ordered to be printed, shall be printed as a part of this document. It is the testimony alluded to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] a short time ago. I wish that it be printed, and the same number of copies as of that submitted by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that the testimony taken before the returning board?

Mr. BOGY. It is the testimony taken before the returning board, as I am informed.

Mr. SHERMAN. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. Is it all to be printed, so that this document with that presented by the Senator from Ohio will cover all that occurred before the board?

Mr. BOGY. I understand so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing this testimony?

Mr. PATTERSON. What is it? We could not hear a word over here of what has been said on the other side of the Hall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina says he did not hear the Senator from Missouri. The Chair did not hear the Senator entirely. The Chair did not understand exactly what he desired should be printed.

Mr. BOGY. The Senator from South Carolina was not here some time ago when I presented to the Senate the report of the five gentlemen who were sent to Louisiana by the national democratic committee. At the time I presented that report I had not in my possession the testimony which was taken down there, and was received by the returning board. It is that testimony now, as I am informed, that I present and ask to have printed. I desire that it be printed, and, with the testimony submitted by the Senator from Ohio, already printed, will cover the whole testimony before the returning board and the report of the gentlemen sent there, made at the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to printing this testimony? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BOGY. I presume it is understood that there will be printed the same number of copies of this as of the other. I do not remember the number of the other, but let it be the same number, whatever it was.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no objection to that order, but the law requires that order to be sent to the Committee on Printing. I have no doubt it can be reported back promptly, but the law must be conformed to. The order for printing may be made, but as to extra numbers that should go to the Committee on Printing. It can be reported back readily.

Mr. BOGY. I move that the ordinary number be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the order already made.

Mr. BOGY. Then I move that an extra number be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, the duty of counting the votes of the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States under the Constitution, who shall do it, and what they can do in ascertaining what are the votes, are doubtless important questions, unless there shall be some action providing something else for our guide than the Constitution as it stands. I do not expect that Congress will be able now, by statute or by constitutional amendment, to relieve any difficulties which may arise in counting the vote at an early day under the constitutional provision; and as I differ very earnestly and sincerely from some of the positions taken or opinions expressed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT,] I wish to express my dissent now.

I understand him to be rather of the opinion, though he does not express it positively, that under the Constitution as it is the right and the duty are imposed upon the President of the Senate of counting the votes, and, of course, doing whatever that phrase means. I do not agree to that construction of the Constitution. I do not think it is the fair meaning of the language of the Constitution; I do not think it was the intent of the makers of the Constitution, by the language they used, to give to the President of the Senate the right to count the vote and to do whatever that in law means. On the contrary, in my judgment, the two Houses of Congress, the Senate and the House of Representatives, have the right and have imposed upon them the duty of counting the vote, and I submit very respectfully that that is the fair and reasonable construction of the Constitution. The language is very familiar to all. It is that the electors shall transmit sealed their certificates directed to the President of the Senate at the seat of Government, and then "the President of the Senate shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted."

In express language, the Constitution directs that he "shall open all the certificates;" but it does not use language importing that he shall count them. He "shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." By whom? If it had been intended by the President of the Senate, the language of the Constitution naturally would have been "he shall, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates, and then count the votes." That is not the language. The language is he "shall, in the presence of the two Houses, open all the certificates, and the votes shall then be counted." By whom, according to any rule that is applied to the construction of a constitution or statute? It seems to me clearly by the two Houses of Congress. It would be absurd to say that the two Houses must be assembled merely to sit as silent witnesses and without the slightest authority to in any way interfere to prevent what they believe a wrong count or prevent what they knew to be a false and fraudulent certificate from being counted. It seems to me that his function, his authority or duty, is to open all the certificates which are transmitted to him that they may be brought before the two Houses, and that the solemn duty and the grave responsibility of ascertaining and counting the votes devolve upon the two Houses, representing the States and the people. They are to count the votes, to see that nothing but real votes are counted, and to see that they are counted properly and correctly. I am not willing to believe that the body of men who would not intrust many things touching the Presidency to the Senate at all, intended really that its President should be the sole judge of what were votes, and that he, uncontrolled by those in whose presence he was to open the certificates, was to decide upon and count them.

I do not desire to-day at length to argue this construction of the Constitution from its terms; but I do submit that the position that the two Houses are brought together in the presence of the President of the Senate for the sole purpose of sitting like statues and, in the language of one of the Senators now in this body speaking on this subject in a prior debate, without power to prevent wrong which they saw being done from being done, without any authority in the world except to sit dumb and see the performance whatever it might be, is utterly untenable.

I do not agree with the Senator from Iowa, either, that the practice of the Government has been in accordance with any such claim or construction. On the contrary, my reading of the precedents is that the President of the Senate has never decided a question, as of his own right, touching the counting of the votes. On every occasion after the Government was organized the two Houses, acting by their committees, have had reported to them and they have adopted a mode of examining the votes. On every occasion each House has appointed tellers, one on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to count the votes or to make a list of the votes. The practice has been, as I read the precedents, for the President of the Senate oftentimes to say that in obedience to the Constitution he now opens and lays before the two Houses the certificates, and then the two Houses have, by tellers previously appointed, ascertained and counted the votes.

If the Constitution had vested the power to ascertain and count the votes in the President of the Senate, the two Houses had no right to give any direction about it which should control him in the slightest degree. As I read the precedents, on every occasion when a question has arisen in reference to counting or not counting any certificate, the two Houses have separated and they have debated and considered it in separate sessions. Whatever order was made about it was made by the two Houses acting separately, and on no occasion, unless I have overlooked it, has the President of the Senate ever claimed or assumed to decide one of these questions. On no occasion has there ever been any assumption by him or any acquiescence by the members of either House that he had any such constitutional duty or right. Ever since the election of Washington the second time down to the last count, if I read the precedents and the practice of the two Houses correctly, they have directed how the count should be made; they have had their tellers making the count, and when any objection was raised there was immediately a motion that one House or the other withdraw, and they did separate, and they considered and they decided, if anything was decided.

In the light of this almost ninety years of uniform practical construction of the Constitution I cannot assent to the suggestion that the President of the Senate, no matter who he may be, has any power in the premises beyond that of opening the certificates. When the question arose—and I believe that was the first time, for I speak from memory; I was not aware that a debate would come up on on this subject now—in 1817, an objection was made. There was no decision of that question certainly by the President of the Senate. Immediately on its being raised each House retired to its Chamber. If gentlemen will turn to the debates they will find that there it was claimed by those who were among the ablest and most experienced of our public men in each House that the two Houses acting separately, as was their practice, were to decide any question which was to be decided. Come down to 1821, when it was anticipated there would be a question raised as to the electoral vote of Missouri, and you will find that each House appointed a committee, in the language usual and quite uniform, to report a mode of examining the votes. It was understood, it would seem from their proceedings—and we know that from history—that there might be a question raised as to the vote of Missouri; and hence the committee reported what? An express direction as to what should be done in reference to the disputed vote; that there should be tellers appointed, and that if the vote of Missouri should be objected to and the counting or omitting to count it would not essentially change the result of the election the result should be announced including the vote of Missouri and also excluding it. It was in the debate on that occasion that Mr. Clay said in substance, that the two Houses were assembled under the Constitution to count the votes, and I think you will find his language was, "and of course they are to decide what are votes." There was no suggestion by any one then that the President of the Senate had the constitutional right to decide the question; if the Constitution conferred the authority upon him to decide whether the vote of Missouri should be counted or not, the members of the two Houses were bound to allow him to do so, and to submit to his decision.

Again, in 1837, if I am right as to the year, when there was a question anticipated about the vote of Michigan, there was the same appointing of committees by the respective Houses, and report made by the committee on the part of each House to their respective Houses; and again they disposed of the question as it had been disposed of in the case of Missouri; the two Houses, not the President of the Senate, decided the question.

Again, going back in the chronology, in 1800 there was a bill introduced to regulate the counting of the electoral votes, and discussed. It was amended by the respective Houses; each House passed it in different form; they disagreed about details. Would those men, many of whom aided in framing the Constitution, have passed such a bill if there was any foundation for the idea that by the Constitution the right was given to and the duty imposed upon the President of the Senate to decide upon and count the votes?

If that was the true construction, what had they to do with devising means to count the votes and means to take proof as to and decide upon the votes? Because, Mr. President, the question is, is the duty by the Constitution, is the right by the Constitution given to and imposed upon the President of the Senate or given to and imposed upon the two Houses of Congress?

When you come down to 1857, the action on that occasion by the two Houses has been very fully presented to this body by the Senator from New Jersey, [Mr. RANDOLPH.] I only allude to it. There was the first occasion when I can find that any one suggested that the President of the Senate had in the slightest degree assumed to do anything except as he was directed by the two Houses. He in the joint convention disclaimed that he had assumed to decide the question which arose as to the vote of Wisconsin. When the two Houses separated to act upon the question which had been made as to the vote of this State, which had been given by the electors upon the wrong day for the reason given in the certificate, there was immediately very warm dissent in the Senate from the idea that the President of the Senate, Mr. Mason, had any right to decide the question, and he as earnestly disclaimed the assumption of any such right by him or that he had passed upon the question; one or two Senators said he had not done any such thing; that he had simply announced to the two Houses, in obedience to the joint resolution under which they were acting, the result which had been handed to him by the tellers.

And yet in the face of this, first the language of the Constitution, second the practice which existed down to 1857, to go no further, will it be said now, and will it be wisely said, permit me with the utmost earnestness to inquire, that at this time, when there are disputed questions which do affect the result, when there may be feeling and heat very naturally, a new construction shall be given to this language of the Constitution, which would greatly add to that which we all deprecate, heat, excitement, party feeling; or rather should we not say, if we are to discharge this duty under the Constitution as it stands, as I think we must, that the two Houses should be appealed to by every sentiment of patriotism, by every feeling of solicitude, for the welfare of our people, to meet their duty in the way our predecessors have met it from the beginning and according to the precedents they have given us? Thus every member of each House will, I trust, according to his conscience and his judgment, endeavor, without passion, without prejudice, without partiality, to decide these questions, acting as our predecessors have acted, and acting with a sole desire to have the right and the truth prevail in reference to them.

I agree with all that has been said by the Senator from Iowa as to this being a time when every man who has any duty to discharge in either House in regard to these votes should remember that the question rises above all party questions; it rises high above all mere questions of which party or which candidate should triumph. They should act in accordance with the Constitution and laws; and they should decide in accordance with their conviction as to what is the truth. All men who are honest and patriotic, as the great mass of the people are, will acquiesce in a decision made in this spirit, and they will acquiesce the more readily and the more cheerfully, whoever may be disappointed, because the two Houses have followed the precedents set them by the men who went before us. Let us satisfy the country by our action that we endeavored according to the Constitution and laws to decide these questions as to the election of a President and Vice-President according to the very right of the case, and by "right of the case" I mean giving effect to the honest votes of the people of the States on the presidential question wherever and so far as that can be done in view of all the light that we can legitimately have.

Since 1857, on every occasion when questions have arisen in reference to the votes of States, how have they been decided, by whom have they been decided? By a decision of the person who was President of the Senate? No, but by the action of the two Houses of Congress acting separately; and in the debates in reference to the rule or resolution under which the two Houses have acted in counting the votes you will find that the great body of Representatives and Senators, while differing about how questions should be decided, assumed that the action should be by the two Houses; that they were to decide whether a vote should be counted or not. If the President of the Senate has this duty devolved upon him and if the right by the Constitution is vested in him, all this practice and all these joint resolutions were usurpations, in violation of the Constitution. These were not hastily passed. The debates show how many Senators discussed this subject; and with very few exceptions they were uniformly of the opinion that the right and the duty were with the two Houses under and by virtue of the Constitution.

Therefore I submit, Mr. President, that whether you take the language of the Constitution, whether you look to the intent of the men who made it, or whether you look to the uniform practice under it, the evidence is that the two Houses have this duty imposed upon them and that they must discharge it. It seems to me that we should hardly concur in that sentiment which prevails so widely that the men who made this Constitution were wise, far-seeing men, if we should admit that this great and grave duty and so important at times was imposed upon and intrusted to one man, and that the members of the two Houses of Congress were to sit as mere silent witnesses. I think the debate showing the intent of the framers of the Constitution proves conclusively the contrary.

Now, one other suggestion I wish to make at this time. The Senator from Iowa stated that whoever counted the votes, if I understood him aright, was a mere ministerial officer, to enumerate the votes as they were contained in the certificates; that neither the President of the Senate, if he was the person charged with the duty of deciding upon and counting the votes, nor the two Houses, if it was confided to them, could look behind the certificate of the governor or other State authority to ascertain whether the vote certified should be counted. I cannot believe that any such view will be sustained. If the people of a State have cast a majority that is unquestioned, if the vote has been canvassed by the officers charged by law with that duty, if that vote has been returned according to law to the secretary of state, and as in some of the States the secretary of state in the presence of another officer is charged with the duty of tabulating the returns and making a certificate of the result, is it true that if he arbitrarily and fraudulently makes a false certificate, and the governor unites in giving the evidence of election to electors who were clearly defeated by the vote as it is on the records of the State—is it true that then the two Houses or the President of the Senate or whoever is charged with the duty of counting the votes must, although our committees have evidence showing that this certificate is false, that it is fraudulent, that it certifies the converse of the popular vote, not as gathered in a loose way but as returned to officers at the seat of the State government, that we must sit here and count it although that may change the result? Can that be so? While I would not entertain any latitudinarian doctrine about going behind the certificates, yet when we are satisfied by competent evidence obtained in any legal way that the certificate sent here that certain persons were elected is false and a fraud, that on the contrary others were elected, and that a dishonest governor or other State officer, or board of officers, has sent here a false and fraudulent certificate, I think the language of the Constitution as to counting the votes authorizes and requires us to decide that that is not the vote of that State, whatever other right we may have in the premises.

Any other construction than this would indeed endanger, in my judgment, the institutions of the country. It would be a temptation to a corrupt man, where the result might depend upon the vote of a single State, to certify the wrong men to be elected; and then, although all the world might know that the result of the vote of the State was different, there would be no remedy. I believe the duty to be imposed upon the two Houses to count the vote and decide what the vote is, and if by proof of fraud or force or other evil practices it is shown that the certificate which comes here is a falsehood, the two Houses at least can refuse to count the votes so certified. The appointment of the electors is made by the votes of a majority of the qualified voters. The certificate is merely the evidence of the result, and, like any other evidence, upon proof that it is false and fraudulent, it may be rejected. The judgment record of a court of competent jurisdiction is evidence of a very conclusive character, and yet you may impeach the judgment record of a court of competent jurisdiction by showing that it is fraudulent and false. I am not discussing now what case may come, but if a case comes before us where by fraud the certificate as to the election of the electors is made to speak a lie, in my judgment the two Houses, whose duty it is to count the votes of the electors, may, on the falsity of the certificate being established, refuse to count the votes. On its being established that the certificate is fraudulent and false, there is no vote to be counted.

The case of Oregon I shall not now discuss at all. I shall make up no opinion about it until the evidence and the law shall be laid before us in proper form to make a decision upon. I put the question to the Senator from Iowa if he will not agree with me that if where a governor or other officer fraudulently gives a certificate of election to a man who was not elected according to law and excludes from the certificate the man who was legally elected, he would not go behind the certificate? Take any of our States at the last election. To test the rule by an extreme case, take a State that went by a large and unquestioned majority one way. Take the State of Iowa. Suppose that the officer whose duty it was to give certificates to those elected electors certified that the minority candidates were elected, must we sit here and count that vote? Cannot we go behind the returns of officers whose duty it is to certify to the result of an election where it is established that they made a false certificate?

Mr. President, such a doctrine as that contended for by the Senator from Iowa might cause a people, a law-abiding and patriotic people, to be greatly excited and exasperated, and it would be a rule of action that would tempt evil men to procure false returns and get them made and sent here, so that one man might be counted in against the will of the majority of the electors who had legally cast their votes for another. I believe and I unite with all men of all parties in hoping that every question that will arise or which has arisen touching the recent election will be decided according to the Constitution and the law by these two bodies, each man of them laying aside partiality and prejudice and striving in deciding upon counting the votes to come at the real truth of the case. Let the truth and the right prevail, because if by trick or fraud we permit the election of men of either party, then remember that a precedent has been made which is dangerous to the perpetuity of this Government. Our people are educated in law-abiding habits. Their interests and their instincts are in favor of peace and order and justice. They will be sure to preserve their equanimity; they will be sure to abide by the laws of the country when they feel that the public officers charged with deciding questions which may touch party politics or party candidates will make their decisions as judges should make theirs, examining all things they have a right to look at carefully and fairly, examining to see whether there be any fraud that overthrows the rights of the people and endangers the Government, and reaching a decision upon which we can look every man in the face, political friend or foe, and say "Right or wrong, I decided according to my best intelligence and conscientious conviction, governed and controlled by an earnest desire to do what was right."

Mr. President, I wished to make these suggestions now, first, because I cannot assent to some of the views which have been expressed by the Senator from Iowa, and, secondly, because I believe it would tend more than anything else to create uneasiness, excitement, and irritation in the country if it were believed that there could be counted a fraudulent and false certificate of votes in favor of either of the candidates for President or Vice-President; that there is no remedy against such a certificate, if it is fair and formal on its face. I insist that by the language of the Constitution, by the clear implication from its language, the two Houses are charged with the duty of counting the votes, and that they are to decide what are votes. They are to endeavor to get at the exact truth, taking the certificates as evidence for what they are worth, not questioning them lightly, but where they find that a man or a set of men transmit votes here who were not elected by the people and whose certificate of election is false and fraudulent, these votes they should refuse to count. The members of the two Houses must decide, in my judgment, what are votes, not on the certificates alone, but on all the legal evidence which comes before them. They should do this in a fair and just spirit, acting for all the people. When this is done, as I trust and believe it will be done in the spirit in which Senators and members should meet these questions, no one then need be uneasy, but that all good men will acquiesce in the result; and we shall set a precedent for those who come after us which will tend to preserve our Government from the dangers of partisan excitement and passion.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have listened to the Senator with pleasure, and before he takes his seat I should like to ask him whether, if either House should object to the vote of a State, the result would be the exclusion of that vote? Does he think the vote could be rejected upon the determination of either House, or does he care to give his judgment on that question at the present time?

Mr. KERNAN. I would be glad to hear that question debated. I have an opinion about it. My own view is in accordance with the joint rule which was adopted in 1865. It being a duty that the two Houses have to perform, they must affirmatively decide that the vote objected to is a vote before it can be counted.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not the rule.

Mr. KERNAN. That was the rule. The impression upon my mind is that as the two Houses are to count the vote and to decide what is a vote; that where a certificate is objected to it requires that both shall agree, else it is not decided that it is a vote. This is the impression I have from the examination of the question I have made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I do not intend to express any opinion upon any of these questions which are likely to arise, but pledge myself beforehand to examine them dispassionately and honestly, and decide them according to my convictions of right and justice, above all considerations of party politics or party tactics. As I have been here during five or six counts of the votes of presidential electors, I might state some results in my own experience, but I will not do so, because all these matters will be subject of debate. I do not think there is much difference of opinion upon the general question, that where the two Houses concur in holding that the vote of a particular State is illegal or fraudulent or wrong, whether that power be given to Congress by the Constitution or not, the vote naturally will be excluded. In the case, though, that I submitted to the Senator from New York, where the two Houses disagree, then I beg leave to say to him it would appear to me to be revolutionary and monstrous that either House by its simple obiter dictum, by its own decision, should have the power of excluding a State from voting and thus change the result of a presidential election. That was the result of the twenty-second joint rule, and for that very reason that rule was denounced in this body by members of all political parties and, I believe, was condemned by the common judgment of the whole country.

Mr. BOGY. Under that rule the votes at three presidential elections have been counted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL in the chair.) Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; because I do not want to go into a discussion. I say, the result of such a rule as that is worse than any rule ever established in the Mexican Republic, because, if either House can make a conclusive objection to a vote, either House may, with reason or without reason, defeat a presidential election.

There are many points in this field of dispute where honest men may differ, and where argument, consideration, and discussion may lead them to come together. I have an abiding faith in the American people and in Congress. I have a hope, not yet clouded with the slightest doubt, that, before the time comes for the performance of this great constitutional duty, the two Houses, through their committees, will agree on some plan by which the process of counting the vote for President may be peaceful, lawful, and honorable. I rest in that hope, and I would not have risen at this moment to say one word except for the fact that, I regret deeply to say, a particular party in my own State have, in advance of any efforts made to decide this question by the only body that can decide it, appealed to popular prejudices and called party meetings all over the State that I have the honor to represent. Yes, sir, a single party have called meetings on a day sacred to the democratic party, for the purpose of what? Passing resolutions and considering these questions, at the very time when committees of both Houses are at the seat of dispute taking testimony; at the very time when committees of both Houses are here in the capital of the country considering all these difficult questions; at a time when an irritating word, or a threat, or a menace creates more trouble than anything else. I regret to see it, although I see of late that the spirit of the people—which is far better than the spirit of party leaders—is giving direction to these popular meetings, and that the tone of the meetings is now much more moderate than it was when they were excited and aroused by party feeling and party fervor.

I am glad to say too that the great party to which I belong, which at least represents the majority of the people of Ohio and the great majority of the people of the Northern States, is quiet, calm, and serene. No public meetings of indignation or to instruct us in the performance of our duty have been called by any republican or the republican party, and I hope there will be none. The people have performed their duty.

By law and by the Constitution their vote is made final upon us, and it must be counted. The mode and manner in which it shall be counted will no doubt be determined by the two Houses, or at least I hope so, and I will not say one word to prevent that count from being orderly in the way it has always been done heretofore.

And I now express my profound hope that Senators especially, and members of the House, and that the people themselves in their sovereign capacity at home will show, by their moderation and good sense and good temper in the intervening time between now and the day when this vote is to be counted, that they are worthy repositories of political power, that they can calmly await the development of events, relying upon public officers to do their duty as they believe according to the dictates of their conscience, and that they will not add to these fires by making any threat, any remark, or any expression that will tend to create excitement or feeling in this country. And, sir, if I could appeal to that other power which in this country ought to be recognized as one of the great powers of the Government, the power of the public press, if I could appeal to those men who in the silence of their chambers wield the pen which creates and molds public opinion in this country, I would beg them, in the name of God, in the name of our country, by every principle and motive that can actuate mankind, to be moderate in the expressions of their opinion, to be calm and courteous, and, above all, to make no threats and utter no menaces, because with the people of our race nothing disturbs men or parties or nations from the even temper of their judgment so quickly as a threat or a menace. We all know when boys at school the result of such a course; we all know its effect upon us here even in the Senate Chamber; and this is the time when above all things no word of reproach, no word of menace, no word of threat involving civil war or resistance to constituted authorities should be uttered, but all of us should so act as to show our firm faith and hope that our Government in this one hundredth year of our national existence, just after the Centennial, will perform the plain duty enjoined by the Constitution of the United States, and that a President of the United States will in peace and quiet, with the acquiesence of the people, be inaugurated on the 4th day of March next. I for one will not disturb that hope until the time comes when the moment will determine the duty that may then devolve on us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to refer the bill to the select committee to report a mode of counting the electoral vote.

The motion was agreed to.

CENTRAL BRANCH UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday, which is the bill (S. No. 60) declaring the true intent and meaning of the Union Pacific Railroad acts approved July 1, 1862, June 2, 1864, and July 3, 1866, and for other purposes, which is now before the Senate in Committee of the Whole, and on which the Senator from Kansas is entitled to the floor.

Mr. INGALLS. I am unwilling to proceed in the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I think we had better adjourn. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

SURVIVING SOLDIERS OF THE WAR WITH MEXICO.

Mr. FORT. I desire to present the memorial of some of the few surviving soldiers of the war with Mexico, and ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

BEAVERVILLE, IROQUOIS COUNTY, ILLINOIS.
December 28, 1876.

To the Congress of the United States:

The undersigned, officers and soldiers who served in the Army of the United States in the war with Mexico, in view of the vast and valuable territory acquired as the result of that war and considering the unusual sickness and suffering endured in those campaigns and the low wages received, do hereby pray and petition your honorable bodies to grant us, and all who served honorably in the land or naval forces of the American Army and Navy in said war, such additional pay, bounty, or a pension as shall seem to you most wise and just. And your petitioners would further urge, as additional reasons to stimulate your pity and clemency in their favor, that few of them are alive, and those few aged, feeble, and many of them still suffering in poverty from the effects of those hardships and the unaccustomed climate of tropical Mexico.

THE PRESIDENTIAL VOTE.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask unanimous consent to present the memorial of merchants, bankers, and others of the city of New York, praying for a peaceful and harmonious solution of the presidential question, this being the original, with the autograph signatures.

There was no objection, and the memorial was received, and referred to the select committee upon the subject of counting the electoral vote.

TAXES ON BANKS.

Mr. WILLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4302) to provide for the repeal of all taxes upon capital and deposits of State and national banking institutions, corporations, companies, associations, or persons engaged in the business of banking; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

SECTION 5219 OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. WILLIS also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4303) to further declare the meaning of section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States and its correct interpretation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGER FOR DIPLOMATIC GALLERY.

Mr. BRIGHT, by request, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That one messenger be added to the list of messengers under the Doorkeeper of the House, to be assigned to duty to the diplomatic gallery, which is not now provided for.

SOLDIERS' ROLL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire whether by the act of August 15, 1876, which declares that the fourteen messengers on the soldiers' roll shall be employed during the current year at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each, "and the sum of money necessary to pay the messengers on that roll is hereby appropriated," the Doorkeeper of the House had the legal right to discharge Charles H. Reisenger, one of the messengers on that soldiers' roll.

FORT UNION RESERVATION.

Mr. CAULFIELD, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4304) to authorize the United States to secure a title to the Fort Union military timber reservation in New Mexico; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. McCRARY, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be requested to transmit to the House a copy of the latest report of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company.

Mr. McCRARY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGE OF THE NAME OF A STEAMBOAT.

Mr. TUFTS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4305) to change the name of the steamboat Blue Lodge to that of A. P. Hosford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SALE OF SALINE LANDS.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas, I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 2260) for the sale of saline lands, returned from the Senate with an amendment, be taken up, and that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the bill had better be read, and also the amendment, before any consent is given.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment and then the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

Provided, That the beforegoing enactments shall not apply to any State or Territory which has not had a grant of saline lands by act of Congress, nor to any State which may have had such a grant until either the grant has been fully satisfied, or the right of selection thereunder has expired by efflux of time; but nothing in this act shall authorize the sale or conveyance of any title other than such as the United States has, and the patents issued shall be in the form of a release and quitclaim of all titles of the United States in such lands.

SEC. 2. That all executive proclamations relating to the sale of public lands shall be published in only one newspaper, the same to be printed and published in the State or Territory where the lands are situated, and to be designated by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it the purpose to put this bill upon its passage? It seems to me that it should go to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. I have already shown the amendment of the Senate to several members of the Committee on Public Lands, and as its provisions are only restrictive of the original bill as passed by the House and go to make it more perfect, they think it correct.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] object to the consideration of the amendment at this time?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object to a bill of this character, but still I think it ought to have consideration in the Committee on Public Lands.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would remind the gentleman from Indiana that debate under these circumstances is in the nature of objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not in order at this time to move to go to business on the Speaker's table, so that we may dispose of all these bills of the Senate which came over from last session?

The SPEAKER. It can be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask unanimous consent that the House now proceed to business on the Speaker's table for the purpose of disposing of all matters thereon for reference only.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not wish to object to this bill, but I should much prefer that it should be referred to a committee.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas. It is only an amendment to the original bill which passed the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am aware of that, but there are a great many gentlemen around me who are not aware that the original bill passed the House at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that the bill is before the House without objection, and the question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment of the Senate was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN, of Kansas, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BUSINESS ON THE SPEAKER'S TABLE.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now ask unanimous consent that the bills and other matters which have accumulated on the Speaker's table be taken up and referred to appropriate committees.

No objection was made, and the House proceeded to the consideration of the business on the Speaker's table.

The first business on the Speaker's table was the following resolution from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Enrolled Bills shall have power to act concurrently with a similar committee of the House of Representatives in the examination of enrolled bills, and shall carefully compare the enrollment with the engrossed bills as passed in the two Houses and correct any errors that may be discovered in the enrolled bills, make their report to the respective Houses, and shall be as follows: Mr. CONOVER, (chairman,) Mr. ROBERTSON, and Mr. KELLY.

Mr. CONGER. I presume that the proposition was that these matters should be taken up for reference only.

The SPEAKER. Yes; but this is a resolution which has no title, and it is therefore necessary that it should be read.

Mr. CONGER. I should have objected to going to business on the Speaker's table if it was proper to take up and pass bills or hold them for consideration now.

The SPEAKER. This is a resolution from the Senate, and if the gentleman from Michigan wishes it, the Chair will recognize him to move its reference.

Mr. HOLMAN. That resolution, I presume, should go to the Committee on Rules, and I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Rules.

The following resolutions from the Senate were severally read and referred to the Committee on Rules:

Resolved, That the Committe on the Library shall have power, in conjunction with three members appointed by the House of Representatives, to superintend and direct the expenditure of all the moneys appropriated for the Library, and to perform such other duties as are or may be directed by law, and shall be as follows: Mr HOWE, (chairman,) Mr. EDMUNDS, and Mr. RANSOM.

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing shall have power, in conjunction with the committee on the part of the House of Representatives, to discharge all the duties now or hereafter devolved upon them by law, and shall be as follows: Mr. ANTHONY, (chairman,) Mr. SHERMAN, and Mr. SAULSBURY.

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall have power to act concurrently with the same committee of the House of Representatives, and shall be as follows: Mr. MORRILL, (chairman,) Mr. CAMERON of Pennsylvania, Mr. PADDOCK, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. WHYTE.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment, with House amendments returned from the Senate not concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose it is understood that where there is no objection a bill may be acted on in the House at this time.

The SPEAKER. That was not the order of the House made by unanimous consent. That order was to proceed to the consideration of business upon the Speaker's table for the purpose of reference only. Whether as a bill is reached under this order made by unanimous consent the House may agree to consider it is another question; the Chair is of opinion that the House may consider a bill under such circumstances.

Mr. HOLMAN. It would facilitate business to act upon a bill at once where there is no objection to it.

Mr. DURHAM. I think all these bills should share the same fate.

The SPEAKER. Objection being made to the consideration of the bill, it will be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

The following bills of the House returned from the Senate with amendments were severally taken from the Speaker's table and referred as indicated:

A bill (H. R. No. 2300) granting a pension to Margaret C. Bell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. No. 2473) to authorize claimants upon even-numbered sections of land within the twenty-mile limits of the Northern Pacific Railroad to make proof and payment for their claims at the ordinary minimum rate of $1.25 per acre—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (H. R. No. 1558) to remove the legal and political disabilities of Robert Ransom, of Virginia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (H. R. No. 2133) to amend section 10 of the act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

A bill (H. R. No. 1915) to change the name of the steamboat Robert Ross—to the Committee on Commerce.

The following bill returned from the Senate with an amendment was then taken up:

A bill (H. R. No. 2041) to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, with the Senate amendments, may now be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] to make objection to the consideration of any bill taken from the Speaker's table at this time under the present order. This bill will therefore be referred, if there be no objection, to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. OLIVER. This bill, if referred, would properly go to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee has already informally considered the Senate amendments to the bill, and I hope it may now be considered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] to have made his objection general, and not as to any particular bill. This bill, with the Senate amendment, will therefore be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The following House bills, returned from the Senate with amendments, were also taken from the Speaker's table and referred as indicated:

A bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of the legal representatives of John W. Gall, deceased, late of Company A, One hundred and thirtieth Illinois Volunteers—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

INFRINGEMENT OF PATENTS.

The next business on the Speaker's table was the bill (H. R. No. 3370) to amend the statutes in relation to damages for infringement of patents, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to state that a motion has been entered for the reconsideration of the vote upon the engrossment and third reading of this bill. The Chair understands that the gentleman who has charge of the bill is not now present; and the Chair would suggest that the bill be allowed to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I presume there is no objection to that course.

Mr. SAMPSON. I entered a motion to reconsider the action of the House on this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has already stated that fact, and suggested that the bill be allowed to remain undisturbed on the Speaker's table.

Mr. SAMPSON. That will be satisfactory.

There being no objection, the bill was returned to the Speaker's table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the various votes by which bills and resolutions have been referred; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HEAD-STONES.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War respecting the appropriation for head-stones for graves of citizens and rebel soldiers in the cemeteries at Rock Island and Elmira; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SURVEY OF LANDS IN NORTH CAROLINA.

The SPEAKER also, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, inclosing an estimate for an appropriation for the survey of certain lands in North Carolina; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (S. No. 408) for the relief of Assistant Surgeon Thomas F. Azpell, United States Army; when the Speaker signed the same.

MILITARY ACADEMY BILL.

Mr. CLYMER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4306) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that that bill be made the special order for Saturday morning after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. I must remark to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that Saturday at two o'clock has already been set apart by order of the House for the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CLYMER. The question of consideration will be raised when that time arrives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the agreement by which the business of the District of Columbia was set apart for consideration on Saturday next at two o'clock was made by unanimous consent, and therefore would prevent the appropriation bill being taken up at that time. Objection being made, the Chair therefore would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania to name some other day.

Mr. CLYMER. I move then that the bill be made the special order for Monday next after the morning hour, and from day to day until disposed of.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at one minute to one o'clock, and the unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 3775) fixing the compensation of United States marshals and deputies. The pending question is the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] to strike out the words "nor shall their whole compensation exceed $1,200 per annum," so the bill will read "and the compensation of deputy marshals shall not exceed $5 per day while actually engaged in their duties." The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] will resume their places as tellers, the House having found itself without a quorum on the previous division.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 100.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DURHAM demanded the previous question on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

Mr. DURHAM, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3792) fixing the compensation, &c., of United States attorneys, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides in its first section that from and after July 1, 1876, the district attorneys of the United States shall receive for their services as such a yearly salary, to be paid quarterly, in lieu of the salary and fees now allowed by law, namely: The district attorney for the southern district of New York, $10,000 per annum; the attorneys for northern district of Illinois, district of Louisiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, eastern district of Missouri, southern district of Ohio, eastern district of Pennsylvania, western district of North Carolina, district of California, each $6,000 per annum; the attorneys for northern and middle district of Alabama, western district of Arkansas, northern and southern district of Georgia, southern district of Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, eastern district of Michigan, western district of Missouri, northern district of Ohio, western district of Pennsylvania, district of South Carolina, eastern district and western district of Tennessee, western district of Texas, eastern and western district of Virginia, each $4,500 per annum; the attorneys in each of the other districts not above mentioned, each $3,000 per annum. The above to be the amount of compensation for all services rendered by said attorneys to and for the United States, or for any of the officers of the United States, where, by existing law, said attorneys are required to attend to said matters; provided that said attorneys shall be allowed five cents per mile in going to and returning from any place to which he may be called from his residence in attending to any examination before a commissioner of a person charged with crime, or performing any service for the United States except attending regular terms of court.

The second section provides that it shall be the duty of said attorneys to attend to all cases in the district or circuit courts of the United States, in the districts where they are appointed, in which the United States is a party, and to attend to all other legal business in which the same may be interested, and also to defend any officer of the United States whenever the same may be sued about any matter connected with his said office.

The third section provides that all the fees and percentages to which said attorneys may be entitled shall, when collected, be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order that this bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, because it confessedly increases the salaries of the United States attorneys. At any rate it does not diminish the salaries of the United States attorneys.

Mr. DURHAM. It is a question whether it does not diminish them in the whole, although in some cases it may increase the salaries of district attorneys.

Mr. HALE. It is clear to my mind that the bill does not diminish them.

Mr. DURHAM. The bill provides for fixing the compensation of United States attorneys instead of allowing them to be paid by fees.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill therefore goes to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DURHAM. Before the bill is referred I wish to make some amendments from the committee so that the amendments may go with the bill.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to the amendments indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky, so they may be referred with the bill.

Mr. DURHAM. By inadvertence the District of Columbia was omitted, and it should come in line 12, immediately after the word "California." The eastern district of Michigan should be stricken out in line 16 and inserted after the words "District of Columbia." These are the amendments which were recommended by the committee.

Mr. KASSON. I notice the bill speaks of the southern district of Iowa instead of the district of Iowa, and that inaccuracy should also be corrected. I presume, however, it can be done in committee.

Mr. DURHAM. It can be amended in the committee.

Mr. CONGER. As I understand it, these amendments are reported from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CAULFIELD. The amendment should also be reported in line 3, striking out "1876" and inserting "1877."

Mr. DURHAM. That is a clerical error, and should be corrected accordingly.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to appeal to the House to have this important bill acted upon at this time.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Does the Speaker rule that this bill increases salaries, and therefore must have its first consideration, under the rule, in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union? In my judgment, the bill does not increase salaries.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to say that it might in some cases increase salaries.

Mr. HOLMAN. It unquestionably does in some cases.

Mr. DURHAM. But it does not in the aggregate. On the contrary, it diminishes the salaries.

Mr. CAULFIELD. It will be a saving of money to the Government.

The SPEAKER. The Chair rules that if the salary be increased in a single instance, the bill must under the operation of the rule go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. DURHAM. I am frank to say that in some instances the bill does increase salaries, but on the whole there is a saving to the Government.

Mr. CAULFIELD. Undoubtedly money is saved by this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair noticed the remark of the gentleman from Kentucky, that in some cases the bill might increase salaries, and therefore is clearly of the opinion that the bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole; and the bill therefore is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying amendments, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DURHAM. This is a matter in which the whole House is interested, and I ask that the bill may be made a special order for Wednesday next, after the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. To be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] asks unanimous consent that this bill may be made the special order for Wednesday next, after the morning hour, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the bill will go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana to object.

Mr. DURHAM. I have no objection to the bill going to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CAULFIELD. All we want is to have a day fixed for its consideration.

The SPEAKER. To reach this bill, being in Committee of the Whole, a motion would be required to be made that the House should resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the bills in Committee of the Whole would then come up for consideration in their order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to ask that the bill may be made a special order in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to object to that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection to the bill being made a special order in Committee of the Whole. I only object to its being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky will again state his request.

Mr. DURHAM. I desire to have the bill made the special order in Committee of the Whole for Wednesday next, after the morning hour, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. HALE. To be considered in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. DURHAM. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request made by the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. DURHAM moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENOCH TOTTEN.

Mr. BRIGHT, from the Committee of Claims, reported back the bill (S. No. 784) for the relief of Enoch Totten, administrator of the estate of William A. Ladd, deceased, and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on War Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred to the Committee on War Claims; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF GALVESTON AND BROWNSVILLE.

Mr. REAGAN, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3567) to make the port of Brownsville, Texas, one of the ports to which unappraised merchandise may be transported, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the substitute alone will be reported.

The substitute was read, as follows:

A bill to extend to the ports of Galveston and Brownsville in the State of Texas the privileges of sections 2990 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Be it enacted, &c., That the provisions of sections 2990 to 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes of the United States be, and they are hereby, extended to the ports of Galveston and Brownsville in the State of Texas.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the last section of the Revised Statutes referred to in the substitute be read; or perhaps the gentleman will state if that is the section referring to ports from which or ports to which goods may be transshipped.

Mr. REAGAN. Ports to which.

Mr. CONGER. That is sufficient.

Mr. FORT. I rise to a point of order. I understand that this bill will increase expenses; that it creates a new salaried officer, and I make the point of order that it ought to receive its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. REAGAN. It has nothing to do with what the gentleman supposes.

Mr. FORT. I do not see how you can make Brownsville a port of entry without having an officer there.

Mr. REAGAN. I think I can satisfy the gentleman on that point by making a brief explanation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized. The Chair will reserve the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. The object of this bill is to extend the provisions of sections 2990 to 2997 of the Revised Statutes to the ports of Galveston and Brownsville. I will read section 2990 and then section 2997. Section 2990 provides that—

When any merchandise, except wine, distilled spirits, and perishable or explosive articles, or articles in bulk, imported at the ports of New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Baltimore, Portland in Maine, Port Huron, Detroit, New Orleans, Toledo, and San Francisco, shall appear by the invoice or bill of lading and by the manifest to be consigned to and destined for either of the ports specified in section 2997, the collector at the port of arrival shall permit the owner, agent, or consignee to make entry thereof for warehouse or immediate transportation, in triplicate, setting forth the particulars in such entry and the route by which such merchandise is to be forwarded, whether by land or water. The entry having been compared with the invoice and duly sworn to, and such an examination of the merchandise having been made as will satisfy the customs officers that the same corresponds with the manifest and invoice, and the duties estimated on the value and quantity of the invoice, and on the execution of a bond as hereinafter provided, the collector shall deliver the same to be immediately transported to such port of destination, at the sole cost and risk of such owner, agent, or consignee.

Not at the cost of the Government. Now the ports to which the merchandise may be shipped are mentioned in section 2997, which is as follows:

The privilege of transportation in bond shall extend to the ports of New York and Buffalo, in New York; Boston, in Massachusetts; Providence, in Rhode Island; Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, in Pennsylvania; Baltimore, in Maryland; Norfolk, in Virginia; Charleston, in South Carolina; Savannah, in Georgia; New Orleans, in Louisiana; Portland, in Maine; Chicago, in Illinois; Cincinnati and Toledo, in Ohio; Saint Louis, in Missouri; Evansville, in Indiana; Milwaukee, in Wisconsin; Louisville, in Kentucky; Cleveland, in Ohio; San Francisco, in California; Portland, in Oregon; Memphis, in Tennessee; and Mobile, in Alabama; and to importations from or to Europe, and from or to Asia, or the islands adjacent thereto, via the United States.

On the 24th of February last this House passed a bill extending the provisions of this law to Genesee in the State of New York.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to ask the gentleman if Brownsville is a port of entry.

Mr. REAGAN. It is.

Mr. CONGER. Has it an appraiser?

Mr. REAGAN. It is a port of entry with a collector, appraiser, and all the other officers.

Mr. CONGER. Not an appraiser, I think.

Mr. REAGAN. I think the gentleman will find that it has; but it is not necessary perhaps for the object of this bill that it should have an appraiser.

Mr. CONGER. If it is a port to which goods may be taken in the interior it does not need an appraiser.

Mr. REAGAN. The provisions of this section are simply intended to cover that difficulty.

Mr. CONGER. I can very well see why the port at Galveston might very well be made a port of entry under the law, but I cannot see any necessity for making the port at Brownsville a port of entry.

Mr. REAGAN. I will state the matter so that the gentleman from Michigan will understand. This bill as reported grew out of a correspondence between officers of the New Orleans and Texas Steamship Company and General GIBSON, a Representative in this House from the city of New Orleans. It was shown in this correspondence that goods of this kind go into New Orleans, and unless we extend the provisions of these two sections, they are required to be delayed a considerable length of time before reshipment and transportation to the port for which they are destined. The object is to enable the party shipping the goods to get the necessary bonds and make a reshipment on the arrival of the goods, either in New Orleans or in New York, destined for these two ports.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will allow me a moment I will say that I think this whole system is not the best that could be devised and I was opposed to it when it was passed by the House; but it has been adopted and is to some extent perhaps useful to the country. The law provides that this transfer of goods under the interior-port-entry law shall be under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary has provided those regulations and they are so careful and guarded so well that I have not yet heard of any of the dangers that I anticipated from the passage of the bill. With the remark of the gentleman from Texas in regard to Brownsville being made a port of entry, I have no further objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. REAGAN. The Government loses nothing by it and commerce will be greatly benefited by extending the provisions of these two sections to these two ports in Texas. As the gentleman from Michigan, who has extensive acquaintance with this subject, is satisfied, I propose to ask the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Before the gentleman does that I wish to ask if it is intended to put both ports, Galveston and Brownsville, in section 2990? If the object is to put them into section 2997, which provides for transportation made under bond for the ports mentioned, there is no objection. But, as the bill reads, it differs from the original bill in this respect, that it puts the ports of Galveston and Brownsville into section 2990 and section 2997. I do not think they should be put into section 2990, because they do not belong to the class of ports included in that section, nor does the same necessity exist for placing them there. But I am willing that they shall be put into section 2997, which was apparently the object of the original bill, and I see no impropriety in inserting the names in that section.

Mr. REAGAN. The object is to give them the benefit of section 2997; but it was necessary, we thought, to refer to the other section in order that the benefits of all the sections might be extended to these two ports. It was intended by the original bill to make that arrangement, and I communicated with the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject. I asked the Secretary whether the original bill or the substitute would be the best, and if the gentleman will allow me I will in a moment read what he says in reply.

Mr. KASSON. While the gentleman is examining that I will call the attention of the House to the language of the substitute, which is that the privileges of sections 2990 and 2997, inclusive, of the Revised Statutes are extended to the ports of Galveston and Brownsville. Section 2990 provides that when any merchandise of a particular character is imported to certain ports limiting the numbers, it may be transshipped in bond, &c. Section 2997 enumerates a good many ports to which the privilege of transportation in bond is extended. My fear is that in the manner in which the substitute is worded it may put Galveston and Brownsville in both sections, and I think the whole object of the bill will be effected by simply adding the ports of Galveston and Brownsville to section 2997, because the language of the first section is that when any merchandise, &c., is imported at New York, &c., consigned to and destined to other ports specified, then certain things shall be done, so that if these two ports are inserted in both sections they will necessarily have all the benefits of the proceedings under them.

Mr. REAGAN. On the 8th of January a communication was addressed to me, in answer to one from me, by the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says:

Your note of the 7th instant has been received, transmitting a form of bill "to make the port of Brownsville, Texas, one of the ports to and from which unappraised merchandise may be transported;" as also a copy of House bill No. 2282, providing that similar privileges be extended to the port of Genesee, in the State of New York.

You inquire which form of bill is preferable.

For reply I have to state that, while perhaps either form might accomplish the object desired, that submitted by you in writing seems to be more specific, and perhaps for that reason would be preferable.

Mr. KASSON. The difficulty is that it was not the intention of the original bill to put both these ports in section 2997. If the gentleman will make the bill satisfactory in that regard I presume there will be no objection.

Mr. CONGER. The objection to placing these two ports in the first class is not of great importance, because unless goods are entered at these ports consigned to other ports it will be inoperative in any event.

Mr. KASSON. I should object to Brownsville being put in the first class for reasons apparent to me from some observations I had while serving as a member of another committee.

Mr. REAGAN. As the gentleman from Iowa objects, I will withdraw the substitute and will call the previous question on the original bill; but before doing so I will yield for a moment to my colleague, [Mr. SCHLEICHER.]

Mr. SCHLEICHER. I merely wish to state that I introduced the original bill to meet the request of some merchants in Brownsville, who stated the necessities of their commerce, and also from communications of Charles Morgan and Whitney & Co. That communication explains why it is necessary to include Brownsville. They run a regular line of steamships between New Orleans and Galveston, and also one between New Orleans and Brownsville, which has no connection with Galveston.

By conferring this privilege upon Galveston, and not upon Brownsville, you would oblige these steamers in many instances to touch at Galveston when otherwise they would not do so. The owners of these steamship lines have stated that this privilege is necessary for the facilities of their trade. There is a great deal of trade between Brownsville and Mexico, Brownsville being upon the line. Those who are better posted upon the subject than I am, these steamboat men and also merchants of Brownsville, have represented that this privilege is necessary. I introduced the original bill; the committee have proposed a substitute. It is immaterial to me which one is passed; I believe either would meet the case.

Mr. REAGAN. I will withdraw the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] withdraw the substitute by direction of the committee? As the Chair understands, the committee directed the substitute to be reported.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot say that I am authorized by the committee to withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman had better permit the substitute to be voted down.

Mr. REAGAN. Very well; but, before the question is taken on the substitute, I will move to insert the words "and Galveston" after the word "Brownsville."

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken upon the amendment to the original bill, and then upon the substitute.

The amendment moved by Mr. REAGAN was then adopted.

The question was taken upon the substitute; and it was not agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REAGAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES.

Mr. GOODIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back House bill No. 2041, to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and sundry Senate amendments thereto, with a recommendation that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

Mr. KASSON. Let the bill as amended by the Senate be read.

The bill, as amended, was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the proof of residence, occupation, or cultivation, the affidavit of non-alienation, and the oath of allegiance required to be made by section 2291 of the Revised Statutes may be made before the judge, or, in his absence, before the clerk, of any court of record of the county and State, or district and Territory, in which the lands are situated; and if said lands are situated in any unorganized county, such proof may be made in a similar manner in any adjacent county in said State or Territory; and the proof, affidavit, and oath, when so made and duly subscribed, shall have the same force and effect as if made before the register or receiver of the proper land district; and the same shall be transmitted by such judge, or the clerk of his court, to the register and the receiver, with the fee and charges allowed by law to him. And the register and receiver shall be entitled to the same fees for examining and approving said testimony as are now allowed by law for the same service.

SEC. 2. That said proof, affidavits, and oaths shall be properly filed in the land office by the register; and copies thereof certified to by the register shall be evidence of their contents in the courts of any State or of the United States.

SEC. 3. That if any witness making such proof, or the said applicant making such affidavit or oath, swears falsely as to any material matter contained in said proof, affidavits, or oaths, the said false swearing being willful and corrupt, shall be deemed guilty of perjury, and shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as if he had sworn falsely before the register.

Mr. GOODIN. I suppose this bill is understood by every member of the House, and if no one desires to ask any questions concerning it I will call the previous question upon concurring in the Senate amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

The amendment to the title was to make it read as follows:

An act to amend section 2291 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to proof required in homestead entries.

The amendment to the title was agreed to.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONTESTED LAND TITLES.

Mr. KIDDER, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2114) to give parties contestant time to file on or enter lands under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture acts after the contests shall have been finally decided, with an amendment striking out section 2 of the bill and inserting in lieu thereof a substitute.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That when a party shall contest successfully the validity of the title to any claim under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture acts of the United States, he shall have priority of right for fifteen days to file his declaratory statement on or enter the land over which the contest was had from the time the said party shall have notice of the final decision thereon.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the register of the land office before whom such contest was had, on the filing of said decision in his office, to give notice thereof to each of the parties interested therein, either personal or by addressing letters to them, respectively, at their last and usual place of abode.

The amendment was to strike out section 2 and insert in lieu ther of the following:

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of the register of the land office before whom such contest was had, on the filing of said decision in his office, to give notice thereof to each of the contesting parties, by written or printed notice, of said decision, to be sent by mail to their respective post-office addresses, which shall be furnished by the contestants at the time such contest is made. And the register is required to keep a record of such mailing of notices, which shall be conclusive proof of its recitals.

Mr. KIDDER. I call the previous question upon the bill and amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If I understand the provisions of the bill, when a contest is made over a pre-emption or homestead claim, and both parties have made improvements on the land, and the contest is decided against one of them, there is no provision made in regard to the improvements of the unsuccessful party.

Mr. KIDDER. In the West and especially in our Territories, we understand that parties may contest the title of a pre-emptor or a homesteader. If he is unsuccessful, then this bill provides that he may have fifteen days within which to enter the land, and of course the entry of the pre-emptor or homesteader is canceled.

Mr. BLAND. I hope this bill will not pass until it is further considered. I myself have known many instances where parties have settled upon public lands and where conflicting titles have been set up to those lands. For instance, a railroad company sometimes claims title to these pre-emptions and homestead claims, and some of them are claimed as swamp lands. The parties living upon these lands may have titles from railroad companies or may have swamp-land titles. Persons who desire to establish a homestead or pre-emption title file their objection, and the Departments may hold that the land is subject to homestead or pre-emption. In many cases these parties have lived on the land for five or ten years and have made improvements and erected homes there. There ought to be an amendment to this bill providing that where parties have made improvements upon these lands they should have the first right to pre-empt or homestead the land.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Dakota demands the previous question.

Mr. KASSON. Before the previous question is ordered, I wish to ask the gentleman from Dakota whether he intended to make the certificate of the register, as the bill reads, "conclusive evidence?" In land matters I am always opposed to putting the law in such a form as to preclude the power of correcting any mistake or misstatement of anybody. I think that, if the gentleman would substitute "legal evidence" for "conclusive evidence," the bill would be much more satisfactory in that particular. By using the words "conclusive evidence" we would shut out any possibility of an adverse party or any party interested showing error in the register's certificate. I think that this certificate should merely be "legal evidence," not "conclusive evidence."

Mr. KIDDER. If I recollect aright, the bill does not say "conclusive evidence," but merely "evidence."

Mr. KASSON. The clerk read it "conclusive evidence."

Mr. KIDDER. I have no objection to the verbal amendment which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. KASSON. The last clause of the bill (I have it in my hand) provides that—

The register is required to keep a record of such mailing of notices, which shall be conclusive proof of its recitals.

I move to strike out the words "conclusive proof" and insert "legal evidence."

Mr. CONGER. Or prima facie evidence.

Mr. KIDDER. I have no objection to the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON.]

Mr. KASSON. This amendment will allow opportunity for rebuttal; that is the only point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Dakota accept the amendment suggested?

Mr. KIDDER. I do.

The amendment of Mr. KIDDER, as modified by striking out "conclusive proof" and inserting "legal evidence," was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EPHRAIM P. ABBOTT.

Mr. GOODIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (S. No. 678) for the relief of Ephraim P. Abbott.

The bill was read. It provides that upon the payment of $2.50 per acre by Ephraim P. Abbott, of the county of Wayne, in the State of Michigan, his heirs or assigns, into the Treasury of the United States, or to the receiver of the land office of the district in which the following lands are situated, within six months from the passage of the act, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause a patent to be issued to Abbott, his heirs or assigns, releasing to him or them all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following described tract of land, situate in the township of Ecorce, county of Wayne, and State of Michigan, lying in rear of and adjoining private claim numbered 667, fronting on the River Rouge, and patented to Gabriel Godfrey, said tract so lying in the rear of said front claim and extending back, of equal width of said front claim, to the line of lands patented to James May, and being bounded on the north by the rear of said front claim, eastwardly by the line of private claim numbered 37, confirmed to Charles Chovin, continued to the land so patented to James May, and westwardly by lands authorized by act of Congress of July 1, 1870, to be pre-empted by Thomas Henderson. But such patent is in no manner to interfere with any valid adverse right to the land, nor preclude a judicial investigation in any court of law or equity between the patentee, his heirs or assigns, and any adverse claimant of the lands. Any incumbrance or conveyance of the land by Robert Abbott, now deceased, the father of Ephraim P., or any of the heirs of Robert Abbott, is to have the same effect as if the land had been patented to Robert Abbott during his life.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask whether the morning hour has not expired.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve all points of order on this bill when it shall come up again.

The SPEAKER. All points of order will be reserved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I will state that my object is to reach the bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same.

The SPEAKER. In the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union there is but one bill prior to the bill which the gentleman desires to reach; and when the House is in Committee of the Whole the prior bill can, if the committee should so determine, be laid aside so that the bill indicated by the gentleman from Alabama may be reached.

Mr. HUNTON. There is a special order for to-day—certainly one, if not two special orders. I suppose that a special order has the right to come up in preference to a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINGLETON rose.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Alabama as entitled to the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move that the House go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 89, noes 4.

Mr. SINGLETON. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, has been made the special order, and comes up as a matter of course, taking precedence over all other bills.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Mississippi had risen in time the Chair would have been compelled to recognize that fact, but the House is now dividing on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The House accordingly resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and Mr. THROCKMORTON will take the chair.

HOUSE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the House goes into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union I desire to make a report from the Committee on Appropriations and hope there will be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The House has resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, but the Chair will submit the question to the House whether by unanimous consent the report from the Committee on Appropriations will be received?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the bill be made the special order for to-morrow after the morning hour and from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I give notice that I reserve all points of order.

Mr. MILLS. I object to its being made the special order for to-morrow, as that is private-bill day.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is it not within the control of the majority of the House to make a special order? The bill will take but a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will recollect that this proceeding is by unanimous consent, and that unanimous consent only extends to the introduction and reference of the bill. To go further than that would be in violation of the understanding of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. This bill will not occupy ten minutes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ask again whether there is any objection to the assignment of this bill as a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour, in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes; I object, as to-morrow is private-bill day.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I hope my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations will withdraw the bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Under the rules is it not in the power of the House to make a special order?

The SPEAKER. But this proceeding is by unanimous consent, the House having resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FOSTER. Then objection being made, I withdraw the bill altogether and will report it at another time.

MEXICAN, FLORIDA, AND BLACK HAWK WARS.

The SPEAKER. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, will take the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The first bill in order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union is the bill (H. R. No. 748) to apply the proceeds of sales of the public lands to the education of the people.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Is that the special order for this day in committee?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Then I move that the consideration of that bill be postponed for the present, in order to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same, which was made the special order from day to day until disposed of.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move to lay that bill aside in order to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that appropriation bills take precedence of all other bills?

The CHAIRMAN. The consideration of the appropriation bill would have been regularly in order, but the gentleman from Alabama moves to postpone prior bills for the purpose of taking up the one to which he has referred.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The House, as I understand, went into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union expressly for the purpose of taking up the bill to which I have referred.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to inquire whether the education bill was not made the special order for this day by unanimous consent, and if that be so, whether anything can take it out of its place?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not so advised, although he is informed it was made the special order in the House. The Chair will submit the question to the committee as to whether it will proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill, as that seems to be the desire of the committee.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move now to lay aside all other propositions for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting a pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same.

Mr. HOLMAN. When the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union the regular order of business is the consideration of the appropriation bill, which comes up as a matter of course, and no question of consideration can be raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The question was submitted to the committee whether it would take up the appropriation bill, and it was disagreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a further point of order, that the question of consideration cannot be raised in Committee of the Whole. When the bill making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service was called up a motion to postpone might have been entertained. The question of consideration, however, could not be raised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided that the point of order comes too late, even were it a good one, as the committee has already proceeded to the consideration of other business.

Mr. KASSON. I wish to submit a point of order about which I think there can be no doubt, and that is, that this committee has no right to set aside an order of the House. Therefore, when the House has made a special order in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it cannot be set aside without the committee rising and obtaining a further order from the House to that effect. This committee has not the slightest power to overrule an order of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. That may all be true, but the point of order comes too late, as other business has intervened. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. KASSON. My point of order is right on that question, and it is that when a special order has been made in the House, that order of the House controls the Committee of the Whole. There is no way to avoid it in Committee of the Whole except by rising and going back into the House and asking for a change of the order.

The CHAIRMAN. These special orders in committee will be taken up in their order. The consular and diplomatic bill has been laid aside, and the question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to take up the special order which he has indicated.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the appropriation bills do not take precedence, we will otherwise never reach an appropriation bill.

Mr. SINGLETON. I have raised the question that the consular and diplomatic bill comes up as a matter of course first in order in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation bill came up first, and that order cannot be changed by this committee. It is an order of the House. The bill is the special order in committee; it is the first business to be reached, and cannot be postponed by the committee. Otherwise appropriation bills never would be reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair re-affirms its previous ruling that standing orders must be taken up in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar. The consular and diplomatic appropriation bill has been laid aside, and the question now recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion of Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee now has before it for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same.

The bill was read in extenso for information.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, rose.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to a question of order. I think it will be found that this bill was made a special order on the condition that it should not interfere with the consideration of any general appropriation bill. I think that by reference to the Calendar such will be found to be the case. I therefore contend that this bill should be laid aside.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The gentleman's point of order is made too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEWITT] has the floor.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, it has been made my duty to present to the committee some of the reasons why the bill now under consideration should be passed, and while I would have preferred that this duty should have been assigned to some other member more familiar with the rules of debate and more competent than myself to present the claims of our Mexican veterans, yet I shall most cheerfully proceed to the performance of that duty with none other than an honest, sincere, and patriotic purpose of promoting the interest of our common country. In the investigation of any question it is important to know precisely and clearly what the subject is, and when ascertained to confine our remarks to it. The subject for consideration is a substitute for certain House bills granting pensions to the soldiers of the Black Hawk, Florida, and Mexican wars.

The first section of the substitute directs and requires the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers, enlisted men, and sailors, including militia and volunteers, of the military and naval services of the United States who served sixty days in the war with Mexico, or thirty days in the Black Hawk or Florida war, and who were honorably discharged, and such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said wars, upon taking an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men as were married before the discharge of such officers or enlisted men, and who have not since remarried.

The second section provides that the act shall not apply to such persons as are now drawing pensions at the rate of $8 per month or more, nor to persons drawing pensions for less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension received and $8 per month, and it fixes pensions under this act to officers and enlisted men alike at $8 per month. This section provides against the drawing of two pensions by any one person.

The third section prescribes the mode by which persons are to be placed upon the pension-roll under this act. They are to be placed upon the roll by proof under such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior. And it also fixes a severe penalty for false swearing under this act, and also authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to strike from the roll any name whenever it may appear that such person is not entitled to a pension. This section further provides that the loss of a certificate of discharge shall not deprive any applicant of the benefits of this act, but that other proof of services performed and an honorable discharge shall be sufficient.

The fourth section throws around the pensioner under this act all the safeguards against fraud and exorbitant charges of attorneys as are secured to pensioners under the provisions of the Revised Statutes.

The fifth section excludes from the benefits of the act all persons under political disabilities.

Such are the provisions of the substitute. They are so simple that there is no difficulty in understanding them. If the House committee is ready to grant pensions to the surviving soldiers of the wars named, then there is no good reason why this bill should not pass. It is copied from the act of 1841 granting pensions to the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812, and will fully meet the objects sought. Our pension system assumes two forms, invalid and gratuitous pensions. Of the first I need have nothing to say, as this bill is of the latter form. Gratuitous pensions are defined to be "a reward for military services rendered, and is an evidence of the nation's gratitude to its defenders."

Now and then we meet a person who is opposed to all pensions, civil or military, but, Mr. Chairman, the policy of pensioning our brave volunteer soldiers who left home, wife, children, mother, in the hour of danger at their country's call to endure all the toils and horrors of the march, camp, and hospital, and face the perils of the battle-field, not for pay, but for love of country and their country's flag, is too firmly rooted in the minds of our people to be now eradicated. Before our fathers had finally established our Government, while the revolutionary war was still in progress, and in the darkest hours of that war, the first pension act was passed—in May, 1778—less than two years after the Declaration of Independence. This act gave to all the military officers commissioned by Congress who were or thereafter might be in the service of the United States and continue therein during the war, after the conclusion of the war, annually, for the term of seven years, one-half pay.

In 1780 half pay for life was promised to officers who would remain in the service during the war. These acts were rather in the nature of a bounty, but quasi gratuitous pensions. It is strange to me that both of these acts confined the gratuity of the Government to the officers to the exclusion of the more meritorious and needy, the private soldier. But in the early part of 1818 Congress enacted a measure which destroyed this unwarrantable distinction which had been made up to that time between officers and the private soldier in the bestowal of the national bounty. This act granted a pension for life to the officers and enlisted men who served in the war of the Revolution to the close thereof, or for a term of nine months or longer at any time during said war, and who were resident citizens of the United States, and who were then or might thereafter by reason of reduced circumstances in life be in need of assistance from their country for support. This act was passed just thirty-five years after the close of the Revolution. There were two other acts—May 15, 1828, and June 7, 1832—more extensive and more liberal toward the soldiers of the Revolution than the act of 1818.

In 1871 an act was passed granting pensions to the survivors of the war of 1812 who had served for a period of sixty days.

Thus I have given a brief history of our legislation upon the subject of gratuitous pensions to the soldiers of our different wars. This legislation, from the very beginning of our Government to this time, demonstrates that the pension system is a part of the general military policy of our country, and it is now too late to question the justness or propriety of the same. "To pay our soldiers for having fought, rather than they should fight for pay," it seems to me is a sound and good policy. When the soldiers of 1846 and 1847 volunteered and went out to bear our flag against a foreign enemy and upon a foreign soil, they expected, and had a right to expect, that, as the soldiers of the revolutionary war when old and poor were taken care of by the Government, so the Government in like manner would take care of them in their old age and poverty, and now they come to us, as the representatives of the American people for whom they fought, and demand of us to redeem the implied pledges of the Government. They tell us in their memorials, in their conventions, and in their public gatherings everywhere, and history corroborates their statement, that they bravely and gloriously bore our flag in triumph at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Monterey, Buena Vista, Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Chapultepec, Molino del Rey, and on to the City of Mexico, and won for our country, not only an imperishable glory and renown, but secured California, New Mexico, Nevada, and parts of Colorado, Wyoming, and Arizona, and established the boundaries of Texas, embracing in territory 937,875 square miles, an area greater than all the organized States in the Union at the date of its acquisition, with all its vast and incalculable wealth. In turn for all this they only ask the little pittance of $8 per month to feed and clothe them in their old age and poverty. For one, Mr. Chairman, I intend to heed their cry and vote to grant their request. I feel that the people who sent me here under a pledge to retrench and to guard well the door of the Treasury will gladly ratify and confirm my action in the premises. The people of this country would not have us deny these old soldiers this pittance under the plea of reform. Let us find some other place for retrenchment. Let us go on in the good work so well begun at the last session in the Military Academy, diplomatic and consular, fortifications, and other bills.

I said, Mr. Chairman, that the Government by its past legislation impliedly contracted with these veterans when it called upon them to go and fight against an enemy upon a foreign soil that in their old age it would give them the pension now proposed by this bill, and to refuse would be to dishonor the Government and to do these old soldiers a great wrong, if not a crime. It would be a refusal to perform a very high moral obligation.

Mr. Chairman, there are other reasons why this bill should be passed. The monarchical governments of Europe are compelled at immense cost to their subjects to support and maintain large and imposing standing armies for the protection of the divine right of kings. The Emperor of Germany is reported as having said, upon the presentation of the congratulations of the German army to him by the Crown Prince a few days since, that the army was the base of the German Empire, and he might very truly have added and of all monarchical governments. But, Mr. Chairman, our Government is based upon the will of the people, who are sovereigns; and any political party which ignores this fundamental principle in its administration of the Government and substitutes force therefor destroys the Republic and establishes a despotism.

A large standing army was considered by Jefferson, Madison, and all the earlier statesmen of this country as inimical to our republican form of government. It is a constant menace to the liberties of the people and should not be sustained by their Representatives. The Government has heretofore in all its wars relied almost exclusively upon a volunteer army. The revolutionary war, the war of 1812, the Florida war, and the late civil war for the preservation of the Federal Union were all fought and won by a gallant citizen soldiery. And as our Government relies, or should rely, upon a volunteer army for its defense against a foreign as well as a domestic enemy, it is the part of wisdom and statesmanship to legislate so as to encourage our people to be ever ready to defend our flag and uphold the honor of our country whenever and by whomsoever they may be assailed.

We should show them by wise and judicious legislation that the Government will not only take care of the wounded and such as contract disease in the service, but will liberally aid and help the veteran soldier as he advances down the declivity of life. Let it be known as an established fact that this Government will ever cherish and aid its soldiers when old, and when involved in war volunteers will rush to our standard at the tap of the drum, ready to face death in defense of our flag.

Mr. Chairman, if this committee was composed of men who had borne their country's flag in a foreign land, beneath a scorching, tropical sun and in a malarious climate, and who had witnessed the almost intolerable sufferings of the living, and seen the pale, sick, and dying soldiers far away from home and friends in an inhospitable land, with no mother, sister, or wife to nurse and care for them, there would be no dissenting voice here. It has been said that rich men make wars but poor men fight them. Whether the first part of the sentence is true or not, the latter has certainly been demonstrated in all our wars. While the poor soldiers are bravely and heroically bearing their country's flag amid grape and canister, blood and death, the rich are at home growing richer by the very misfortunes of war. Let us pass this bill and show to our people thereby that the Government will and shall take care of all our veterans who have borne our flag, and thus encourage others to do as these brave men have done, if an occasion shall require.

"In time of peace prepare for war" is a wise maxim. But how prepare? By sustaining large standing armies to overawe State Legislatures, to intimidate voters, and control elections? No. I would reduce our regular Army to a force just sufficient to garrison our forts and protect our frontier. By large appropriations for fortifications? No. By a grand and magnificent navy? No. But legislate so as to mete exact justice to all, oppress none, lighten the burdens of the Government from the shoulders of the people; cease appealing to the bad passions of men, let the old sores heal, let every man in every section of our common country feel that he is a freeman entitled to all the privileges of any other American citizen; cease denouncing one section as rebels and murderers, restore our prostrated commerce, give to our suffering country a currency equal to gold, without contraction; start again the iron furnaces and workshops of Pennsylvania and New England, and thereby give employment, with remunerative wages, to the starving thousands of artisans and mechanics there out of employment; restore confidence and revive business; and then pension the old men who bore our flag, which we all love and revere, bravely and heroically upon so many bloody fields in Mexico, and when we return home to our constituents we will receive the welcome plaudit, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

I say pass this bill, pensioning alike the brave men of the North and of the South, who fought shoulder to shoulder and hand in hand under Taylor and Scott, and we will have done more to prepare in time of peace for war than we could do by appropriating millions upon millions of dollars for fortifications; more than building an indefinite number of iron monitors, and more than arming and equipping a regular army of one hundred thousand men. To prepare for war in time of peace is to teach our whole people to love and respect our Government, and to prove to them that the soldiers who uphold the flag, when old, will be pensioned by the Government.

It is not safe to rely upon the draft or conscription to fill the ranks of our Army in times of danger and war. No drafted soldier goes to the field satisfied and content. He is ever grumbling, and his example breeds discontent among the volunteer soldiers and encourages desertions. Hence I repeat it is the part of wisdom to legislate so as to encourage our people to volunteer when their services are needed. I do not anticipate any war soon, and I would to God that our country may never be involved in another, either foreign or domestic. But we cannot tell what a year or a month may bring forth. Hence it is necessary to be ready for any and all emergencies. We have had wars in the past, and we may have them in the future.

The Government should pension these brave men, because it has and is still reaping a golden harvest, the fruits of their sufferings and heroic deeds. What did we gain by the war with Mexico? As I have already shown, by it we acquired California, Nevada, Nebraska, New Mexico, and parts of Arizona, Wyoming, and Colorado, and established the boundary of Texas, covering an area of over 937,875 square miles. What is the value of all this public domain? It embraces over 600,000,000 of acres, and at Government prices would be of the value of nearly $1,000,000,000. This country has produced since its acquisition, in gold, over $2,000,000,000, which has diversified the industries of the country and given an impetus to the commerce of the world. The value to this country of the territory acquired by the Mexican war cannot be estimated in dollars and cents. For what would our Government part with this magnificent and golden country, with its 2,000,000 inhabitants, its vast resources and commanding position in the continent, "holding in its arms the great gate-way to the East?" There is no consideration which could induce this Government to cede this territory to any other nation.

But it may be said that all this splendid and rich territory was acquired by virtue of the Hidalgo and Gadsden treaties, and that the United States Government gave $25,000,000 and paid about $5,000,000 to the citizens of Mexico in consideration of Mexico ceding the same to the United States. It is conceded that by the two treaties mentioned Mexico agreed to, and did, cede all this territory to the United States Government upon the payment by the United States of $25,000,000 and a debt Mexico owed its citizens growing out of the war of about five millions more. But, sir, what was the cause of the treaty of Hidalgo? It was the unparalleled heroism of our gallant Army at Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, Buena Vista, Cerro Gordo, Chapultepec, and Malino del Rey. It was the toils, sufferings, and blood of our soldiers. It was the little army which marched through blood to the very capital of Mexico, and there captured or dispersed the Mexican army of five times its numbers, and dictated the terms of the treaty of Hidalgo. Who would dare assert in this national Hall that all this territory was acquired by money paid out of the Treasury of the United States? Why, sir, Clay, Yell, Butler, McKee, Hardin, Ringgold, Page, McIntosh, Graham, Ritchie, Ayres, Armstrong, Merrill, Gillespie, Baxter, Gantt, Drum, Allen, Benjamin, Walker, Smith, and Morange lost their lives in its acquisition.

The blood of these and of thousands of others as brave and as good, whose names do not appear upon the pages of history, but whose glorious deeds are enshrined in the hearts of the American people, together with the indescribable sufferings of the living soldiers of that war, were the incalculable price paid for this territory.

Sir, does any man suppose that Mexico would have parted with this magnificent territory for $30,000,000 had not an American army overrun her soil, dispersed her armies, and occupied her capital city?

We have read, Mr. Chairman, of a stern old Englishman who when the treaty was concluded between France and England at the peace at Amiens disapproved of the terms of the peace as ignominious to England, and in the House of Commons said that if King William could know the terms of the treaty he would turn over in his coffin. Sir, if there be one here who should propose to rob the Mexican soldiers of the honor and glory of having added by their prowess and valor this territory to our country, to him I would say with emphasis that if it should be known to Scott and Taylor they too would turn over in their coffins.

To the soldiers who bore yonder flag through toil and blood to the capital of the Montezumas belongs all the credit of its acquisition. It may be asked what amount of money will be required to carry out the provisions of this bill. It appears to me, however, that that is not the question which we should discuss. If the soldiers are entitled to a pension they should have it regardless of the cost. While I favor retrenchment and reform, I am not willing to begin with our veteran soldiers. There are other places where the pruning-knife may be used freely without any detriment to the people or the Government. There is scarcely a Department of the Government which is not sadly in need of it. But I would keep it off of those who have borne our country's flag in the perils of war. This Congress has donated one million and a half dollars to a private corporation to celebrate the Centennial of our Independence. Why not give something to those who have fought to sustain the honor and glory of our country? The Government has given what is equivalent to over a hundred million dollars to build a railroad across the country won by our soldiers. Why not recompense them for having given the country to us? The Government has donated millions of dollars in the way of subsidies. Why not give a pittance to feed and clothe our aged soldiers?

The committee are satisfied that one million and a half dollars per annum will be more than sufficient o meet all the requirements of this bill. There were enrolled in the volunteer army for the Mexican war, in round numbers, seventy-three thousand men. Some of these were counted twice. It will be remembered that the first troops called out were mustered for three months, and afterward other troops were called for and mustered for twelve months, and then others for the war. The war lasted about two years. Many of the three-months troops, and a few of the twelve-months, at the expiration of the term of service re-enlisted and were re-enrolled and mustered. And it will also be remembered that General Gaines, without authority, raised several thousand volunteers in Louisiana, enlisting them for three months, and when they reached Gen ral Taylor upon the Rio Grande he ordered them mustered out of the service, and my recollection is that the number was over three thousand. There were also two regiments from Ohio and Missouri, and one company from Iowa, amounting in the aggregate to twenty-seven hundred and seventy-eight men, which were not required to proceed to the seat of war, and were discharged a few days after being mustered into the service; also one regiment from Alabama, commanded by Colonel Jones M. Withers, of nine hundred and thirty-one men, which did not serve sixty days. These, aggregating sixty-seven hundred and nine, will not be entitled to a pension under this bill, not having served sixty days. The number of re-enlistments cannot be correctly ascertained, but I am satisfied that it could not have been less than three thousand.

The report of the Adjutant-General, December 3, 1849, shows that there were of the volunteer army killed and died of wounds received in battle in the Mexican war, 1,549, and that 10,885 died of disease during that war; but the number who actually died of wounds and diseases will far exceed the number given in this report, owing to a number of missing rolls, as shown by the report itself. There were a number of regiments which lost from one-fourth to one-third of their number. The Palmetto regiment, under Butler, out of 900 men, lost over 400. Colonel Collins's Illinois regiment, out of 1,000, lost over 300. Colonel B. F. Cheatham's Tennessee regiment, out of 1,000, lost 217. Lieutenant-Colonel J. G. Seymour's Georgia battalion of 400 lost 184.

When we take into consideration the number of battles fought, the malarious climate, and the fact that our troops were not acclimated, the loss could not have fallen short of 15,000 men. The above report of the Adjutant-General shows that there were 6,725 desertions. There have been pensioned of the survivors over 11,000 as invalids. All these must be deducted from the 73,000 enlisted in said war in order to arrive at the probable number who would receive pensions under this bill: First, 6,709 men serving less than sixty days; second, 3,000 re-enlistments; third, 15,000 killed, died of wounds and disease: fourth, 6,725 desertions, and, fifth, 11,000 already pensioned as invalids, making in all 42,434, which, deducted from 73,000, the whole number enrolled, leaves 30,566. That was the number thirty years ago. If we take the ordinary life table and apply it, we would find that there could not be surviving of the whole number of soldiers in the Mexican war covered by this bill exceeding twelve or fifteen thousand. But when we take into consideration the fact that all these men were exposed to hardships incident to all wars and were in a malarious climate, and that this exposure and climate must necessarily have impaired their constitutions more or less, and the further fact that we have had an unfortunate and bloody civil war in which these men were nearly all engaged—I say when we take all these facts into consideration, I may safely assert there are not now probably surviving exceeding six or seven thousand of these veterans.

In support of this calculation I quote from a letter written by General George W. Morgan and read to the State convention of veterans at Dayton, Ohio, December 15, 1873, over three years ago, in which he says:

> After the maturest reflection it is my conviction, comrades, that of the men who served with us on the fields of Mexico less than six thousand are alive to-day. There were battles, such as Buena Vista, Cherebusco, Molino del Rey, (the bloodiest of them all,) of the actual force engaged of some of the regiments more than one-third were stretched dead or wounded upon the ground. Thousands perished with arms in their hands. Many more thousands were buried from hospitals, and a still greater number lingered and died after reaching their homes from diseases contracted in a far-off land.

The number of widows covered by the bill will be but small. I base a calculation upon the history of an Alabama company in order to ascertain the probable number of widows who will receive pensions under this bill. This company had ninety-three men, and out of the ninety-three only six were married prior to their discharge. Five of the six are dead. Three of the five widows are also dead; one has remarried, and only one would receive a pension. I have taken this company simply because I am familiar with its history, and I do not know any good reason why it is not a fair criterion by which to estimate surviving widows of the war who would receive a pension under this bill. The number of widows who would receive the benefits of this bill would approximate about one thousand. The survivors of the Black Hawk war I estimate at not exceeding two hundred, including surviving widows. This war was in 1832, forty-five years ago, and continued for only about six months. There were not exceeding fifteen hundred troops engaged, consisting mostly of volunteers from Illinois. The Florida war began in 1835, and closed in 1842. There were enrolled about twenty thousand men. Many of these are counted as often as four or five times. The war lasted for seven years; the troops were mustered for three, and six, and twelve months, and as in the case of the Mexican war, there were many re-enlistments, some continuing through the entire war. I estimate the survivors, including widows, at not exceeding two thousand.

I have not included in the foregoing estimates the soldiers in the regular Army in the Mexican war. There were during said war enlisted in the regular Army, including 7,244 men, the number belonging to the Army at the beginning of the war, 35,009 men, and of this number about 27,000 were actually engaged in said war. The total number of enlistments above given includes all enlistments in the regular Army between May 1, 1846, and July 5, 1849, 2,512 of whom were rejected and discharged, and 2,474 deserted before being assigned to regiments. The loss in killed and wounded in battle, from diseases and desertions, were greater among the regular troops than the citizen soldiers. Then it will be safe to make the same calculation as to the survivors of the regular Army as I have made with respect to the volunteer soldiers. The calculation shows that the probable survivors of the volunteer Army amounts to about 10 per cent. of the whole number mustered. The same calculation would show 2,700 survivors of the regular Army. I would estimate the surviving widows, covered by this bill, of the deceased soldiers of the regular Army in the Mexican war at not exceeding one hundred, for it is a well-known fact that but few, if any, except the officers of our regular Army at that time were married men.

That the foregoing estimates approximate the numbers covered by this bill I have not the least doubt. Let us recapitulate:

Surviving citizen soldiers of the war of 1846	7,000
Surviving widows	1,000
Surviving soldiers of the regular Army of the said war	2,700
Surviving widows	100
Surviving soldiers and widows of the Black Hawk war	200
Surviving soldiers and widows of the Florida war	2,000
Making a total of	13,000

These will receive a pension at the rate of $8 per month, or $96 per annum, aggregating $1,248,000 per annum, which sum would be constantly decreasing. The surviving soldiers of the Mexican war will average about fifty-five years of age, with an expectancy of life of about fourteen years. The whole cost to the Government will not exceed sixteen or seventeen million dollars, covering a period of twenty-five or thirty years in the disbursement of the same.

After a careful examination of the subject with the offi ial records before me I feel satisfied that the foregoing estimates will cover the entire amount of money required by the bill.

The surviving soldiers of the Mexican war certainly have strong claims upon the country, which should be recognized by the passage of this bill. I have, Mr. Chairman, entered on no encomium upon these brave defenders of their country. They need no eulogy from me. There is the imperishable history of their privations and achievements upon the soil of Mexico. Go read it for yourself and judge of the duty it inculcates. It speaks far more eloquently for their cause than any language I can command.

I will detain the committee but for a few moments longer. I have shown that in the light of past legislation this bill ought to pass. I have shown that the soldiers who fought the Mexican war, when called on to volunteer, had the right to expect that when old and infirm the Government would give them the pension proposed by this bill, and that to refuse would be a repudiation of high moral obligation of the Government. I have shown that as a matter of sound policy the bill ought to pass. I have shown that the Government acquired 937,875 square miles of territory of incalculable wealth, which opened up a highway to the Pacific Ocean and which holds in its arms the gateway to the eastern continent, by the courage and valor of the soldiers of the Mexican war.

I have shown that as a matter of right and justice, as well as of national gratitude to the men who upheld the honor and the glory of the country this bill ought to pass. I have shown that such an act would strengthen the Government far more than costly and formidable fortifications, grand and magnificent navies, or a large and imposing regular army. I have said, and I repeat it, that such an act is in the interest of economy and that the people of the whole country would rejoice at the news of its passage. Several of the States, including Indiana, Missouri, and Kentucky, have requested their Representatives upon this floor to support the bill. It is no party measure. I have not stopped to inquire what effect it might have upon political parties. I implore the committee, in the name of the fallen heroes, as well as by the toils and sufferings of the survivors of the Mexican war, to pass this bill.

Sir, there are six thousand brave veterans far advanced down the declivity of life, now in penury and want, anxiously waiting to hear the glad news from Washington, the national capital, of the passage of this bill. Shall we cheer and gladden their hearts by a message over the wires that the nation remembers fondly their glorious deeds upon the bloody fields of Mexico and tenders its gratitude to them by the passage of this bill; or shall we blast and dissipate their fond expectations with the sad news that the nation has millions for subsidies to great and powerful corporations but nothing for her brave soldiers who

Bore their country's honors high,
Resolved to conquer or to die, and whose gallant deeds from Palo Alto to the final surrender of the city of Mexico "reflected a blaze of imperishable glory upon the American name?"

I do not know, Mr. Chairman, what course others may take, but I shall give my heart and vote to this measure, feeling confident that the honest and patriotic men whom I have the honor to represent upon this floor will approve of my actions.

If no other gentleman desires to speak at length upon the bill, I move that the committee proceed to consider the bill by sections.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by sections, and read the first section as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including militia and volunteers of the military and naval service of the United States, who served sixty days in the war of 1846 with Mexico, or in the Florida war or in the Black Hawk war thirty days, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said war, although their term of service may have been less than sixty days, and who shall subscribe an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and the surviving widows of such officers and enlisted men as were married prior to the discharge of such officers and enlisted men. Provided, That such widows shall not have remarried.

Mr. DURHAM. I would like to inquire of the gentleman who has charge of the bill why a difference is made between sixty days in the case of soldiers of the Mexican war and thirty days in the case of soldiers who served in the Florida war or the Black Hawk war.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. The difference is made simply because it is forty years since the Black Hawk war and only thirty years since the Mexican war; and the soldiers of the Black Hawk war are much older than those of the Mexican war.

Mr. DURHAM. I move to amend by striking out the word "sixty" where it occurs in the seventh line, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "thirty."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I will state that if that amendment is adopted, it will add about one thousand more to the list of pensioners.

The question being taken on Mr. DURHAM'S amendment, it was not agreed to, ayes 15, noes not counted.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 2. That this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 or more per month, nor to any person receiving a pension less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension now received and $8 per month. Pensions under this act shall be at the rate of $8 per month, except as herein provided when a person is receiving a pension of less than $8 per month, and shall be paid to the persons entitled thereto from and after the passage of this act, for and during the term of their natural lives.

SEC. 3. That before the name of any person shall be placed on the pension-roll under this act, proof shall be made, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that the applicant is entitled to a pension under the provisions of this act; and any person who shall falsely take any oath required to be taken under the provisions of this act shall be guilty of perjury; and the Secretary of the Interior shall cause to be stricken from the pension-roll the name of any person whenever it shall appear, by proof satisfactory to him, that such name was put upon such roll through false and fraudulent representations as to the right of such person to a pension under the provisions of this act. The loss of certificate shall not deprive the applicant of the benefits of this act, but other proof of services performed and of an honorable discharge shall be deemed sufficient.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the third section by striking out the word "shall" in the last line of the section, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "may;" so that it will read "may be deemed sufficient."

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

SEC. 4. That the provisions of sections 12 and 13 of the act entitled "An act supplementary to 'An act to grant pensions,'" passed July 4, 1864, and of sections 2, 3, and 4 of the act entitled "An act supplementary to several acts relating to pensions," approved June 6, 1866, shall be applicable to the pensions granted by this act; but no law now in existence which in any way conflicts with the provisions of this act shall be applicable to the survivors of the wars above mentioned, or be so construed as to deprive them of the benefits of this act.

Mr. KASSON. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if he has not made an error in referring to those pension acts, which are general laws, as I understand, of the dates of 1864 and 1866? If I recollect rightly, they are in the Revised Statutes; and the reference should be to the Revised Statutes. If I am not misinformed, that is a necessity arising from the revision of the statutes. The Revised Statutes repeal all laws which are revised in them.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. If the gentleman from Iowa will state the sections of the Revised Statutes to which he refers, I have no objection to making that amendment.

Mr. KASSON. I think in order to make the amendment it will be necessary that the sections of the Revised Statutes be examined by the committee or some one familiar with them. I know it is necessary that the reference should be to the Revised Statutes.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I will ask that by unanimous consent that change may be made.

Mr. KASSON. It is so important, I think, as to justify the passing over of the bill for the present.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I do not know, however, that the Revised Statutes repeal the old laws at all.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment proposed to the pending section the Clerk will report the succeeding one.

The Clerk read the next section, as follows:

SEC. 5. That this act shall not apply to persons under political disabilities.

Mr. REAGAN. I ask the gentleman from Alabama why this fifth section is put in the bill?

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. Because it was considered that a man laboring under political disabilities is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. REAGAN. I rose to an inquiry why this section was inserted in the bill. I am answered that it was because persons laboring under political disabilities were supposed not to be citizens. I am not satisfied with that answer. There are persons who for cause deemed sufficient by Congress are declared not entitled to certain of the privileges of citizens. But the number of those who have not been relieved from political disabilities is now very small; and the proportion of that small number who might be entitled to pensions under the provisions of this bill would certainly be very small indeed. It seems to me that this is an improper and unjust provision of the bill. I do not think that the gentleman's answer is correct that these persons are not citizens. I do believe they are citizens. They are merely deprived of certain privileges. But they pay their taxes. They help to support the Government. They rendered the services which are intended to be rewarded by this bill. This, it seems to me, is an unjust, unnatural, and odious discrimination, when twelve years have elapsed since the close of the war. And, believing so, I move to strike out that fifth section, and ask the sense of the committee upon it.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I am not informed as to the number of men who are now laboring under political disabilities. I do not suppose that those who would thereby be excluded from the provisions of this bill would exceed a dozen; and as soon as their disabilities are removed they will be entitled to pensions under this bill. We were careful to word that section so as whenever the disability is removed the persons who had labored under that disability would be entitled to a pension.

I assented, sir, to the insertion of that section, not because I approve of it, but because I believe that we could not pass the bill without it, and because I want the bill passed so as to give this pension to as many as we can, even though we do have to exclude some dozen men, who, I think, would themselves consent to their own exclusion rather than that the bill should fail.

Mr. REAGAN. I cannot think, Mr. Chairman, that the supposition that the striking out of this section will defeat the bill can be true. It is assumed that there cannot be more than half a dozen or at most a dozen men who are entitled to this pension, who would be excluded by that section. It seems to me, sir, that we have gone far enough with proscriptive legislation for the punishment of those persons who were engaged in the war, which has closed now nearly twelve years. It seems to me, sir, that the time has come when a feeling of conciliation and mutual respect, of mutual kindness, and, above all, a feeling of mutual justice should enter into our legislation. These persons have not been relieved of their political disabilities, probably simply because they have not asked to be relieved, or perhaps they were not persons of sufficient importance to be relieved. Yet, sir, these persons are to-day performing all the duties of citizenship; they are under the protection of the laws; they are restored to all their normal relations to the Government except alone that they cannot hold office. Now, sir, it seems to me that the time has come when we ought to be willing to let our legislation of this kind stand upon the broad principles of justice, and not carry into it those vindictive feelings which immediately followed the bitter and terrible war in which we were engaged. Sir, it is time to get out of it. And surely there can be nothing to render it necessary to exclude the few persons who might be excluded under this section.

It seems to me that a common feeling of fraternity and justice requires us to abolish all such discrimination and to avoid all vindictive and punitive legislation, which by this time ought to cease. I trust therefore that the section may be stricken out.

Mr. RUSK. I would like to say, for the benefit of the gentleman from Texas, that this section only reserves the rights of the invalid pensioners where their political disabilities have existed and have not been removed and they are not on the rolls. If this section be stricken out, it will put Jefferson Davis upon the rolls, and I desire to ask the gentleman if he wishes to put him on.

Mr. REAGAN. I will answer the question of the gentleman with pleasure. Jefferson Davis was a brave soldier. He participated in the battles of the war with Mexico, and he received one wound I know of. He shed his blood with the common cause and pays his taxes to support the Government; he behaves himself as a peaceable citizen, and I know of my own knowledge, that there is not a man in this broad land who is more earnestly anxious for complete reconciliation and for the cessation of all ill-feeling between the sections of the Union, or a man who would shed his blood more readily, if need be, to protect the Government, the laws, and the honor and rights of the country than Jefferson Davis; and I do not see why he should be excluded.

Mr. RUSK. He would be entitled to go on the pension-roll for the wounds he received, if it were not for his disability, and if this section is stricken out it removes that obstacle and would place him on the rolls. I am glad to hear the gentleman from Texas say that he desires to put him on the pension-roll. For one, I do not.

The question was upon agreeing to Mr. REAGAN'S amendment; and upon a division there were ayes 39, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to reserve the right to a vote on that amendment in the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman cannot do that, as the amendment was defeated.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I move that the committee rise and report the bill, with the amendment, to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, reported that pursuant to the order of the House the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the Union generally, and particularly the bill granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and the Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same, and had directed him to report the same to the House with an amendment and with a recommendation that it do pass.

The amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union was in line 15, section 3, to strike out the word "shall," and to insert in lieu thereof the word "may."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama. I now move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HEWITT, of Alabama, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF BROWNSVILLE AND GALVESTON.

Mr. REAGAN. The bill 3567 passed this morning was entitled a bill "to make the port of Brownsville, Texas, one of the ports to which appraised merchandise may be imported." I ask unanimous consent to amend the title so that it shall read: "to make the ports of Galveston and Brownsville, Texas, ports," &c.

There was no objection, and the amendment to the title was agreed to.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering the special order, the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. WILLIS in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

Mr. SINGLETON. If there is no desire on the part of the committee to hear the bill read in full, I move that the first reading be dispensed with.

No objection was made, and the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now proceed to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

Mr. KASSON. In view of the fact that we have dispensed with the first reading of the bill, I would be glad if the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] would state to the House what difference there is between this bill and the one which passed the House at its last session.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. Chairman, I do not take the floor to make a speech. I do not think the occasion demands it, and the state of my health would not admit of it. I only wish to claim the attention of the House for a few moments while I state the action of the Committee on Appropriations, the reasons for that action, and then make an explanation of some new provisions of the bill, which may be necessary for their proper understanding.

It will be remembered that at the last session of Congress we had this subject very fully discussed, and the views of members of the Committee on Appropriations and of members upon both sides of this House were fully made known. The bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations made large reductions in the items of expenditure for this branch of the service, and it was finally passed through this House with very little change.

When the bill reached the Senate that body made more than a hundred amendments to it, restoring it very much to what the corresponding bill was the year before. That action of the Senate, as members will recollect, brought about not only one but four committees of conference. Although the bill was reported at an early day in the session, it did not pass the two Houses and become a law until about the close of the session.

When the fourth committee of conference met it was agreed, in order that we might not stop the wheels of government, according to the familiar phrase, that we would divide the difference between the sums proposed by the two Houses. We did so, at the same time giving to the President of the United States large discretionary powers as to the diposition of the total amount appropriated. The chief grounds of objection on the part of the Senate to the bill as passed by this House was that it made changes in the general law on this subject, and they did not concede the power of this House, without the consent of the Senate, to change general laws by amendments to appropriation bills.

The bill now under consideration is to all intents and purposes the same as the bill that passed Congress at its last session. We have taken the text of that bill, and, after considering the recommendations of the Secretary of State, have made some few changes not affecting materially its general character. While the majority of the Committee on Appropriations are of opinion that considerable reductions might be made in the expenses of this branch of the service, it was not deemed prudent at this session to go into that question, as it was supposed the minds of members had not undergone any change, and that we would have the same contest to go through again as last year without reaching any important practical results. We shall have a new Congress after the 4th of March next, and as we have not time now to remodel and reconstruct this bill to meet the views of a majority of this House and insist upon these changes, it was deemed best to postpone this work until the new Congress came into power.

Mr. KASSON. Then I understand the gentleman to say that in this bill there are no changes of the law.

Mr. SINGLETON. There are none.

Mr. KASSON. Are there any additional consulates discontinued?

Mr. SINGLETON. I believe not. I will state, however, the few changes which have been made from the bill of last year and the reasons for them. The Secretary of State recommended that the chargé d'affaires for Denmark, Greece, Switzerland, Portugal, Paraguay, and Uraguay, now receiving salaries of $5,000 a year each, should be restored to their former status of ministers resident at a salary of $7,500 each. The bill which passed at the last session has worked very well, and the Committee on Appropriations, differing with the Secretary of State on that point, have not thought proper to make any change in that respect from the bill of last year.

If gentlemen will turn to line 54 of this bill they will find the following item:

> For contingent expenses of foreign intercourse proper, and of all the missions abroad, $85,000.

The amount appropriated for that purpose last year was $75,000. Upon consultation with the Secretary of State he thought that amount might not be sufficient, and recommended that it be increased to $100,000. After full consideration of the subject the committee thought proper to increase the amount to $85,000, or $10,000 more than the appropriation of last year.

Again, the Secretary of State recommended that the salaries of the consuls-general at Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, and Montreal, and the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Leipsic, Lyons, Manchester, Beirut, Belfast, Birmingham, Bradford, Chemnitz, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Fayal, Nuremberg, Leith, Naples, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and Tunstall be increased from $1,250 to $1,500 a year. Last year there was appropriated for that purpose the sum of $42,600, and the salaries of these officials were limited to $1,250 each.

After fuller consultation with the Secretary of State the committee did not deem it necessary to increase the salaries of all these officials. Indeed they came to the conclusion that the salaries of some of them might be reduced below that which they now receive. By way of meeting the views of the State Department it was agreed that the same amount should be appropriated for this purpose that was appropriated last year, $42,000, and that discretionary power should be given to the Secretary of State to regulate the pay of these different officials as he might deem best, none of them to receive more than $1,500 a year. The amount for this purpose, therefore, has not been increased. Some of them will have their salaries increased to $1,500, while the salaries of others will be reduced to less than $1,250.

On page 12 of the bill will be found this item:

For contingent expenses of United States consulates, such as stationery, bookcases, arms of the United States, seals, presses, and flags, rent, freight, postage, and other necessary miscellaneous matters, including loss by exchange, $115,000.

The Secretary of State asked that this appropriation be increased to $125,000. As all the accounts for last year have not yet come in, and the Secretary of State was unable to say what was the exact amount necessary for the past year, the committee deemed it proper to make the same appropriation for this purpose, $115,000, which it is believed will be ample.

Again, under the item for the salaries and expenses of the United States and Spanish claims commission, we appropriated last year $4,500 respectively for the pay of commissioner and of counsel. The Secretary of State recommended that the appropriation be reduced to $4,000 for each. After investigation the committee found that the gentlemen who were engaged in the work of this commission, both the commissioner and the attorney to the commission, are engaged in active practice, attending all the courts. Hence we considered $3,000 as ample pay for them; and this is the amount we have fixed in the bill. Some little change is made as to the messenger, and also in regard to contingent expenses of this commission, saving thereby on this item $3,512.

For the relief and protection of American seamen in foreign countries we propose in this bill an appropriation of $80,000. Last year we appropriated for this purpose only $70,000. But there has been an unusual number of disasters to our shipping in different portions of the world; and it is believed that more than $70,000 will be needed for this relief and protection of our seamen. The Secretary of State thought that $100,000 would not be too large a sum. But the accounts in this case, as in the other I have mentioned, have not yet come in, and hence the necessary expenditures for the present year are not definitely known. We think the amount appropriated will be sufficient.

Another provision of the present bill is the following:

To meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President, pursuant to requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $10,000.

The appropriation for this purpose last year was $20,000. The committee, however, believed upon investigation that $10,000 would be amply sufficient for this purpose, as only $1,800 was expended for the purpose last year.

I should have mentioned at a previous point in my remarks that the Secretary of State recommended a change in the appropriation for salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, commercial agents, and thirteen consular clerks, for which purpose we propose to appropriate in this bill $300,600. Last year we appropriated for this object $333,300, but the Secretary thought that we might dispense with the sum of $32,900. A corresponding reduction of that amount has been made in this item.

I believe I have now explained all the provisions that require explanation. We have not changed the grade of any of the United States officers abroad; and there is very little change indeed in the amounts proposed to be expended. In some few instances we have increased the amount, and in one instance, upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State, we have, as just stated, made a reduction of $32,900. Upon the whole, the reduction made by this bill on the amount appropriated last year is $28,000; and this reduction is made almost entirely upon the recommendation of the Secretary of State. There should be no controversy about this bill, and I hope there will be none, as it was reported by the unanimous consent of the committee, and to meet the well-known and determined purposes of the Senate not to allow a general law to be changed by amendments to an appropriation bill.

Mr. MONROE. I beg to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] whether any change has been made in the consulate at Goderich?

Mr. SINGLETON. No, sir; we have made no change as to the grade or pay of any consul throughout the whole bill.

I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. PHILLIPS.]

Mr. PHILLIPS, of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, ever since this session began there has been a disposition to effervesce the moment a question touching in the most remote degree the late presidential election came up. We are admonished by the belligerent spirit manifested by many on this floor that the political mind is in an unhealthy condition. Crude ideas of the powers of this House over the subject are entertained; theories hastily jumped at are wildly expressed; theories generally utterly at variance with our history and fundamental law. One of the political parties in the country, long out of power, but which has succeeded in gaining possession of one branch of Congress, makes haste to arrogate to it all the powers of Government, legislative, executive, and judicial. Even men whose whole lives have been devoted to rigid constructions of the Constitution startle us by seeming to keep in countenance schemes which do not find a particle of color in that document, theories obnoxious to its framers and diametrically opposed to our earlier, better history.

I do not hesitate to pronounce these mischievous and revolutionary sentiments. And so are all the plans for compromise, bargain, or adjustment, other than the plain and simple methods pointed out by the Constitution. Nor do I hold in much higher estimation the numerous propositions to remodel the Constitution or add to it an amendment to be hurriedly adopted as a temporary expedient or used to bridge a real or imaginary emergency. It is not necessary to assume that the Constitution is faultless. Our experience has demonstrated that there are several desirable modifications and a necessity for clearer definition of details, whether these can be adopted or not. Yet every man of sagacity must feel that to take such steps for a special purpose, to meet a special case, above all to intervene between the verdict of the people, expressed under the forms of Constitution and law, and the mere declaration of the result according to the mode prescribed under the existing Constitution, is obnoxious on principle and dangerous as a precedent. As a mere practical question, every man knows that it cannot be done in time, even if it were a proper thing to do. All such propositions, therefore, so far as they are designed to affect this case, are simply disturbing elements. They affect to admit that which it is not necessary to admit, and only add flames to that political excitement which it should be the aim of every partriotic citizen to discourage. Neither can amendments to the Constitution be wisely undertaken under circumstances and at a time when partisan interests and partisan bitterness must deny them that impartial consideration which alone can confer on them utility and crowning glory.

It is, therefore, an unhappy circumstance that makes it appear as if many of our public men had lost their balance or were endeavoring to feed themselves with ideas impregnated with anarchy and revolution. It has been the pride of our Government and the hope of the lovers of republicanism everywhere that we are not as the South American republics. Indeed, I cannot for one moment admit that there is even in this House a majority who will sustain any proposition to elect a President by any other means than the constitutional forms. These latter may not go into all the details we could wish, but their purpose is sufficiently clear to answer the necessity. A departure from them at such a time is simply revolution, and I will not believe that this House will present itself to the country in an attitude so humiliating until partisan folly leaves us no alternative.

If there is any tendency toward political disease of this sort among Representatives, how is it with the people? It is undoubtedly true that a profound interest is manifested on the subject in the press and throughout the country. It is not fair or true to assume that the thousand and one schemes and theories announced make any serious impression on the public mind. In fact, it may be safely believed that the stability of character and purpose which has been the great pride of our Government and our people rests, like a deep and mighty sea, beneath the light and frothy foam that fickle winds drive across its surface. The doctrinaire and the enthusiast are always on the skirmish line, and, whether their propositions be wise or otherwise, it is not safe to judge society by them. When we hear that a few of the lawyers of one city meet and speak and resolve that the times are "parlous" and that it is necessary for them to put their spoke in the wheel of Government, or that a few dozen of men calling themselves the business men of the country, and who are probably better politicians than business men, meet and resolve that "it is a crisis" and that they have a panacea for it, we are reminded of the convocation of nine tailors who began their resolutions, "We, the people of England;" and they also remind every thinking man that their studies in political science have not taught them the dangers of revolutionary innovation. Nor can it be admitted that the public mind is so diseased that it could tolerate the mere victory of party, no matter how illustrious the party might be, at the sacrifice of the stability of the Government or the public tranquillity. I do not deny that I should look upon the election of Mr. Tilden and the triumph of a reactionary party as a great calamity, but not half so great as the election of a President by fraud or revolutionary proceedings.

The facts of the case are plain and simple. While more than two candidates were in the field no third or fourth candidate received a single State or electoral vote. Hayes or Tilden received them all, and as the electoral vote cannot be evenly divided one of them was of course elected. If the electoral vote could have been, and had been, equally divided there would have been no election, and the election of President would have gone to the House. But one of them was elected under the forms of the Constitution.

It might have been desirable that the majority should be larger, but it was not at all necessary. If a close result is to invite and justify revolutionary proceedings there is an end of republican government. Does any one for an instant think that, if there had not been a democratic majority in this House, there would have been an attempt or even a thought of trying to create confusion and throw the election into the House of Representatives? Is there one man of intelligence who reveres the Constitution who believes that the House has the slightest authority for pretending to select a President when it is an indisputable and positive fact that one man was certainly elected?

We may dislike the machinery by which the result was determined in some States. We may have no faith in some of the State governments. We may even have a poor opinion of the people of some States. We did not make the latter, and it is doubtful if they would have been any better if we had. The State governments are supposed to have at least some powers reserved to them, and I am amazed at any one on the other side of the House for calling them in question. The world witnesses the extraordinary spectacle of a party, fresh from a great war and rebellion, into which they entered under an extreme view of State rights, clutching at the ghost of a coveted victory by sacrificing the last remnant of State rights, which no party has ever before dared to call in question. Do they object to reconstruction? Do they hold with Mr. O'Conor that when the Union Army marched on Richmond the Constitution was forever broken, or do they hold that all that has happened since has been a chapter of war and violence and intrigue expedient to gain time and power? I think not. I believe patriotic gentlemen on the other side of this Chamber who took the oath on this floor to support the Constitution meant honestly and honorably all they said. It behooves them to remember that, whatever faults reconstruction may have had or with whatever errors they may be inclined to charge it, but for reconstruction many of them would never have been here. Is it for them to break the pedestal on which they stand? Is it for them to benefit by just so much of it as may serve their party purposes? I believe they are wiser and shrewder men than to do that.

There are many now in our party who believed that when a State failed to maintain a government loyal to the Union, and went to war against it, there was of necessity an end of its powers as a State in the Union, and as it was an integral portion of the territory of the United States that it should be treated as territory, and, when it could safely be done, that a territorial government of limited powers be given it until there was sufficient evidence that it could come in as a peaceful, loyal Union State. That plan was not adopted. There was in the minds of a number a horror of losing sight of the idea of an existing autonomy of all the States. To get rid of the war, which was a hard, incontrovertible fact, a fiction was resorted to, and on this plan of reconstruction, the most generous and liberal to those States, they were admitted to full fellowship and power. For the wisdom of that plan posterity will judge us. They will judge us when passion and sentiment and partisan bitterness have all passed away. We look to you gentlemen of the reconstructed States for a vindication of the magnanimous policy that gave you your power. It is for you to show to your country and the world that our course was not a rash experiment, and that your acceptance of the situation was honest and made with an honorable intention to carry out all it involved, and not a treacherous temporary expedient to gain power the better to defeat the necessities and purposes of reconstruction.

There was a great question settled in the war, and a great plan for the future outlined in the generous scheme of reconstruction. It was not only that the "Union shall be preserved," and that the heresy that a State has a right to secede was forever trodden out by the iron heel of war. It was not only that slavery forever perished in the war that had been precipitated for its benefit. There was something even better than these, and made up partially of both—something, without which we could not have union or freedom, and without which there can be no peace, now or hereafter. The noblest, most useful, grandest gift of the republican party to the country it governed was a united civilization, for between the old and new systems there is an irrepressible and eternal conflict. We had two warring systems in the colonies and the States. It was not only freedom and slavery, but the attempt to plant the fangs of aristocracy deep in our social and political systems was sedulously made. The genius of John Locke furnished the scheme of aristocracy for the southern colonies. There were to be barons for the baronies, palatines for the palatinates. The names perished, but the thing remained. Aristocratic Europe was aghast at the calamities that befel the barons, and the flight of the unhappy palatines. Aristocracy on this continent then allied itself with slavery, for aristocracy has always drawn its luxury and pomp from the toil of unrequited labor.

There is a tenacity of grasp, I might almost say an immortality, in ideas. Look at the parallel case of religious dogma. Where Catholicism first touched the soil in East Canada, Maryland, the West India Islands, Mexico, and South America, it is there the dominant faith still. Where Episcopacy planted its foot, as in Virginia, it is still dominant. Where Presbyterianism or the various forms of Protestantism were planted they kept the first place, and where the Puritans with their hostility to the divine right of kings touched the coast of New England they took root and sent forth proselyting seeds to the ends of the earth.

And so it is with the aristocratic forms of society, where aristocracy was first established in this country even its vices seem enduring. It has undergone many vicissitudes, suffered many calamities, but still tries to struggle above them all. Even in the last session of the present Congress we heard of the "best blood" of the Carolinas and the "best blood" of Georgia, and it is a wonder we did not hear of the "best blood" of Virginia. Is it possible that there is noble and ignoble blood in these regions? Do they have blood aristocratic, and blood plebeian, and as many upper and lower sections of society as there are strata in a geological map? What a country for a genealogist. We could form some conception of such a class in the days when there were tories. We can even carry them down to the days of the federalists; yea, even in the vicissitudes of an uncertain generation, we can imagine them in the period of the fossil whig; but when they come to label themselves democracy, we are dumbfounded.

In the settlements of the war, and in the solemn compromises of reconstruction, in which immunity was granted and power restored, the following items constituted the letter and essence of the agreement: First, the perpetuity of the Union; second, the abolition of slavery; third, the perfect equality of the colored race before the law. That this should be faithfully carried out in every particular necessary to give it complete success were the terms on which those who had forfeited every right came back. How has the compact been observed? I need not tell you that there has been a constant effort to organize and build up a reactionary party in those States. The systems of education wisely devised by the republican party for the elevation of a race long enslaved have in nearly all of these States become a mere mockery and shadow of what they were. Bitter prejudice drew to its aid secret military organizations to threaten and overawe a poor and ignorant race. Elections, too, became a mockery. Whenever the machinery for controlling them passed into the hands of those who had not been the authors of the amendments to the Constitution, and who had merely accepted them as the price of restoration, States were carried by a process unknown to better regulated and more peaceable communities. In many cases these "elections" should not be called elections. They were mere armed revolutions. They indicate a spirit the existence of which is a constant menace to the rights of the people, the public safety, and the perpetuity of the Union.

It naturally occurs to every thoughtful American how far can we leave to States in such a semi-revolutionary condition the settlement of the gravest question on which the peace and existence of the Government depend. The larger number of States are in a happier condition. In these elections mean something. In a few instances, especially in one great city, the people have lost all confidence in the purity of the ballot-box; but these are rare and exceptional. In the great mass elections are rigidly canvassed, and the ballot is not an unfaithful exponent of the public will. Ballot-box stuffing and false returns would not be tolerated; while secret armed organizations to control and intimidate are unknown, and if attempted would bring on the offenders condign punishment. In these States elections are what they should be and must be to retain popular confidence.

What shall we say of many of the reconstructed States? They have scarcely thrown aside all the garments of war. The ideas of the reconstructed Republic are little understood and less liked. No new political issues have impressed them sufficiently to destroy all the heresies in regard to the right of States to secede or blot out the prejudices in which they were reared. In most of those States there are two evils of great magnitude which have tended to confusion and which are incident to the peculiar circumstances of society in the Southern States. On the one hand are nearly four millions of people fresh from a bondage compared with which the bondage of Israel in Egypt was tender mercy. They are guaranteed freedom, civil rights, and political power equal with the proudest in all these States. The republican party in the moment of victory might have confiscated the large landed estates of those who had aided the rebellion and divided them into small tracts for the liberated bondsmen, first as an act of stern justice, second as an act of policy, on the theory that the freedman to maintain his rights must be the owner of the soil on which he places his feet. A more generous policy was pursued to you, gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber. The wealth of your position had bestowed on you all the learning and ability of a privileged aristocratic class. Its refinements and luxuries gave you the influence and address which are the potent weapons of accomplished gentlemen. You had the pride of family, prized even by colored people in their esteem for late masters. These poor people were your tenants at will. Of the houses that sheltered them you could deprive them. The soil they tilled was yours. Their labor was worthless without your patronage. These were your eminent advantages and their unhappy misfortune.

The other chronic evil of the South is an idle white class; sometimes the poorer relatives of the great, always their attachés or hangers-on. In old slaveholding days they were ever ready to follow a panting fugitive slave with bloodhounds or back up the men they admired in all difficulties, warlike or political. When they worked it was in the supervising tasks incident to slavery. The overthrow of slavery left them without an occupation. Hard honest labor they were disinclined to perform. They clung to the skirts of the more intelligent, patriotic gentlemen of the Southern States. They were like the evil spirits invoked by the wizard, Michael Scott, whom he had to keep in work or they would drag him to the infernal regions.

Gentlemen of the reconstructed States, I do not underestimate your great difficulties. You were permitted to retain all your privileges on an implied pledge of the most sacred character. It was that you should, in accepting the situation, honestly maintain freedom, civil rights, and a perfect equality of political power with that colored race and join hands with us to build the new civilization from the lakes to the Gulf.

How have you kept these pledges? Have you seen to it that every facility to educate and raise them was afforded? Have you seen that there was no oppressive injustice or dictation from yourselves as landlords? Have you seen that no secret political or military organizations were formed hostile to their interests? Have you seen to it that the ballot-box was never outraged? Have you seen to it that no armed band threatened poor and helpless voters?

If you have done all this, you have done a noble work under great embarrassments. If you have not done it, if your acceptance has been evasion and your kind regard for these colored people the mercy of the "vulture to the leveret, the tiger to the fawn," for all these things you will be called into judgment. Your country will judge you. The world will judge you. "He who sitteth in the heavens" will judge you, and in the moment of temporary victory pause and recall the language of the most eminent statesman of Virginia. "I tremble for my country when I remember that God is just."

How many men in the country at large believe in the fairness and purity of the elections in Mississippi and Alabama, or rather how few have the slightest confidence in them. Louisiana, Florida, and both the Carolinas may be considered in an unsettled condition. Georgia under a fair, impartial system would probably be democratic; but I doubt if an unprejudiced man, at all competent to pass upon the question, or familiar with the character of the population or the statistics of the elections for the past ten years in all the others mentioned, believes that one of them, of its own free will, would have gone other than republican. I would quote from the report of the committee of last year, of which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. BOUTWELL] was chairman; but I do not wish at this time to aggravate the sensibilities of my hearers or excite fresh feeling by repeating its horrors. It is enough to quote from the report that the democracy of Mississippi "at last have gained supremacy in the State by acts of violence, fraud, and murder, fraught with more than all the horrors of open war, without its honor, dignity, generosity, or justice. The measures suggested as remedies are given, one of which is to deny a State in anarchy or controlled by bodies of armed men representation in Congress. Another is to remand States where such disorders exist to a territorial condition.

Of the election in that State last November I will give but one specimen. Our friend from the sixth district of Mississippi was elected to this Congress by 18,000 majority, as I have been informed. Last November he was defeated or, as he says, "counted out" by 5,000 majority. Is there not something astounding in such a change? Can it be accounted for on any reasonable hypothesis? Has not the thing been so much overdone as to startle us as to the meaning of what they call an election there? Is it not a revolution, varying only in its mode of operation from the revolution that sought to overthrow the Union? It has been stated on this floor on the evidence of General Sheridan that there were three thousand political murders in Louisiana, and that nearly that number of colored voters were slain.

Are we then to consider the region we tried to reconstruct in a state of anarchy? Shall we throw out the votes and reject the representation from Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, South Carolina, and shall we examine the vote of North Carolina?

And this brings us directly to the main question, what are the powers of Congress on the subject? Has either House or both the right to say that any portion of the vote of a State shall be accepted or rejected? Has Congress the right to act as a returning board to purge the vote of any or all States? Was this power conferred on it by the Constitution? Would it have been wise to so confer it?

In article 2 of the Constitution it is simply provided that "each State may appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct," such electors as it is entitled to. In the same article Congress is given the power to determine the time when the electors shall be chosen and the day on which they shall cast their votes, and these for an obvious reason, and that time and that place are elements in the legality of such electoral vote. Both Houses are to be present when the President of the Senate, who is the custodian of the votes, shall open the votes and count them, as witnesses, and no other powers are given them over the electoral vote or over the question, unless there is a tie or no one has a majority.

The language of the Constitution is therefore plain. As the Constitution originally stood the electors made a list of the votes and sent it with a certificate to the President of the Senate who was the custodian of the returns.

The President of the Senate shall in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted.

As it now stands in article 12, the electors meet in their respective States and ballot for President and Vice-President. They make distinct lists of persons voted for by the electors, but are not required to show the State vote. They certify these distinct lists and signing them send them to the President of the Senate, who is the custodian; and in the same manner as it originally stood the President of the Senate, in the presence of the Senate and House of Representatives, opens all the certificates and the votes are then counted. Does the President of the Senate open and does some one else count? Certainly not. There may be tellers, but they have certainly no judicial functions, whether he has or not. If there is any doubt on that point the early practice ought to determine it.

In September, 1787, the Constitution was submitted to the Legislatures of the several States for adoption, and among others the following resolution was adopted by the convention:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this convention that, as soon as the conventions of nine States shall have ratified this Constitution, the United States in Congress assembled should fix a day on which electors should be appointed by the States which shall have ratified the same, and a day on which the electors should assemble to vote for the President, and the time and place for commencing proceeding under the Constitution. That after such publication the electors should be appointed and the Senators and Representatives elected; that the electors should meet on the day fixed for the election of the President, and should transmit their votes—certified, signed, sealed, and directed as the Constitution requires—to the Secretary of the United States in Congress assembled; that the Senators and Representatives should convene at the time and place assigned; that the Senators should appoint a President of the Senate for the sole purpose of receiving, opening, and counting the votes for President; and that after he shall be chosen the Congress, together with the President, should without delay proceed to execute this Constitution.

The above is no carelessly worded resolution, but attests the precision and skill of Franklin, Hamilton, and Madison.

On the 6th of April, 1789, Congress having assembled under the Constitution, ordered "That Mr. Ellsworth inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is formed; that a President is elected for the sole purpose of opening the certificates and counting the votes of the electors of the several States in the choice of a President and Vice-President of the United States, and that the Senate is now ready in the Senate Chamber to proceed, in the presence of the House, to discharge that duty, and that the Senate have appointed one of their members to sit at the Clerk's table to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared, submitting it to the wisdom of the House to appoint one or more of their number for the like purpose," who reported that he "had delivered the message." A message was received from the House, as follows:

Mr. President, I am directed by the House of Representatives to inform the Senate that the House is ready forthwith to meet the Senate, to attend the opening and counting of the votes of the electors of the President and Vice-President of the United States.

John Langdon was duly elected by the Senate as President of the Senate, and the record declares:

MONDAY, April 6, 1789.

The President of the Senate, elected for the purpose of counting the votes, declared to the Senate that the Senate and House of Representatives had met, and that he, in their presence, had opened and counted the votes for the electors for President and Vice-President of the United States; whereby it appears that George Washington was unanimously elected President.

The record shows that of the thirteen Colonies ten had voted, namely, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, South Carolina, and Georgia. Sixty-nine electoral votes were cast. It will be noticed that New York had ratified the Constitution on the 26th of July, 1788, nine months before, but had no electoral vote there. North Carolina did not ratify the Constitution until seven months after this election, on the 21st of November, 1789, and Rhode Island not until May 29, 1790.

It will thus be seen that these men, who were the framers of the Constitution, conferred all power of opening, counting, and declaring the vote on the President of the Senate. The two Houses were merely the witnesses to give force and dignity to the event. The tellers were only the recording witnesses for that purpose, as the President of the Senate declared the vote.

At the second election of Washington a joint resolution of both Houses was adopted, as follows:

That the two Houses shall assemble in the Senate Chamber on Wednesday next at twelve o'clock; that one teller shall be appointed on the part of the Senate to make a list of the votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Resolutions nearly the same, word for word, were adopted from the first elections until a very recent period. At the first election of Jefferson, when he and Aaron Burr had seventy-three votes each, the following words were interpolated in the resolutions: "And if it shall appear that a choice hath been made agreeably to the Constitution." That election forced the amendment of the Constitution by which the President and Vice-President should be voted for separately, instead of taking the second on the list for Vice-President. Jefferson and Burr had the same vote, not that the people intended to elect Burr, but because the design was to elect Jefferson President and Burr Vice-President. The elder Adams at that election had sixty-five votes, and Mr. Pinckney sixty-four, which shows that the federalists managed it better by keeping Mr. Pinckney one vote behind Mr. Adams. At the opening of the electoral votes on that occasion, the Vice-President, who was President of the Senate, was Thomas Jefferson, himself the candidate for the Presidency. With a feeling of delicacy he opened the sealed envelopes and handed them to the tellers to count, although the resolution under which he acted, and the Constitution, made it simply his work. The tellers in that matter were his assistants.

On that occasion, and the only other occasion when the election went to the House, the dangers of the system presented themselves. No one doubted for a moment that the people intended to elect Thomas Jefferson President; and yet, as the Constitution then stood, the election was thrown into the House, the House showed what kind of an electoral college it was capable of making. On the 11th of February, 1801, it voted nineteen times, and Jefferson, who had carried 73 out of 138 electoral votes, got but eight States; nine were necessary to a choice. One whole week was spent in balloting before Jefferson was elected. It is not for us to listen to or believe all the current stories rife at that time in the public mind of intrigue, bargain, or sale. I would only refer to a speech of Mr. Bayard, of Delaware, made in February, 1802, to be found on page 417 of Debates on the Judiciary. It exposed the system of electing by the House and the House itself to severe criticism. And here let us admire the good features of the electoral system. There is no national electoral college; no body to assemble in Washington to vote for President; no body possessed of a discretionary power to reverse the decree of the people; no body to be tempted by the eminent places of the Government, where a few votes or one vote might change the result.

The electoral college is purely in and for the State. The law of Congress designates when they shall be elected and when they shall meet. The Constitution fixes the representation. It provides that one copy of the returns shall be sent to the President of the Senate. So much importance is attached to these returns that by the act of 1792 it was provided that other two copies should be made. One goes to the nearest judge, to be held by him as security for their preservation, and besides the copy sent by mail one is sent by special messenger, both to the President of the Senate. The messenger has no authority save to bring the returns, which are sealed, in his possession. The President of the Senate receives the certificate of the State electoral college. He is the custodian. In case both the copy from the messenger and by mail are lost or not received by the first Wednesday of January, the Secretary of State sends a messenger for the copy in the hands of the judge.

I have said that there was no perceptible change in form of the joint resolution adopted by both Houses for counting the electoral vote until a very recent period. That period was the second election of Mr. Lincoln. At that time, in the Senate, February 6, 1865, Hon. Lyman Trumbull, then a Senator of the United States, reported the joint rule the first part of which reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring therein,) That the following be added to the joint rules of the two Houses, namely: "The two Houses shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of one o'clock, p. m., on the second Wednesday in February next succeeding the meeting of the electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; one teller shall be appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, the certificates of the electoral votes, and said tellers having read the same in the presence of the two Houses then assembled, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates, and the votes having been counted the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, and the names of the persons, if any, elected, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses."

It will be at once seen that there is a very remarkable change of form, and one interfering with the functions of the President of the Senate. Formerly tellers had been appointed, and on many occasions the President of the Senate handed them the certificates to count. This resolution conferred on them the power from Congress. When the portion I have quoted was read, Mr. Trumbull said, (page 608, volume 54, Congressional Globe:)

That is the usual form, as far as I have read, of the resolutions heretofore adopted. The committee have proceeded further to provide for a contingency.

Let us see whether it was the usual form. It is singular that Mr. Trumbull was also chairman of the committee that reported the resolution at the first election of Mr. Lincoln. That resolution was in the usual form adopted since the second election, and reads:

Resolved, That the two Houses will assemble in the Chamber of the House of Representatives on Wednesday, the 13th day of February, 1861, at twelve o'clock, and the President of the Senate shall be the presiding officer; that one teller shall be appointed on the part of the Senate and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to make a list of votes as they shall be declared; that the result shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall announce the state of the vote, and the persons elected, to the two Houses assembled as aforesaid, which shall be deemed a declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, shall be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

As a matter of fact, the precise mode of counting the vote has varied. At first, under resolutions very carefully framed by the authors of the Constitution, the President of the Senate was the sole actor in counting the vote. Afterward a number of the Vice-Presidents were either candidates for re-election or candidates for the Presidency, and as a question of delicacy they handed the returns, when they opened the certificates in their possession, to the tellers. The functions of the tellers, however, have always been purely those of assistants to the President of the Senate. The function of counting may be said to have been always purely ministerial. If any function of a judicial character was vested anywhere, it was, of course, in the President of the Senate. There is a natural repugnance to putting into the hands of one man the power to settle a great question, and yet it is clearly certain, by the language of the Constitution and of the first resolution, and, above all, by the debates in the old constitutional convention, as recorded in the Madison Papers, that there was a fixed purpose that Congress should have no control over the presidential election until the President of the Senate declared that there was no election under the terms of the Constitution.

The mode of electing a President was one of the vexed questions of that old constitutional convention. None of the colonies when they became States wished its influence weakened or destroyed. There were two parties then as now, a national party and a State-rights party. The former wished a National Government, entirely distinct from and independent of the States and the President elected either by Congress or the people directly; the latter party wished the Chief Magistrate selected by the States, as such. So intense was the feeling on this subject that at one time it threatened to destroy all hope of uniting on a form of government. Neither side succeeded, or, rather, the result was a compromise. The electors for the districts represented the people, the senatorial electors the States, and yet the electors might be voted for by the people, elected by the Legislature, or appointed by the governor under authority of law. The electoral colleges were State colleges. All supposed corrupting influences were avoided. The steps taken to have the electoral vote polled and sent were supposed to be taken with great care. The President of the Senate received, opened, and counted the vote, and his declaration of the result was held as final and sufficient. Counting or rejecting the votes of States was a contingency never contemplated and for which of course there was no provision. It was never intended that Congress should make itself a returning board to convass a State election, and determine which States should or should not be counted, because it was foreseen that, if they did it would not be long before the congressional machinery would elect all Presidents. Some little discretion was undoubtedly understood to vest in the President of the Senate. As a matter of course he would not receive returns from everybody. He must be satisfied they were the genuine returns. If he was assisted by tellers he never asked them and they never asked him whether the package he handed them as the vote of a certain State was such a vote or not. Their acts were plain and simple.

Neither is there a word to countenance the idea of a joint convention with legislative and judicial powers "in presence of the Senate and House of Representatives." Both bodies together and yet both bodies distinct. The disposition to convert the witness into a judge was to be expected. The tendency in that direction is very strong. If the Constitution conferred the necessary power on the President of the Senate, it did not confer it on the House. Shall the witness called in first raise a question and then decide upon it? Is it safe to give Congress the power of receiving or rejecting the votes of States? Is it necessary that it should furnish a law or machinery to this end? Is doing this so inevitable that the power to "make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers" confers it on Congress. If we accept that claim in its broadest sense there is nothing which Congress may not do.

I am not insensible to a necessity which may arise calling for congressional interference. I am equally impressed with the danger of innovations which may lead the way to a complete overthrow of the old system. I do not know that precedents are worth much in the face of constitutional provision, yet let us beware of the precedents we make.

What are the precedents made? In 1821 Mr. Livermore, of New Hampshire, objected to the vote of Missouri because Missouri was not a State in the Union. The Houses separated and a vote to count the vote of the State of Missouri was laid on the table. A resolution had been adopted that if the counting or omitting to count the vote of the State of Missouri would not change the result it should be announced: "With the vote of the State of Missouri, so much, without the vote of the State of Missouri, so much," in either event ——— is elected President.

In February, 1813, when Mr. Monroe was elected President, Mr. Taylor, a member from New York, objected because "the votes of the electors of the State of Indiana for President and Vice-President had been given previous to the admission of the State into the Union." When the Houses separated they promptly voted to count Indiana, and the vote is registered like the other States.

In February, 1837, objection was made to the State of Michigan, and a resolution to announce the vote as in the case of Missouri was agreed to in joint resolution before the two Houses met. The President of the Senate declared the result: "With the vote of Michigan Martin Van Buren has 170 votes; without it, 167;" and as 148 was a majority he was elected President.

At the election February, 1837, the question of the ineligibility of electors came up. From the resolution of Mr. Grundy and the other records of the transactions it appears that the second section of the second article was supposed not to have been very rigidly observed. From the report made by Mr. Grundy to the Senate it appears that there were five cases at that election of electors who were deputy postmasters or other Federal officers. We quote from it:

What ought to be done with them, and whether any and what provision ought to be made for securing the faithful observance in future of that section of the Constitution.

Also:

The committee cannot adopt the opinion entertained by some that a single illegal vote would vitiate the whole electoral vote of the college of electors in which it was given, particularly in cases when the vote of the whole college has been given for the same person.

And the following:

Should a case occur in which it became necessary to ascertain and determine the qualifications of electors of President and Vice-President of the United States, the important question would be presented, what tribunal would, under the Constitution, be competent to decide? Whether the respective colleges of electors in the different States should decide upon the qualifications of their own members, or Congress should exercise the power, is a question which the committee are of opinion ought to be settled by a permanent provision on the subject.

It was not permanently settled, however. Constitutional amendments relating to the election of President have been found difficult to obtain. The same difficulties that existed during the first convention exist still. In both cases when the election went to the House it was followed by popular clamor for amendments to the Constitution. In the first instance, when it was merely on voting on President and Vice-President separately, it was easily obtained, but when it touched the essential points the amendment was lost.

At the election of Mr. Buchanan, February, 1857, after the President pro tempore had declared the result, Mr. Humphrey Marshall, a member of the House, raised the question "as to the right of the President of the Senate pro tempore to determine whether or not the State of Wisconsin had cast a vote that could be counted." He had counted it on his own volition, and having declared the result, adjourned the meeting of the two Houses.

The Houses separated. The tellers reported to them that the electors, instead of meeting on the 3d of December, the day fixed by law under provision of the Constitution, they met and cast their vote on the 4th, the day after. On this report of the tellers no action was taken, the Senate evidently being disinclined to take action as to the powers of the President of the Senate. This, too, was in a case of violation of act of Congress on one of the two only points on which Congress expressly has power under the Constitution: the one to fix the day for the election of electors, the other that they fix the day on which they shall meet and cast their vote.

It was not until the second election of Mr. Lincoln occurred that graver questions arose. War was still raging. Should States at war be permitted to vote, or should the States under control of the Federal armies, or Government, in process of reconstruction, be permitted to vote. Under these circumstances legislation to prevent the counting of such votes, or of rejecting the vote of any State, was for the first time undertaken, and the twenty-second joint rule was also adopted.

I cannot conceive that any statesman should take any other view of many of the provisions of the twenty-second joint rule save as necessary war measures. Of the necessity and absolute force of such action under such circumstances no question can be had, yet it was not done under any constitutional provision. When the imperative causes for such action are removed, are we to determine that they shall enter into future presidential elections? Was this the design or expectation, or are we warranted in adding this to the powers of Congress? The most objectionable feature of the twenty-second joint rule, as it stood, was that it permitted one House of Congress to disfranchise a State. If we are to adopt legislation to meet difficulties, real or imaginary, no State should be deprived of the power of voting but by the concurrent action of both Houses. On this very point the ablest democratic Senators were eloquent last session.

It will be observed that the presidential elector is one of the few officers whose eligibility there is no tribunal to inquire into. The right of every other person to the position he claims may be judicially determined. It is clearly a State office. "Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct." The Legislature may elect them. They may authorize the governor to appoint them. The law of the State has entire control of their mode of appointment. Their vote is sealed, but that merely refers to being put in a sealed package. No appendage of State seals is required. If present they are surplusage, merely for better identification.

I think there is but one course to pursue in this presidential matter, to go straight ahead under the forms of the Constitution. The two Houses are to be present when the officer who has the authority under the Constitution opens the certificates, counts the votes, and declares the result. They do not meet to make motions, offer resolutions, or vote. They do not meet to determine that the President of the Senate shall not do that which the Constitution has said he shall do. Does the withdrawal of each body to its own chamber to vote give either House any more power than both have jointly to enact a law? Is there a single matter in legislation which they can determine separately? Has the House judicial powers on any subject, or has the Senate on counting the electoral vote? These are questions for us to ponder and answer.

I think it must be admitted that to give Congress the power to fill up by legislation the supposed gaps in the Constitution, and in doing so to add to its own powers in electing a President, is a matter of questionable expediency. Where is it to end? The ancient landmarks may not be all we could wish them, but where is to be our safe anchorage when we have swept them away? In the interests of a quiet and peaceable adjustment of this question we might consent to yield anything not fundamental. I have no desire to be captious or hang on mere technicalities. If, under the Constitution, we have the power to determine anything, let us do it in a spirit rising above all party or its interests and above the claims of all candidates; yet, before we embark on such a course let us think of the difficulty of harmonizing legislation at such a time. Compromise, always of questionable utility, never had such a difficult task before it.

Are the supposed difficulties really entitled to the great interest they have aroused? I must confess I cannot dismiss the idea from my mind that a large portion of excitement and disturbance is caused by those who expect to divert attention from the only legitimate and constitutional modes of settling the question. They wish to drive Congress to some new and unauthorized mode for the sake of peace. Such proposals are the only things that can disturb the public tranquillity. Those who resort to them ought to receive the condemnation of all good citizens. Nor is there anything necessarily startling in the situation. One majority is, to all intents and purposes, as good as fifty. Nor can there be any serious doubt as to which are the State returns. It is in some respects new in the aspects it presents, and yet the crowning test to our institutions. Must close elections be followed by intrigue and violence to change the result? Does any man for a moment suppose that a scheme so monstrous as the attempt to defeat the fair and unmistakable election in Oregon on a mere technicality could be for one moment tolerated by the American people, even if the technicality had, what it has not, the slightest color of law?

The question as to whether we should allow such of the reconstructed States, recently in war, and who do not furnish us the evidence that they are able as yet to conduct fair and peaceable elections, to vote, is one pregnant with the most important issues. Must we forever be kept in this condition of half war, half peace? Shall we permit wholesale fraud and murder to elect a President? or, having admitted them, shall we accept such machinery as these States present to us, and count the vote of Vermont side by side with the vote of Mississippi?

What are we to think of a great party like the democratic party resorting to turbulent means from a fear that they are beaten? How questionable and unpatriotic to call popular assemblages to pass on the situation. What shall the democratic convention of Indiana do? Are they not satisfied with the constitutional machinery that has elected our Presidents since the days of Washington? Is the design to browbeat or threaten? The will of the people is law, but in our American system its only force lies through forms; for nothing is law, or can have the sancity thereof, save the will of the people legitimately expressed. The only turbulent element is in such movements. Will the shrewd democratic leaders countenance such a scheme in the vain hope of a temporary success?

I do not wish to hear any of the insane talk of fixed ammunition and thousands of muskets in the hands of mobs to intimidate or assail our constitutional authorities. All such rodomontade only exposes those who use it to ridicule. Nor do I for a moment fear that armies will be lawlessly organized to march on Washington, prepared and preparing for disturbances. If such talk for a moment disturbs the public mind, it is at once tranquilized by the reflection that we have a man at the helm. No weak, vacillating old man is declaring he has no power to crush conspiracy and rebellion, and weeping himself out of the Presidency. I do not rise here as the special eulogist of the President, but I do not hesitate to declare him among the best of our Presidents. Vainly shall conspirators seek to weaken his influence. Cruelly assailed, he has modestly withheld just, but possibly undignified vindication. For long months remorselessly pursued by men, many of whom were recently in arms against him, and who had shared his unparalleled magnanimity when, at the head of a great army, flushed with victory, his only thought was—

> To soothe and save
> The feelings of the conquered brave.

Misrepresented and hounded by partisan committees, his character comes out of the ordeal unspotted. He is charged with Cæsarism, and events prove the charge false. He is charged with conspiring to name his successor so that his dynasty might be continued, and as events prove that to be false he is charged with selfish indifference as to the candidates of his own party. He is charged with sending troops into the reconstructed States, and yet he never sent them save under the strict forms of the Constitution and law. Were they asked for needlessly? Let Hamburgh and kindred horrors answer. Something was due the sanctity of law, something to the blood of our slaughtered countrymen.

Yes, we will have peace. The President the people have elected under the prescribed forms will be quietly inaugurated. We have proven to the world that rebellion could not destroy this Republic, and we will now prove that intrigue cannot accomplish what war failed to do. The forms by which we have maintained our Government are sacred, and rest under the ægis of the Constitution. Behind it stands the American people, and as they have never permitted an armed enemy to crush, so will they never permit bargain to compromise or treason to tarnish.

Mr. SINGLETON. I move that the committee rise, with a view of limiting general discussion hereafter to five minutes.

PRODUCTION OF TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES.

Mr. MORTON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections relating to the production of telegraphic dispatches.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections January 3:

Resolved, That William M. Turner is in duty bound under his oath to answer the questions that have been propounded to him as above stated, and that he cannot excuse himself from answering the same by reason of his official connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company as the manager of their office at Jacksonville, Oregon.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the testimony had better be read.

Mr. MORTON. I ask to have the whole report read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The whole report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by resolution of the Senate to inquire into the facts attending the casting of the electoral vote of the State of Oregon, beg leave to report to the Senate:

That one William M. Turner was called as a witness by the said committee, and, after having been duly sworn, had the following questions propounded to him, and made the following answers thereto:

Question, (by the chairman.) Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had asked to have that canvass withheld until he could get there?

Answer. I cannot answer that question.

Q. Have you any knowledge on that subject?

A. No, sir; nothing that could be made public.

Q. Explain what you mean by that.

A. Our knowledge on political subjects and all others, of course, has to be very sacred. It would be a violation of the law of the State to divulge anything that passes over the telegraphic wires and also a violation of the rules of the company.

Q. I propose to ask the witness the question if he knows of any dispatch passing through that office, on the part of Mr. Patrick or any one else, asking that that canvass be deferred until he could get there.

A. I ask to be excused from answering that question.

Q. You decline to answer?

A. I must decline.

Q. Upon the ground before stated?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you cannot divulge anything passing on the wires?

A. I cannot do it.

Q. What do you know, if anything, in regard to $8,000 being transferred from New York to Salem or to Portland at any time after the election in November and up to the time that the electors cast their votes?

The WITNESS. Transferred in what manner?

The CHAIRMAN. What do you know about money being sent from New York or persons there being authorized to draw for $8,000?

A. I do not know anything with regard to the transfer of any money that would be a public matter. We have a great deal of business of that kind going through the office, and as a matter of course it only concerns those who are interested.

Q. Do you know of any dispatch being sent to Salem or to Portland from New York authorizing any person there to draw for $8,000?

A. I must decline to answer that.

Q. Do you know of any dispatch having been sent by Charles Dimond, or a man named Dimond, in New York, to Ladd & Bush, in Salem, in regard to $8,000 or any sum of money?

A. I cannot answer.

Q. Do you mean to say that you cannot answer or that you decline to answer?

A. I decline.

Q. You decline to answer?

A. I decline to answer any question touching anything that passes over the telegraph wires.

Q. Did you simply say that you decline to answer or do you mean to say that there was no such dispatch?

A. I decline to answer questions of that character.

* * * * * * *

Q. Now I propose to ask this witness the question directly, if there was not a dispatch passing through that office from Charles Dimond to Ladd & Tilton, in Portland, authorizing them to draw for $8,000?

A. I must be excused from answering any questions of that character.

Q. I put this as occurring subsequent to the 25th of November and before the first Wednesday in December.

A. I decline answering any questions, as I remarked, touching the business over the wires.

Q. I ask if you know anything in regard to another sum of $17,000 that was authorized in New York to be drawn by Ladd & Tilton in Portland subsequent to the presidential election?

A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it.

Q. You do not then decline to answer that on this ground?

A. I decline on the same ground.

The committee have been informed that it is important to have the witness answer these questions, as the answers may be material in the investigation of the matter intrusted to the committee, and submit to the Senate the following resolution.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, I hope this resolution will be adopted. I think that there is no reason why telegraphic communications should not be made public when justice demands that it should be done. I see nothing of privacy about them which should prevent their disclosure. It is a well-known principle of law that written communications, however confidential they may be, can be required to be produced in a judicial tribunal when it is necessary for the purposes of justice that they should be disclosed. Certainly, there is nothing more sacred in a telegraphic communication than there is in a confidential letter written by one person to another.

There is another reason why the telegraphic communications referred to in the resolution should be made public. I do not propose to discuss it however at this time, nor do I care about discussing the question at length; I do desire, however, that this witness shall be compelled to answer the questions that have been put to him. He certainly has disclosed something. He has certainly been leaky, although a telegraphic operator. He has communicated unquestionably something about dispatches that have passed over the wires, and I desire that he shall be compelled to disclose the whole of that communication, for he tells about a telegraphic dispatch which has passed from one person to another and then shrugs his shoulders as much as to say "I know a great deal, but I cannot and will not disclose it because it is sacred." I want that witness to be brought before the committee and compelled to testify all he knows about it, for I am very confident that no communication that passed over the wires in relation to political events that were transpiring at Salem at that time will show that anything wrongful or anything improper was done. I am very confident in what I say now because I was at Salem at the time and I know most of the events that transpired there in connection with the counting of the electoral vote of Oregon. I speak not, it is true, as one having knowledge of the matter, but I think if any improper telegram had been sent from one of these individuals who is mentioned to another, I should have known something about it. Be that as it may, I am confident that nothing improper will be disclosed when these telegrams are produced if this witness is compelled to testify as he ought to be compelled to do.

Not only am I satisfied that no telegrams that passed over the wires to Oregon or passed from Oregon to New York will declare anything improper or unlawful, but I am also well satisfied that upon the examination which is now taking place, and which no doubt will be prosecuted to the fullest extent, nothing improper will be shown by any witness if he testifies to the truth, as I have no doubt he will. Not a dollar of money was expended improperly or in any other way than was right and lawful. So much for that.

I said I was present at Salem at the time that most of the transaction took place in relation to the canvass of the vote for presidential electors in Oregon. I do not propose to discuss these matters now, but I will say here that I was very much astonished at the vituperative assault made by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] yesterday upon the governor of Oregon, which was unexpected to me, and, from the character of that gentleman, I confess that I was not a little surprised at it. Why he took the occasion to assault the governor on the floor of the Senate, when he knew that that gentleman was present and could not reply, I am at a loss to understand. If he had read the reasons the governor gave for his decision, I am sure he would have found the case altogether different from what he supposed and he would not have abused and vilified him in the way he did.

It is sufficient for me to say that I do not intend to argue this question now, but when the committee shall have made their report I trust I shall be able to give reasons to show that the Senator from Iowa is mistaken in many of his facts, that he is greatly mistaken in the law, that he is very much mistaken in the duties of an executive of a State. I know he is. I admit his intelligence and his ability, and yet I have heard arguments on this question by gentlemen quite as intelligent and quite as gifted as he, and I am sure that he is in error in his law. But, as I have said, I am not going to discuss the question now; I simply rose to say that I regret that he made that vituperative assault upon the governor when he knew that he could not make a reply. I know that many of the most learned and gifted lawyers in the United States have expressed opinions diametrically opposed to that of the Senator. Why, when there may be a difference of opinion as to the law, the Senator from Iowa should have taken occasion to abuse one who cannot reply, I leave to himself to say. I conceive that it is simply my duty to say this in defense of one who cannot now speak for himself on this floor. I will say, however, this much: the governor who was so abused, so vilified yesterday, has been twice elected by the people of Oregon the governor of that State; he was once elected a member of the national House of Representatives; he has been many times elected to the Legislative Assembly of Oregon; and he has been chosen as the representative of that State to occupy the seat that I now hold when I shall go hence. I say this much of the governor of Oregon, and I further say that in everything that becomes a man of honor, a man of principle, he is the peer of the Senator from Iowa, and I admit that that is exalted praise indeed. I have said this much as a duty to that State which I in part represent on this floor and to repel assaults against its governor.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to say one word. I am sure my good friend the Senator from Oregon quite misunderstood me and quite misrepresents me, of course not intentionally. It was the farthest from my point to either abuse or vilify any person. I am not in the habit of doing that. I, accepting the facts as I understood them, stated my conclusion of the law bearing upon them. If the facts shall be otherwise than I have understood them, of course my conclusions may be wrong; but accepting it as true that this vote had been returned as I stated, accepting it as true that the powers of the executive of that State were ministerial purely, accepting it as true that he had none, the least, judicial power to investigate or determine the thing, that he had nothing to do except to see that the vote was as returned by the several counties and that then his simple duty was to give the certificate to the person who seemed to have the highest number of votes—that being my view and that being my understanding of the facts, and it being my opinion also that he had no more power to give the certificate to a man who got less than a majority there than he had to give it to the man who was not a candidate at all, I took the occasion to express my opinion of an executive that would do it, and that opinion is unchanged if the facts are as I stated.

I say that there is too much due to the quiet and the rest and the peace and the good order of this Government to have all made unrest and disquiet by a disregard of law, the facts being as I have supposed. I said so of a public official. I said so of a person who had a public trust to execute. I said so of a person who had it in his hands either to assist to lead the people of this country into quiet ways and peaceful methods, or to increase the unrest and disquiet and the derangement of the public and business interests. I felt I was justified in doing so, and I take no word back.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, I said that the Senator from Iowa was mistaken in his law, and he certainly is. If he had, before denouncing the governor, but read his executive decision, he would have seen that he is fortified by decisions of the supreme court of Indiana, of the supreme court of Maryland, and other States, and by the decision of the supreme court of Oregon in analogous cases, that it is the duty of the governor, as the conservator of the constitution, to decide questions of that kind when they are brought before him. I say that the governor is fortified by the decision of the supreme court of Oregon upon that question. I do not propose, as I said a while ago, to discuss the question now; I shall do so at the proper time; but I simply say that where there is a difference of opinion between gentlemen, when one gives his reasons for a decision and another dissents, the case does not call for vituperation and abuse. That is all that I care about saying now. Vilification convinces no one; vituperative language does not make converts; and when gentlemen honestly differ upon a grave construction of law, I say again that such language as was used here yesterday is not proper, whether the Senator takes it back or not.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to say one thing more. I am familiar with the Indiana cases. Those cases have all been cited here. I am familiar also with the opinion that was given from Cincinnati to this governor on this question. I am familiar with the differences that have obtained between the supreme courts of the different States as to what is the effect of a vote where the party receiving a majority is ineligible; but the difficulty is this, and my friend seems to overlook it: I undertake to say that you cannot find a decision in all this broad land or the world over that holds that an executive officer has any right to determine that question.

Mr. KELLY. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WRIGHT. I undertake to say that the decisions as made refer to the action of judicial tribunals when they come to a contest brought before them according to legal methods, and that no decision can be found either in Oregon or any place else that says that a mere ministerial officer has any right to do anything with that question. It was that view of it which I was discussing. If Governor Grover had had judicial powers, if he had had any right to investigate or determine this question, then I can see that men might differ in opinion by possibility, and yet how I can hardly conceive—might differ as to the law of the case; but how there could be any difference on the question that a mere ministerial officer has power to decide a judicial question is something I cannot understand.

Mr. KELLY. I desired to ask the Senator from Iowa a question, but he did not yield. I will say now that the decision I referred to will be found in the fourteenth volume of Indiana Reports, and it declares that the governor has a right to decide that very question. I am not referring now to the question whether the person next highest to an ineligible candidate is considered elected, but I refer to the case in Indiana to show that the governor has a right to withhold a certificate from an ineligible candidate, and it is there held to be, not a judicial, but a political question. Here I may refer in passing to the action of the governor of Vermont. The governor of Vermont, as I understand, undertook to decide, and very properly as I view it, that one of the candidates for elector of that State had not been elected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to correct the Senator. The governor of Vermont never undertook to hold any such thing, or do anything about it except follow the statute, count the vote and issue the certificate.

Mr. KELLY. I understand that the governor of Vermont certainly did call the Legislature together.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator is entirely mistaken; he did not do anything of the kind.

Mr. KELLY. Was not the Legislature convened?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Legislature convened according to the constitution of Vermont, which provides for its convening once in a while.

Mr. KELLY. The Legislature was called together in Rhode Island by the governor. I refer to this to show that the governors of other States have made this decision and it is an executive decision that is made everywhere by every governor who understands his duty. It is expressly decided in the fourteenth volume of Indiana Reports that it is a political question which the governor is bound to decide when it is presented to him, and that he can withhold a commission from a man who is ineligible although the statute may declare that a commission shall be given to the one elected.

I do not propose to discuss that question now. I have been drawn into a more lengthy discussion than I at first intended. At the proper time, when the report of the committee shall be made, I think I can present the case so as to make it clear that the decision of the governor of Oregon was correctly made, and that he had ample authority to take cognizance of the case.

Mr. WRIGHT. I desire to ask my friend the Senator from Oregon a question. I know he is a good lawyer. I do not propose now to discuss the Indiana case, though I think he is quite mistaken as to its bearing; but I ask whether he as a lawyer, whatever may be the decision in Indiana, remembering the Oregon statute, regards that the governor of Oregon has judicial powers and the right to determine that question as a matter of law?

Mr. KELLY. I think it is not judicial power. There is the very point where the Senator from Iowa and myself differ. Now I will state a case.

Mr. WRIGHT. We do not differ if you say it is not judicial power.

Mr. KELLY. I say it is not. Suppose an individual had been voted for who died the day before the election, and that fact was brought to the governor's attention, then I say he is not bound to issue a commission to a dead man, and he can take evidence as to that fact. It is simply the proof that the man is dead. This was only the proof that Watts was ineligible.

Another case: suppose a man had been convicted of a crime which under the statutes of Oregon rendered him ineligible. Suppose such a man should receive the highest number of votes and the record of conviction was placed before the governor when he was asked to commission an individual who had served out his time in the penitentiary and who was therefore ineligible; would he be bound under his oath to stultify himself and issue a commission to a convict in the penitentiary? He has no right to commission anybody who is ineligible; and it is his duty to take evidence of that fact. I admit that he cannot go into the trial of a contested question, as to show that an individual had committed a robbery, theft, or any other felony. He cannot do that because no man can be convicted except by judicial process.

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask one question.

Mr. KELLY. Do not interrupt me just now. But the conviction once being had and the record of it being placed before the governor and proof being made that he is the identical person who wore the stripes of the prison, is the governor to stultify himself and issue a commission to that man? I say there is authority for saying no. Not only that, but I say that the decisions of Oregon govern the executive of that State in this matter, and I will refer to one now, a case unreported but a case nevertheless decided by the supreme court.

Ex-Governor Gibbs was elected prosecuting attorney for the fourth judicial district. He served some time in that capacity. Afterward he was appointed by President Grant United States district attorney for the district of Oregon. He was exercising the duties of both offices for some time. The constitution of Oregon declares that no man holding a Federal office shall exercise the duties of any office under that State. The governor, knowing this fact, or having evidence of it, appointed another person to supersede Governor Gibbs as prosecuting attorney. He declined to give up the office. Application was made to the court of the fourth judicial district to exclude him and to admit the governor's appointee, Mr. Bellinger. The judge, who by the way has been giving one of these fugitive opinions that this is a judicial question, Judge Upton, held that the governor could not take judicial notice of the fact, that the governor had no right to judge of the matter. A writ of quo warranto or a writ in the nature of a quo warranto was sued out by Mr. Bellinger against Ex-Governor Gibbs. It was decided by Judge Upton, as he had expressed it before, that the governor had no right to make an appointment of this kind, that it required a judicial decision to determine whether Governor Gibbs could hold the State office or not. He decided that that was not an executive question but a judicial question. Appeal was taken to the supreme court of Oregon, and by a unanimous decision of that court, all the judges concurring, it was held that it was a political question, and that the governor had a right to decide it, and not only that, but they held that it was his duty, as conservator of the constitution of the State of Oregon, to see that no infraction of it took place. That is a decision made by the supreme court of Oregon.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it reported?

Mr. KELLY. No, it is not reported. The case was referred, as all cases are, to the judges to write the opinions of the court. This case was referred to Judge Thayer, but he died before the opinion or decision of the court was written out. The papers remained in the possession of his family for some time afterward, and were then sent back to the court; the opinion has been written by another member of the supreme court since the papers were sent back, and it will be reported in the next volume of Oregon Reports.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of my colleague if that case was not this, as to whether those two officers were incompatible. Was not that the question?

Mr. KELLY. I will tell you. The main point that Judge Upton decided was that the matter was of a judicial nature, and that the fact whether there was a vacancy in the office or not could only be inquired into by the courts. That was the very ground upon which Judge Upton based his decision. That decision was reversed on the ground I have stated, and I will have the opinion in two or three days.

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to ask my colleague a question. My colleague says that this is a political matter, not a judicial one. I want to ask my colleague whether, in his opinion as a lawyer, the power of the executive of our State to pass upon the eligibility of a person elected to office applies as well to a person elected to a State office as to those elected as electors of President and Vice-President? Does it apply to all State officers?

Mr. KELLY. I understand so.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is a provision in the constitution of the State of Oregon something like this: that no person shall be eligible to office under the constitution of that State who has been a holder of public moneys and who has failed to pay over all moneys in his possession or under his control. Now, suppose that kind of person was elected by the people, and a suggestion of that sort was made to the executive, would he, in the judgment of my colleague, have the power to investigate that question and pass upon it? He comes in and denies, and an issue is made. Has the governor of the State of Oregon the power, in the judgment of my colleague, to investigate that question, determine it, adjudicate upon it, or not?

Mr. KELLY. He has not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why?

Mr. KELLY. I will state the reason. It is this: No person can be deprived of any right, as the right of suffrage, or the right to hold office where he has committed a crime, except upon conviction by a proper court of the offense with which he has been charged. I referred a moment ago to the case where the record of conviction was laid before the governor of one who had been sent to the penitentiary. That is sufficient evidence; but in the case suggested by my colleague there is not.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is not necessarily a crime; the constitution does not make a crime.

Mr. KELLY. Certainly withholding public moneys is an offense.

Mr. MITCHELL. Not necessarily a crime.

Mr. KELLY. I say it is necessarily an offense. The man who holds them when he is commanded to make a return of the public moneys, or misappropriates or misapplies them, commits a crime or an offense; and no man can be deprived of a right to hold office or the right of suffrage except upon the presentation of a grand jury and the conviction by a petit jury. That is altogether a different case from simply proving that a man is a postmaster. It is like proving the conviction by the production of the record. The cases to me are very marked and very distinct. I take the broad ground here that the governor of Oregon is to certify who has been duly elected to an office according to the law, according to the letter of the law; and, if he certifies that one has been elected who has not been and who cannot by law be elected, he violates his oath of office. He falsifies before the public when he gives a certificate of election to a man who the Constitution says shall not be elected. That is the sum and substance of it. All these questions I expect to argue at a proper time.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, as the Senator from Oregon has referred to the Rhode Island case, I will state, for his information, that the governor of Rhode Island did not assume to make any decision in the case. As soon as it was discovered in the community that Mr. Corliss was a Government officer, the governor of Rhode Island called upon the supreme court for a decision as to whether he was eligible to the office to which he had been elected by the people; that is, the office of elector. The supreme court by a majority vote, not a unanimous vote, decided that he was ineligible. Then the governor of the State called the Legislature together, and the Legislature filled the vacancy. The governor of Rhode Island did not assume to make any decision in the case at all, until he had the opinion of the supreme court; nor did he give the certificates of all the electors to one of the minority, but he, like a fair, honorable man, as he is, gave to each man who was elected his own electoral certificate, and inquired from the supreme court as to what was his duty in reference to the fourth elector; in other words, as to whether Mr. Corliss was elected or not. The court decided unanimously that if Mr. Corliss, the republican candidate, was not elected, his opponent on the democratic ticket who received the greatest number of votes was not elected.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. He says the Legislature when convened filled the vacancy which existed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONKLING. Why was it that the electors themselves did not fill the vacancy?

Mr. BURNSIDE. They did. It was done both by the Legislature and the electoral college.

Mr. ANTHONY. Our law is peculiar.

Mr. CONKLING. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The vacancy was filled by the electors as well as by the General Assembly.

Mr. CONKLING. If there is a peculiarity in the law of Rhode Island, I wish the Senator would state it.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The law requires the General Assembly to fill vacancies where there is a failure to elect, and the electoral college to fill vacancies where electors fail to appear and act. The governor called the Legislature together for that purpose; but the governor took no action in the matter except to issue the certificates to the three men who he knew were elected and withhold the other until the decision of the supreme court was made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, Senators have not discussed the question before the Senate; but as the vote is about to be taken on that, I trust they will remember the importance of the question about to be submitted to the Senate as to the extent to which the Senate of the United States may go in calling for private telegrams between citizens in the transaction of their ordinary business. I have no doubt that, in accordance with the general rules that have been established in the courts, there is a way of procuring even private confidential letters between citizens or obtaining other papers, but the rules of courts have generally been very strict in requiring a foundation to be laid for such proof, and as a rule the courts have not invaded the sanctity of private intercourse, either in letters or any other way, without strong proof and the proper foundation being laid. I am not prepared to say whether this case presents one that would justify the Senate of the United States in calling for telegrams in a general way. Certainly, no telegrams ought to be called for unless they relate distinctly to a matter under inquiry before the Senate of the United States.

Any telegrams bearing upon the conduct of the officials charged with official duty in the Oregon election case probably could be called out; but I trust the Senate of the United States will not be the first to break down the ordinary barriers which respect the privacy and rights of private individuals. I certainly would not vote to invade either private correspondence or the telegraph except in cases that would justify a court in the hearing of a cause, after a sufficient foundation had been laid, to call for specific telegrams or letters that bore distinctly on the matter in issue. Then I think the Senate of the United States would be justified in making the call. Therefore if this power is now conferred on this committee, if this resolution is passed, I trust that the call for telegrams will be confined strictly to those telegrams which bear directly upon the conduct of public officials in the discharge of a public duty, and that any attempt to make a wholesale investigation into private affairs or into private telegrams that do not bear directly upon an official act will not be indulged in by the Senate of the United States.

We know, sir, without referring to particular cases, that this power is a dangerous one, most likely to be abused; it is a power which ought not to be exercised by any tribunal except upon a clear showing; and I trust that by some law, hereafter framed carefully after full consideration of the subject, the mode and manner of getting at telegrams and letters in investigations before committees of Congress will be pointed out. At present it seems to me a great deal of latitude, a great deal of abuse may occur in the investigation of private dispatches; whole classes of dispatches, without being described or identified or pointed out, have been seized upon and subjected to public gaze and printed in the public papers in violation of that principle which men born under English institutions have always regarded as among the most sacred, that a man's private property, private papers, a man's household, a man's private affairs should be sacred from the inspection of mankind except in a few cases where the law authorizes them to be made public for public purposes and to advance public justice.

Mr. CONKLING. Where is that distinction? The Senator says that he thinks this power should be kept within the limits to which a court should go. If it will not inconvenience the Senator I wish he would let me know what he means by that, in general at least.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the first place, the particular paper must be pointed out or described in some way. Then the materiality of the testimony which it is alleged this paper would exhibit must be shown to the satisfaction of the court. That is, the court, before it will make an order, must be satisfied, first, that the testimony alleged to be contained in the paper is material to the issue in the case and, second, that the proper foundation has been laid; but the rules upon that subject have varied in different courts, as the Senator knows very well. As we are acting, having the full powers of a court in the investigation of matters brought before our committees, I think the Senate of the United States ought to set an example of exceeding care in laying down the rules which authorize the seizing, examining, and publishing of private papers and private communications between citizens.

In this case I suppose that almost any one would concede that these telegrams are proper subjects of information, because, if I understand the report, it shows that they relate to alleged improper means, perhaps alleged corruption, in the performance of a public duty. As a matter of course, if that is the foundation, and that is sufficiently laid, the telegrams should be exposed, because our public duty is higher than our duty to private individuals; but I trust the subject will not pass without its importance being called to the attention of the Senate and without its attracting the attention of the proper committee, so that hereafter proper guards may be provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. EATON. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections a question in regard to this report for my own information and guidance; and that is, whether there is any dispute about the authority of Congress to compel witnesses to make answer to such questions as are here propounded to this witness?

Mr. MORTON. I suppose that is precisely the question that is involved. I am not proposing to argue the question of the right and power of the Senate, which has been much discussed in the newspapers, and perhaps in the other end of the Capitol. I have only this to say, that if it is proper in any case to compel the production of private telegrams, I believe this is a proper case.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator doubtless is very familiar with this matter, having been investigating it and making this report, and I will ask him if there is any precedent in the Senate for such action. Has the Senate ever heretofore acted on a case of this kind?

Mr. MORTON. If there is such a case I do not know it. I do not know that this question has ever been presented to this body before. I think it is important to have it decided and to have it decided correctly. It is a question that has been much discussed in the newspapers for several years and I believe has arisen two or three times in the House of Representatives.

Mr. CONKLING. I should like to ask the Senator from Indiana, if I may be allowed, a question. I see that this witness in one of his answers refers to some statute of the State in which he lives, which from his statement seems to be a penal statute visiting punishment upon one who shall disclose telegraphic dispatches. Does the Senator from Indiana know or does either of the Senators from Oregon know what that statute is and what it declares?

Mr. MORTON. I know nothing of it except from the reference made by the witness.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it may not be inappropriate in that connection to state that there was in Pennsylvania, as early as 1851, a penal statute forbidding employés of telegraph companies to disclose anything that passed over the wires or that came to them in connection with their relations with the companies. Objections were urged in a criminal cause then pending to the production of testimony or the introduction of evidence under that statute, and the court, if I recollect aright, held that it did not apply to criminal prosecution or proceedings that affected the public administration of justice.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Kansas has already answered the Senator from New York, and I desire to ask the chairman of the committee whether he has investigated this question sufficiently to say to the Senate whether the doctrine of privileged communications applies? In other words, if there is no penal statute (as I understand the Senator does not know whether there is or not) forbidding him from making this communication, can he refuse to deliver the communication on the ground that it is a privileged communication?

Mr. MORTON. I know nothing in regard to the Oregon statute.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will state that my impression is that there is an Oregon statute on that subject.

Mr. MORTON. To what extent?

Mr. MITCHELL. I have sent for the book.

Mr. CONKLING. A statute which imposes punishment by way of imprisonment on a telegraphic employé who does produce a dispatch?

Mr. MITCHELL. It is my impression that there is some statute to that effect.

Mr. MORTON. Without having seen the statute, I presume it goes to this extent, that the voluntary disclosure of a telegraphic dispatch by an operator or any other person officially connected with the company shall be criminal. That would not necessarily extend to a case where a court requires the production of it. But whatever might be the responsibility under the statute for a disclosure made in Oregon, that statute cannot affect a disclosure made in Washington.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORTON. I hope we shall go on with this resolution and take a vote. I presume it can be taken in a few minutes.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope we shall not take this vote until we see what the statute of Oregon is. That will take but a moment. The book has been sent for. I should like for one to read the statute before I vote that this man is in contempt.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour having expired it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senator from Iowa will consent to let it be passed over informally.

Mr. WRIGHT. Not to be displaced.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion. The resolution will be continued before the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I am so heartily in favor of any and all disclosures of matters such as are suggested by this report, that I am disposed to go very far, as far as I feel I am justified under the laws of this land, in compelling the production of testimony. At the same time I believe there is no safety for any man or any party in this land except under the laws of the land. I do not believe in liberty divorced from law, and I confess myself exceedingly opposed to laws made for the occasion by the two Houses of Congress. The doctrine that they are a law unto themselves is very repugnant to me and one to which I have never yet assented.

There is no question that inquisitions by either House of Congress must be accompanied by power to compel the production of testimony; otherwise the attempt would be idly made. In the present case the matter I believe to be within the just and peculiar cognizance of this body, and that they have the right and that it is their duty to prosecute this inquiry fully. Nevertheless, we must not forget that this is making a precedent, and it is proper that we should confine it within those principles of limitation upon our power which it is our constant duty to impose. The Senator from Indiana, when the very pertinent inquiry was made of him by the Senator from Texas whether he knew of any precedent controlling the action and limiting the power of the Senate over the production of telegraphic dispatches, was understood by me to answer that he knew of none. Therefore it is, I think, that we should hasten slowly before we undertake to claim a power as broad as that implied in some of these questions. The questions do not, in my opinion, all stand on the same footing. Some of them are addressed to the witness asking as to the action of particular persons connected, I suppose, with the subject-matter inquired of, namely, the canvass of this electoral vote of Oregon. I find the name of a Mr. Patrick, and I suppose he was in some way connected with the count of that vote. One inquiry is in regard to the action of Mr. Patrick in phrase like this: "Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had asked to have that canvass withheld until he could get there?" I believe if he knew that fact he was entitled to state it, and that the committee had a right to compel that answer, and that whether the knowledge comes to him from written papers in his hand, or comes to him otherwise, it is a question of his knowledge. The doctrine has been laid down by very eminent authority, and I do not know that it is contradicted, that where a man has paper writings in his possession containing facts which if within his knowledge he would be compelled to answer, he may be compelled to produce under subpœna duces tecum and put the writings in evidence.

Let me read the proposition, for it is best to be accurate:

Chief Justice Shaw in the case of Bull vs. Loveland, 10 Pickering, 14, laid down this doctrine:

There seems to be no difference in principle between compelling a witness to produce a document in his possession, under a subpœna duces tecum, in a case where the party calling the witness has a right to the use of such document, and compelling him to give testimony, when the facts lie in his own knowledge. It has been decided, though it was formerly doubted, that a subpœna duces tecum is a writ of compulsory obligation, which the court has power to issue, and which the witness is bound to obey, and which will be enforced by proper process to compel the production of the paper when the witness has no lawful or reasonable excuse for withholding it. Amey vs. Long, 9 East. 473; Corsen vs. Dubois, 1 Holt's N. P. R., 239. But of such lawful or reasonable excuse, the court at nisi prius, and not the witness, is to judge. And when the witness has the paper ready to produce, in obedience to the summons, but claims to retain it on the ground of legal or equitable interests of his own, it is a question to the discretion of the court, under the circumstances of the case, whether the witness ought to produce or is entitled to withhold the paper.

I take it, therefore, if this man has possession of papers which we have the right to inspect and he has knowledge of the contents of these papers, he may be compelled as a witness to disclose the fact orally, just as we would compel him to produce the papers if in his possession, and we have the right to order their production.

It would seem that another question is asked of this man, which I will read with his answer:

Question. Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had asked to have that canvass withheld until he could get there?
Answer. I cannot answer that question.
Q. Have you any knowledge on that subject?
A. No, sir; nothing that could be made public.
Q. Explain what you mean by that.
A. Our knowledge on political subjects and all others, of course, has to be very sacred. It would be a violation of the law of the State to divulge anything that passes over the telegraphic wires and also a violation of the rules of the company.

If this be so, it seems to me that the laws of the State should have been here produced. I think they are very well worthy of inspection, and should have due authority. Ordinarily the rules of evidence in courts of the United States are those which prevail in the courts of the State where the cause may be tried, excepting those cases where Congress has otherwise directed. Thus, for instance, in some of the States parties to a cause are allowed to be witnesses; in others they are not. In the courts of the United States, notwithstanding their interest, they may be witnesses; but if it were not for the statute of Congress so directing, the control of the testimony in this regard would be by the law of the State where the case is tried. Now, if there be a law of Oregon forbidding this production, we should see it, because that raises a new question.

Mr. MITCHELL. If the Senator from Delaware will allow me, I have just my hand on the book and will read the law.

Mr. BAYARD. I will ask the Senator to do that directly, and I shall be very glad to hear it. I merely say, this question having been brought to us here and it being proposed to be passed upon in a very hasty manner, that I, before I place myself upon record admitting a principle, choose to know where it will take me. Let us know, therefore, whether there has been a violation of the law, and let us know, also, something in regard to the rules of this company, and then consider whether the laws of the State or the rules of the company are in violation of the Constitution of the United States or the laws passed in pursuance thereof, because much of our action will depend on the answer to that question.

The next question is:

Question. I propose to ask the witness the question if he knows of any dispatch passing through that office, on the part of Mr. Patrick or any one else, asking that that canvass be deferred until he could get there?

If these facts are within the witness's knowledge we certainly have a right to compel him to answer, because this is a question pointing directly to the subject-matter to be inquired of, admittedly within the jurisdiction and duty of the Senate to inquire of; and if he has that knowledge, it seems to me that we have a right to compel an answer to the question.

Then come other questions that he declines to answer upon the ground before stated that he would not divulge anything that passed over the wires. The next is a question of a different character:

Question. What do you know, if anything, in regard to $8,000 being transferred from New York to Salem or to Portland at any time after the election in November and up to the time that the electors cast their votes?

And there is a cross-interrogation following twice upon that point. That involves other things. There is what I may call a drag-net. Not the action of Congress, not the action of any one connected with this inquiry, not the action of any canvasser, but the private affairs it may be of the honorable Senator from Indiana, it may be of the presiding officer of this body, or some member of it, are to be opened by this question; the affairs of every individual in the country may thus be exposed in a manner that might be highly detrimental to his interest. I say that this question should be narrowed. I believe if this question were before a court of justice, before any man here sitting as a judge, that he would require the interrogatories to be narrowed, to be brought down to the person sending the dispatch, to something that is to connect him with the object which the committee are pursuing.

The next question asks

Q. Do you know of any dispatch having been sent by Charles Dimond, or a man named Dimond, in New York, to Ladd & Bush, in Salem?

A subsequent question asks in regard to a similar sum to Ladd & Tilton and again another sum, and a larger one, $17,000, to Ladd & Tilton. If that question were asked in court and the counsel propounding it were to say that he intended to couple it hereafter with testimony bringing it home to some of the parties whose acts were being inquired of, I have no doubt the court would permit it, simply because in the arrangement of the order of evidence great discretion must be given as to which foot you shall put foremost and you are not to be disturbed in the line of connected proof by an objection to the order in which you place the items of that proof. That is a very common and familiar course. Therefore, if it shall be stated that those questions were intended to be followed up and connected with others bearing directly on this case, I am free to say that the production of that testimony, if in writing in the hands of a party, would be ordered by a court of justice, and the party having the documents and the knowledge from them could be inquired of in relation to those facts. This is a matter of public inquiry, necessarily less restricted than a case between A and B, individual parties; and I should be disposed to believe it proper that the question should be put and the answer compelled.

But, sir, telegraphing is a matter of modern invention, and we are here told by the honorable Senator from Indiana that he knows not of one precedent in the history of this body where the question of the compulsory production of telegrams has been made or insisted upon. Last summer I was sent by the Senate as a member of a committee of investigation to Mississippi, and a subpœna duces tecum had been there ordered by the majority.

Mr. MORTON. I will say to the Senator that I have made no investigation on that point, and I do not know that any case has occurred or not.

Mr. BAYARD. What the Senator does not know on this subject I am sure is not worth knowing in the body, because he has generally had charge of these matters. I am sure no man is more qualified than he to speak.

This is to be found on the fourth page of the journal of the committee contained in the report of the select committee to inquire into the Mississippi election of 1875.

At Jackson, Mississippi, June 12, John Galbraith was called. His summons contained these words:

"Bring with you all telegraphic dispatches signed by or addressed to General J. Z. George, and dated in the months of September, October, and November, 1875."

When Mr. Galbraith appeared this debate took place in committee, and it was ordered to be entered in the journal:

Senator BAYARD. Mr. Chairman, this morning, just before the committee met, you stated to Mr. McDONALD and myself something concerning this subject. Until that time we had no information of the intention of the committee to call for the telegraphic correspondence of General George or anybody else, and all that we desire to do now is to have it appear on the record of the proceedings of this committee that we disapprove of the seizure of the correspondence of any private citizen by this committee, unless it be to contradict a witness who has been summoned before the committee by his own telegrams in a matter within the jurisdiction of the committee to impeach him. I care nothing for this correspondence, but simply want an objection to appear of record. Mr. George is a private citizen of this State, who has not been summoned before this committee, and we consider that he has rights, and those with whom he corresponds have rights, which should be guarded. This is a sweeping order to bring all the dispatches sent by or addressed to General J. Z. George, and I desire to appear on record as opposed to such arbitrary action.

My colleague on the committee, Senator MCDONALD, said:

I agree with all that Mr. BAYARD has said. I understand the regulations adopted by the telegraph company in reference to correspondence prohibit their agents from exhibiting correspondence to any person except those who send the dispatches or those to whom they are sent, unless by order of a court of competent jurisdiction—a court or tribunal where the ends of justice require the production of the correspondence as instruments of evidence. I do not understand that the custodian of those papers is subject to a subpœna duces tecum in the present case. There is a violation of the regulations made for the benefit of those who patronize the telegraph companies by intrusting their correspondence to it, and at present I see nothing to warrant me, as a member of this committee, even if I thought such power was vested in it, (and I am not clear about that,) to issue such an order as a court might issue in a proper case. I see nothing that would justify me in voting for such an order in this case.

Senator CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If this was an original question, possibly I might agree with you; but since 1866 congressional committees have in numerous cases required the superintendents of telegraphs to produce telegrams; and, so far as I know, they have always been produced. Every congressional committee, I think, of the present House of Representatives has required the production of telegraphic dispatches before it, and they have been produced. It is now too late to raise the question.

I merely refer to this to show that in one of these committees a majority of the committee in accord with the present political majority of the Senate ordered this wholesale production of private correspondence by telegraph, no matter from whom received, no matter to what relating, and I confess that I felt that it was a very arbitrary violation of the secrets of individuals. I was unwilling to let it go without a protest.

Mr. ALLISON. Were they produced?

Mr. BAYARD. They were all produced and they were read, and the result was that every telegram received by Mr. George of Mississippi from the 4th of September until the 3d of November, 1875, was produced and read and published, and here they are in this report from page 380 to page 419. Everything that was sent to him, everything that was sent by him by telegraph, was there produced. It is not worth while to speak of what the dispatches contain, because that is not what we are considering. They contain nothing but the most usual and ordinary correspondence about the election. If it was supposed they would disclose anything injurious to Mr. George or those with whom he was acting, it was certainly a very great mistake. But that was not the question. It was what might have been the rights of any individual whose private interests, whose private feelings could thus have been disturbed in a manner that no court of justice would have permitted. There we have always a safeguard. Where there is a question in regard to the pertinency of testimony, whether, in other words, it is evidence in the cause, it is oftentimes submitted to the judge who decides the matter by an inspection which is private and confidential; and in that way the private rights and interests and feelings of parties are protected, not only of parties extra to the suit but of parties connected with the suit. It is a part of the decorum that belongs to a court of justice.

But, Mr. President, this matter of telegraphing might as well practically be understood. My present impression is that the postal cards furnished us by the Government are not much more public than our telegrams are. Whatever may be the cause of this the result is about the same. I have heard that skillful telegraphic operators who stand near an instrument can by their ear detect a message just as perfectly as though they were sitting at the table and saw it transcribed. I am disposed to believe there is no question as to the fact that a man within sound of a telegraphic battery can tell the messages that are passing over it merely by his ear. I have heard of things of that kind done in this Capitol. I have heard of persons in this Capitol walking to the recipient of a message and laying it on his table in the other House and announcing its contents. It was thought to be a very mysterious power, and a very discreditable exercise of that power. I asked an intelligent gentleman connected with the telegraph, and he said that that was the explanation of it, that they could by ear detect the message and so take it off. Then I have heard that communication may be made with a wire at any point, and that all messages passing over that wire can be conducted to any battery that may be placed in any private house, or anywhere upon the line of the telegraph. I am not familiar enough with the practical operations of telegraphing to know how far wires may be tapped and communications taken without the knowledge of those to whom they are properly directed, nor do I mean at all to say that there has been an improper and dishonorable communication of the contents of telegrams by officers of the company. I have no reason to say that; I have no such knowledge as to warrant it; but if the fact shall be that you may all throughout the country listen to the click of the telegraph, and by educating your ear, or those of your agents, learn what is said, palpably it becomes no longer the vehicle for any confidential communication. Still these are practical facts, not yet understood perhaps, and in regard to which there has been no formulation of law.

We are asked now to make a step in practice which I think is very important and may lead us to very serious results. Before the Senate adopts this resolution, I should like to know the extent of power claimed by it. I will admit that where a subject is fairly within the jurisdiction of the Senate to inquire of, we have all the rights that a court of justice would have, or that a court of law and equity would have, to compel the production of testimony pertinent to the issues raised; and those rights, it is reasonable and just that we should be armed with power to carry into execution. It is a matter of public interest that such a claim should be sustained. It is likewise a matter of grave public interest that we should not, under color of seeking information in regard to isolated facts or the conduct of impeached individuals, make the entire private correspondence of our citizens public. I can see in that vast causes of distress, of injury, which cannot be remedied. Therefore, in this proceeding I would desire to know for my own part that whatever vote I cast was warranted by a strict regard to the legal rights of those who are strangers to me and yet who are entitled to the same protection that I would ask for myself. I shall aid this committee in the uttermost disclosure of anything that is dishonest and unlawful in connection with the late election or any other. I am very ready to enter into a contest with my friends of another party or my own as to which shall be most swift in disclosing and punishing any violation of the purity and legality of elections. Nay, sir, I should feel if I spoke simply as a party man, that I was best advancing the interests of those with whom I acted if I assisted the sword of justice in falling upon some rogue within my party even more quickly than upon one without it. Therefore it is that while I am anxious as is the Senator from Oregon that there should be the fullest answer which the law permits to all of these questions, yet at the same time I should like the question to be considered whether in this matter we are not compelling the answer of this witness to some questions which I have endeavored to discriminate between and others which, were he in a court of justice, he would be protected against answering. Anything that the law would compel him to answer elsewhere I would compel him to answer here.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, having inquired of the Senators from Oregon touching the statute, one of them has sent for it. It is here, although not before me, and it has I think nothing immediately to do with this question. Unlike the statutes of several of the States it punishes a "willful" disclosure and it punishes a "willful" alteration of a dispatch to the injury of another. Waiving the question whether under the statute of Oregon an offense would be committed by disclosing a dispatch here because it contained as an ingredient of the offense what I take it must be not only a voluntary but a willful act in the legal sense, I should not feel bound to rest my vote upon that statute. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] has it and no doubt will read it at the proper time, and he is more familiar with it than I am.

I take it then that this question stands before us upon the general grounds on which it ought to be decided. The Senator from Ohio has referred, and very properly as I think, to the administration of the law by courts as a rule for our action. The difficulty there, as in so many other cases, is not in understanding the principle or the doctrine, but in applying it. How it can be applied here I know not. That it can be applied under such a resolution as this I have no idea. Under subpœna duces tecum books are produced in court. It is familiar practice to all lawyers that before they are produced at all, they are sealed up so as to include under the seal so many of the leaves or pages as do not concern the particular matter which the court is to inquire into. Private letters are produced. They are handed quietly to the judge. He reads them not only privately, but he reads them as to the rights of the parties upon his honor. He does not disclose them to the other side of the cause, he does not disclose them to the jury, he does not disclose them to the public, unless they be of that nature falling within the restrictions of the law which commits them to the record as evidence in the case. Everything except that is protected. How, under a resolution of this sort, dealing with letters or dealing with telegrams, it would be possible except by dint of the diligence and care of some member of the committee who might, because he thought he should, not because he was enjoined to do it, undertake to make himself acquainted with the dispatches in advance and to see that those immaterial to the matter never came to the knowledge of the public or to the knowledge of that portion of the public which consists of the members of a House or even of a committee—how it could be done unless in that way, I do not see; and this resolution on its face presents no such restriction and makes no such provision.

The question which presents itself to me is how far the sanctity which has been so long imputed to postal correspondence and to everything carried by the post-office is applicable to this species of correspondence. We all know that the British Parliament more than once, once in a very memorable instance, sifted with great care the philosophy and right of the question of dealing with the contents of the mails. We know how much consideration has been given in this country now and formerly in that regard. In 1825 the crimes act, as it is called, drafted I believe chiefly by Mr. Webster, was enacted. It has stood to this day, observed, respected, unchallenged, as a wise statute. One of the provisions of that act, I remember, after punishing the violation of letters containing values, punishing various more aggravating offenses, directed against the mails, punishes absolutely and at large in respect of all letters any person whatever who shall open a letter not addressed to himself. So stringent is this statute that lawyers have found great difficulty in defending men charged even in cases where there was some color of authority for opening a letter not addressed to the man himself who opened it. It was intended to be a rigorous statute; it is so; and for aught I know it embodies the public judgment, the public sentiment, on that question.

How far does a telegram resemble in the sanctity which ought to be ascribed to it, a letter? In one aspect a telegram written by me is like a verbal communication made to my friend from Massachusetts which I request him to go and make to somebody else. If it be that it is a mere voluntary act of mine; it is a communication orally made, because I choose to make it to somebody else, and I choose to request him to make it to the third person; and, dealing with it in that way, we should have very little difficulty in seeing that when you come to the investigation of offenses no very great distinction is to be made between that and any other conversation or declaration which might under the rules of evidence be material or the contrary. But I have in my hand a familiar book, Cooley's Constitutional Limitations. I sent to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] to borrow it as I found it was out of the Library; and it is barely possible I am anticipating some purpose of his in referring to it.

Mr. EATON. I was very glad to furnish it the Senator from New York, and shall be glad to have him use it.

Mr. CONKLING. Then, Mr. President, I will venture to read a succinct and rather vigorous note, I think, appended by this commentator to the text on this subject. He says:

In Maine it has been decided that a telegraph operator may be compelled to disclose the contents of a message sent by him for another party, and that no rule of public policy would forbid.—

Citing a case:

The case is treated as if no other considerations were involved than those which arise in the ordinary case of a voluntary disclosure by one private person to another, without necessity. Such, however, is not the nature of the communication made to the operator of the telegraph. That instrument is used as a means of correspondence, and as a valuable and, in many cases, an indispensable substitute for the postal facilities; and the communication is made, not because the party desires to put the operator in possession of facts, but because transmission without it is impossible. It is not voluntary in any other sense than this, that the party makes it rather than deprive himself of the benefits of this great invention and improvement. The reasons of a public nature for maintaining the secrecy of telegraphic communications are the same with those which protect correspondence by mail; and, though the operator is not a public officer, that circumstance appears to us immaterial. He fulfills an important public function, and the propriety of his preserving inviolable secrecy in regard to communications is so obvious that it is common to provide statutory penalties for disclosures.

I may say, in passing, that several of the States have adopted penal statutes unlike that of Oregon, not employing the word "willful" but punishing any disclosure whatever by a telegraph operator or employé of a dispatch or its contents committed to him. This author proceeds:

If on grounds of public policy the operator should not voluntarily disclose, why do not the same considerations forbid the courts compelling him to do so? Or, if it be proper to make him testify to the correspondence by telegraph, what good reason can be given why the postmaster should not be made subject to the process of subpœna for a like purpose, and compelled to bring the correspondence which passes through his hands into court and open it for the purpose of evidence?—Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, pages 306, 307.

There is a statement at least of the question, if not of the answer which should be given to that question; and it suggests to me that it is unfortunate that in rather a casual manner (I say that in part because I look around upon so many empty seats which commonly are filled by Senators,) in a way that elicits so little attention, we should be called upon to proceed, for the first time I think in this body, to run the boundaries, if boundaries there be, between those communications passing between citizen and citizen which of right belong to them, and those communications which one House of Congress may stretch out its arm from one side of the continent to the other, if need be, and bring here into the presence of the nation, and have read in the blaze of broad publicity. This question is under consideration in another forum to which by the rules of this body I am not permitted specially to refer. I have been told, however, that this particular witness has as yet received no advice from those in whose authority he acts. A gentleman connected with the telegraph company mentioned to me yesterday that up to that time the company had had no opportunity to understand his case or to advise him to what extent he might assume, if to any, to answer or to refuse to answer, representing them. The same informant mentioned that this question being pending elsewhere and there having been a postponement there until to-day, the understanding of the company was that some action would be taken which would give light to them as to what they should do.

I mention this because it appears to me that perhaps rather than press this resolution to a vote now, with the Senate so thin, and to consideration so very slight, it might be allowed to stand until the party himself has an opportunity to determine upon advice, if he needs it, what he will do, and until those who may be called upon to vote in regard to it shall have further opportunity to see what they should do.

One thing further occurs to me, Mr. President, suggested by a remark made by the Senator from Delaware. One of two results will follow these proceedings to reach telegraphic correspondence; either the telegraph will cease to be, as it is, a great and familiar convenience, or those who manage telegraphs will adopt some measure, (I do not think that would be difficult; I think my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. CAMERON,] if they would ask him, would be able to tell them what,) some expedient which will make it impossible legally and impossible actually for anybody to rummage their files of dispatches. As was said of some great military commander, they will burn their bridges. When they have sent a dispatch they will burn it, they will obliterate everything by which it could be tracked, if they are driven to it, as they will be provided Congress shall assert the right to handle, and fumble, and expose all the messages touching a person's domestic, private, financial, and other affairs which pass between man and man. Those who patronize the telegraph will drive every company by some device to indemnify its patrons against the risks of exposure.

I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to say, Mr. President, that I shall be as ready to vote, and am now as ready to vote, as any other Senator for any resolution, within the law and within propriety which looks to the unmasking or ungowning of fraud. In so far as this resolution looks in that direction, I shall be very glad to vote for it. I do not mean at all to intimate that I shall not vote for it, but my purpose was to state that it seems to me that on rather short notice, in rather a hasty way, with a very thin Senate, we are proceeding in the first instance upon somewhat slippery ground. There are metes and bounds; we should know what they are and keep within them, and not do a thing which on reflection we may regret; which not only may be, but is certain to be drawn into a precedent hereafter, possibly for harm.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss this question of power any further than to say that I believe this whole subject in regard to telegraphic communications is within the power of Congress and may be regulated by Congress. It is a subject of congressional legislation, and there should be congressional legislation. It came to my knowledge, from a little examination I made last winter about another matter, that there was no law of Congress in this District punishing the disclosure of a telegraphic communication. The Government officers may have the most important secret to send by telegraph, and yet there is no act of Congress punishing the willful disclosure of such a dispatch in this District or in any Territory of the United States.

The statute of Oregon which has been referred to would not interfere with the adoption of this resolution, even if we were in Oregon. It provides for punishing a willful disclosure where it is done willfully. That is the extent of it.

Mr. BAYARD. Has the Senator the statute?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir, or I had it a moment ago. It would not apply to a case where a witness in court was called upon to testify to the contents of a dispatch; but if he should out of court willfully, of his own will and motion and unnecessarily, disclose the character of a dispatch, he would be liable to a penalty. That is the extent of the Oregon statute.

The authority read by the Senator from New York is simply a note in Cooley on Constitutional Limitations, and is rather a dissent from the only authority referred to, which is in Maine, in which the operator was compelled to produce the dispatch. That it is in the power of Congress to make a telegraphic dispatch a privileged communication, there is no doubt. That Congress can put a telegraphic dispatch upon the footing of a letter in the mail, there is no doubt. But, I presume, the simple fact is that it has not done so and there is no law on the subject. As I understand it, there is no law on the subject to protect a telegraphic dispatch any more than any other private paper which is not a sealed letter in the mails. That it might be proper for Congress to make such a law, I will not argue now. I believe that there ought to be legislation on the subject and there ought to be some protection for the secrecy of the telegraph; but the simple fact is that there is none. It stands now simply at the common law.

I am aware of the importance of the question, and I myself have had great reluctance in compelling the disclosure of telegraphic dispatches; but as the law stands now they are not protected; and if they are to be produced, I suppose this is as fair a case as can be presented.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, since the subject of the Oregon statute was first alluded to I have verified the impression which I then had that the question arising under a similar statute had received early adjudication in the State of Pennsylvania. I have obtained the second volume of Parsons' Select Cases heard before the court of common pleas in the city of Philadelphia, from which it appears that in the case of Henisler vs. Freedman this same question was raised and was determined in that tribunal. The Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania on the 17th of April, 1851, as the court state, passed an act declaring—

"That it should not be lawful for any person concerned with any line of telegraph within this Commonwealth, whether as superintendent, operator, or in any other capacity whatever, to use or make known, or cause to be used or made known, the contents of any dispatch, of whatever nature, which might be sent or received over any line of telegraph within the Commonwealth, without the consent or direction of either the party sending or receiving the same, and that all dispatches which might be filed at any office in this Commonwealth for transmission to any point, should be transmitted without being made public, or their purport in any manner divulged at any intermediate point whatever; and in all respects the same inviolable secrecy should be maintained by the officers and agents employed upon the several telegraph lines in relation to all dispatches which might be sent or received as may be enjoined by the laws of the United States in relation to the ordinary mail service of the United States." An exception is made in reference to dispatches of a public nature intended for publication. It was further provided that if any person in any capacity connected with any such telegraph "should use or cause to be used, or make known or cause to be made known, the contents of any dispatch sent from or received at any office in the Commonwealth, or in any other way unlawfully expose another's business or acts, or in any way impair the value of any correspondence so sent or received, such person being duly convicted thereof," should be punishable with fine and imprisonment.

In a case pending before the court it became necessary to ascertain the contents of a telegraphic dispatch. The operator of the Ohio and Atlantic Telegraph Company was summoned as a witness. He endeavored to protect himself under this statute. It was contended by counsel for the plaintiff that this prohibition related solely to voluntary communications, and was not intended to prohibit the introduction of testimony material in a court of justice. The counsel for defendant argued that the language of the act was broad enough to embrace all cases, and that the communication to the witness as a telegraph operator could no more be revealed than the contents of a letter could be divulged that was deposited in the post-office for transmission by the mail. The court held that the result of the principle contended for by the plaintiff would be to impose the seal of secrecy on all telegraphic communications, and render all correspondence by telegraph privileged under the law so that it would be protected like communications between husband and wife, or attorney and client, or the judges and arbitrators sitting in the decision of a cause, or official secrets of state which from considerations of public policy are not permitted to be revealed. The court said that—

> The claim that society has on the testimony of all its members, in courts appointed to administer public justice, is made to give way in such cases to the maintenance of other great relations, in which the public are even more interested.

The court proceeded further:

> The real intent and object of this law, was to prevent the betrayal of private affairs, communicated through the telegraph by those connected with it, for the promotion of private gain, or the gratification of idle gossip. This new and wonderful mode of communication, and the impossibility of maintaining otherwise the confidence necessary to the existence of private correspondence, required such a law as that before us. But in using the phrase "unlawfully expose another's business or acts," the Legislature certainly show, that they did not consider all exposures of another's business or acts "communicated through telegraph by a party connected with it," to be "unlawful;" otherwise, they would not have rendered punishable only "unlawful exposures."

And they conclude that the act is no protection to a witness who is required in the course of the administration of justice to disclose what may have been committed to him as a telegraph operator. As this decision has stood unreversed for twenty-five years it seems too late to contend that communications by telegraph are in any nature whatever privileged or protected from disclosure by the fact that a statute has been passed in any State making it unlawful for them to be revealed.

But in the course of this debate there has been another argument used to which I will briefly allude that appears not to be well supported by any facts in the case before us. It has been maintained by several Senators who have spoken that the disclosure by a telegraph operator of the contents of a dispatch is in some way similar to breaking open a letter; that to reveal the import of a telegraphic message is equivalent to tampering with the mails of the United States. Now, sir, I cannot see that there is any resemblance or comparison whatever between the two cases. If the laws of the United States required every letter that was sent by post to be first deposited with the Postmaster-General, and copied in his Department by clerks for transmission, and another copy to be made at the end of the route and retained by the Post-Office Department before the communication should be delivered to the recipient, the cases would be somewhat similar. In the transmission of intelligence by wire the original communication is delivered to the operator and is kept by the company for their own protection. The message is communicated to distant points by the electric impulse, like sensations passing along a gigantic nerve, in the same manner as intelligence goes to and from the brain in the human system, and from individual to individual by conversation, or by the delivery of a writing from hand to hand. There is no seal and no secrecy. There is no special sanctity about the operation. The process is mysterious and marvelous, but no more so than any other exhibition of the vital and mental powers. It is no more wonderful that we can talk to our correspondent a thousand miles away than that we can talk to him face to face. Both are inexplicable.

Letters by mail are only protected while in transit. The Government says to its citizens if you place your correspondence in our pouches for transmission, its security and protection is assured, and the depredators who break the wax or the gum shall be punished. But when they are delivered the guarantee ceases. The production of the letter can then be compelled whether the seal is broken or not.

The position, therefore, that the disclosure of the contents of a telegraphic message is in any way whatever equivalent to tampering with the mails is not well taken. There is no similarity, because the process and the objects are entirely different. The telegraph company is a private corporation. It is the common carrier of intelligence for hire. It is an express messenger carrying thoughts by electricity, and in my judgment the law should require all such corporations either to immediately destroy the original messages or to return them to the senders. There is no reason, so far as I am able to understand it, why they should be retained. The difficulty which has grown to such portentous proportions all originates with the companies themselves. They retain both originals and copies for their own protection, and it is because of this retention that all this difficulty has arisen. There is no more reason why the original and a copy of a message should be retained by the telegraph company than there is why the original of a letter should be kept by the Post-Office Department, and a copy sent to the person to whom it is addressed, of which another copy should be kept by the local postmaster before it is delivered. Therefore the law should be so changed as to require all originals and copies of messages to be promptly destroyed, and then there could be no difficulty by these drag-net investigations, because telegraphic messages would occupy the same position as letters transmitted by mail. If courts of justice or committees of investigation in Congress desired to obtain evidence of telegraphic correspondence, they would be compelled to apply to the parties who had sent it, and not those who had been merely the custodians of it. When the Senator from New York anticipates that these proceedings may compel the telegraph companies to burn their bridges behind them, as he says, or compel parties to resort to measures for protection by requiring the destruction of those copies that are now retained, I believe that this is precisely what ought to be done. They never ought to be kept by the telegraph company; they should promptly be destroyed; and then when it was necessary to obtain information as to what had been sent by telegraph, courts of justice or committees could apply to the parties by whom or to whom they had been sent, lay the foundation by proving that they had been sent and what their contents were or might be assumed to be, and require them to produce them, and, if they did not, then introduce other testimony that would be secondary and in that event competent, such as the recollection of the operator, if nothing else could be found.

But, certainly, so far as the mails are concerned, I understand that the secrecy of their contents extends only to letters that are in transmission. Take the case of a postal card that is sent from one person to another, which is an open communication transmitted through the mails. Suppose that a communication written upon a postal card was illegal or improper in its character, that related to some object that was unlawful or in violation of a statute, and that in the course of its progress through the mails a route-agent or a postmaster saw what was written on the back of the postal card, can it be supposed that the sanctity of the mails would prevent a court of justice or a committee of Congress from calling the man who had seen the card as a witness, and requiring him to say what the contents of it were? Certainly not. There is nothing in the law regarding the transmission of the mails relating to secrecy except where it refers to the tampering with private correspondence by breaking open the seals of it while in transit. Anything that is transmitted by mail that is open can certainly be reached just exactly the same as any communication between parties that is not sent through the mails.

So it seems to me that this whole argument is based on a misapprehension, that there is no more secrecy about the mails than there is about any other method of communication except in this: that courts of justice and committees of investigation are prevented from ascertaining the facts in any given matter by breaking open the seals of private correspondence, because a vastly greater amount of mischief may result from allowing that to be done than could result in any case from refusing that it should be done in order to promote either any public or any private interest. So that if the matter is properly considered it is devoid of special difficulty, and there is no reason why telegraphic communications are not subject to precisely the same rules of evidence as all other private writings. There is nothing in the method of transmission that makes them particularly sacred or surrounds them with any special protection or privilege. Any other theory would make the telegraph one of the most dangerous and malign ministers of evil, instead of one of the most beneficent agencies of modern society.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas well states the law as it was held in our State under the act of 1851. After the passage of that statute and in consequence of the decisions I presume, another statute was enacted in our State which controls and governs us now, the act of 1855. That provides that it shall be the duty of the telegraph superintendents and officers to keep custody of the original messages for three years and to produce them in court on demand of the parties in a cause, or at the request of the court, or before any committee of any public body, when the court or committee shall make an order in the usual form with the regular notice; and under this statute it is our every-day practice to require the production of telegrams in court. The only exception is the one made in the statute; and that is a communication between client and counsel. It by express terms of the statute is held to be a privileged communication. This is our practice there, and in accord with it I can see no reason why we should not here require just what is there done in court, full and complete divulgence of everything that occurs over the wires.

There is a great distinction between the case of a man intrusting to the United States mails a communication under his own seal, which cannot in the nature of things be known by any one else than himself and his correspondent, and the case in which he sends to a telegraph operator a dispatch which from the very nature of things must go through the minds of fifty different and distinct individuals, and where, as was well said by the Senator from Delaware, a man who can read by sound gets it. In the one case you have the absolute closing of the communication by the correspondent himself; it is between him and the man who receives the correspondence. The other case is the case of intrusting a private communication to a public vehicle. Now, why shall the latter have a different rule applied to his case from that which applies to all other instrumentalities of evidence wherever we may find them in courts of justice? When a man takes the risk of going to a telegraph operator and putting on the wire that which he thinks ought to be private, he takes the risk of having that instrumentality brought into court and of having it divulged, for from the nature of things it is necessary in obtaining testimony for use in courts that these kinds of communication should be brought to light. Here, it seems to me, is a manifest and plain distinction. The one from the very inception of it to its close is a private communication; the other from its inception to its close is a public communication, and it ought to be brought into court when the interests of justice so demand. Hence it seems to me that it is our duty in this case, as in every other case in which these communications are quasi-public, to require them to be brought to the light when they bear upon questions of fact that arise in the administration of justice either in public bodies like this or in courts.

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator indulge me in stating what it is that makes a communication by telegraph any more a public communication than one intrusted to the mail?

Mr. WALLACE. If a man places a communication under seal and puts in the mail, it cannot become public to any other mind than that of his correspondent until it reaches him. From the nature of the thing, when he puts in the hands of a telegraph operator a communication, the mind of the telegraph operator and of every other man connected with the line and of every man who can read by sound gets a knowledge of that, and he is an instrument of evidence, made so by our courts. Why should he not be required to produce it?

Mr. CONKLING. The difficulty with the Senator's statement, if he will allow me, is this: The one seal to which he refers is a seal of wax; the other seal to which he refers is a seal of conscience. If I go to the Senator and make a communication to him, unless he is my counsel or my physician or my confessor, I make a communication to him which he may reveal in court on being called upon to do it. If however he is a postmaster and I deliver a letter to him sealed, he is the custodian to whom is committed that letter under double seal, not merely the seal of the wax or the mucilage but the other seal of confidence and trust.

Judge Cooley suggests in language some of which I have read that when I go to a telegraphic operator and commit to him certain words, I do so not voluntarily, not because I choose to make that communication to him for his acquaintance, but because, in the language of that authority, I am compelled to disclose it to him or to lose the privilege of transmitting it. In other words, I reveal it to him for one purpose and for one only; and when the statutes of States declare, as auxiliary to the understanding, not only that that is the only purpose, but that it shall be penal to reveal it for any other purpose, really I must say I do not see how the Senator satisfies himself by the mere distinction between a paper sealed with gum arabic or wax and a paper which in its nature cannot be sealed in that way but is delivered under the seal, I will not say technically of official confidence, but under the seal of confidence sanctioned by law which prohibits the breaking of that seal for any purpose except one, to wit: the transmission over the wires which it is the special dexterity of the person informed to manipulate and which the other person cannot manipulate for himself.

Now, I beg the Senator's pardon for one further moment. I do not mean in my remarks to him, nor did I intend in my remarks before, to commit myself against voting for the broadest resolution on this subject. I simply make this suggestion to him, as I make other suggestions, in the hope of showing that it will be a wise thing for us to know before we act a little something of what we are about.

Mr. WALLACE. The distinction made by the Senator from New York may be a valid and sound distinction when it is enacted by statute; but I am looking at the nature of things as they exist. The seal of wax is an absolute foreclosing of knowledge on the part of any one but the correspondent and him who receives the correspondence, and there is no instrumentality between the writer and receiver of the communication; but the delivery of a telegraphic dispatch is the giving to an instrumentality of evidence the knowledge of what that dispatch is, and every man connected with the wire acquires that knowledge, and not merely the parties, as in the case of a letter sealed. Here is the distinction I have taken.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would ask my friend whether the protection given by law to letters sealed is not a protection given to the letter while in the custody of the Government or its agents? There is no such protection to a letter sealed in the hands of a private party. If my friend intrusts me with a letter to deliver to another friend and I should violate that trust so far to open the letter, I would not be subject to the penalty imposed by the law. Therefore it is a protection on the part of the Government that while the letter is in its possion it shall not be opened. That is all there is of it.

Mr. WALLACE. I should grant the Senator's position to be correct if there were a statute of the United States as there is in regard to the opening of letters. It is an argument for the enactment of a statute; but then comes the broad question of public policy as to whether we are to close up this means of evidence, as to whether we are to shut up, as we do in regard to the transmission of letters, all the avenues of communication in regard to this information. The argument may be a good one for the enactment of a statute by Congress; but until it is enacted they stand upon an entirely different footing, it seems to me. Dispatches stand upon the footing of the ordinary instrumentalities of evidence, and where a man receives that information and has it in his possession, it seems to me, as in other cases, he should be required to go into court and produce the knowledge he has. Until the sanctity of the telegraph is declared by statute it seems to me that there is no argument whatever that would protect this individual from divulging that which he has in his possession.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, it seems to me that my friend the Senator from Pennsylvania makes a distinction that really does not exist. I will read again from the same authority which was read by the Senator from New York, Cooley on Constitutional Limitations:

> In Maine it has been decided that a telegraph operator may be compelled to disclose the contents of a message sent by him for another party, and that no rule of public policy would forbid. (State vs. Litchfield, 58 Me., 267.) The case is treated as if no other considerations were involved than those which arise in the ordinary case of a voluntary disclosure by one private person to another without necessity. Such, however, is not the nature of the communication made to the operator of the telegraph. That instrument is used as a means of correspondence, and as a valuable and, in many cases, an indispensable substitute for the postal facilities; and the communication is made, not because the party desires to put the operator in possession of facts, but because transmission without it is impossible.

There is the great point and there is the great necessity why this should be secret. The nature of business is such, the change in the mode of doing business within the last few years is such that this invention of the telegraph has become absolutely necessary, and, therefore, it ought to be protected.

Now, sir, the same information may be contained in letters. I am, say, in the reception of a letter in reference to a lawsuit, in which my friend the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WHYTE] is my antagonist. He is aware that I have received a letter of that character, and, therefore, he asks that that letter be produced in court, and notifies me that if it be not produced then secondary evidence will be given in regard to the contents of that letter although it is a private letter to me and does not belong to the public at all. In this Maine case notice had been given the day before that the person receiving the telegraphic dispatch should introduce that dispatch in evidence. He failed to produce it, and, therefore, the attorneys for the State, for it was a criminal case, claimed that the operator should be compelled to disclose the fact, and the court held, without in my judgment giving the matter a sufficient consideration, that it being a criminal case the testimony should be brought before the court. I think the court erred in that particular. I do not think, on reading of the case, that the law is good law here; it is good law in Maine, of course.

I rose simply to say that in my judgment this whole matter (and I ask the attention of what few Senators there may be here) should go to the Judiciary Committee. Let the Judiciary Committee pass upon this subject, and let us have the authority of that committee before we pass into any new line of evidence. Therefore, if it is in order—I do not know that it is now—I move that this matter before the Senate be referred to the Judiciary Committee for an opinion upon this subject. Perhaps I ought to frame a resolution in connection with the motion; but if the chairman of the committee were here he would understand me. I would have an opinion from the Judiciary Committee how far in the judgment of that committee the Senate of the United States has control over private correspondence by telegraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves the reference of the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am afraid that would practically defeat the resolution. I will state to the Senator from Connecticut that two or three of the committees of this body are practically very much affected by the absence of members on duty remotely away from the city, and also on duty of a pressing character here in the city. I doubt very much whether, if this duty were imposed upon the Judiciary Committee now, it could be performed. I know that the Committee on Finance, and I may as well state it publicly, is now so broken by the detachments that have been either sent abroad or are engaged in the business of establishing some mode of counting the electoral votes here, that we find it difficult and almost impossible to transact public business. I think, for this reason if for no other reason, this reference should not be made to the Judiciary Committee now. I need not go into the composition of that committee to show that it is also interrupted in the same way in the ordinary discharge of its duties by other duties which are considered more pressing.

In this case I agree very much with the Senator from Connecticut that in a general view telegrams ought to be protected except in special cases which ought to be defined by law; but as this case does not seem to be a case of much doubt, as the telegrams here referred to are telegrams connected with the operations and the discharge of the duty of a public officer, I do not know that there is any objection to calling out these telegrams; but there ought to be a law passed which shall define the nature of the testimony which may be brought out, the limits within which it can be called out, and the circumstances or foundation which should be laid before any telegrams could be called for. That is a matter of legislation. I think, therefore, it would be wiser for us, especially as any reference of this kind would only divide us and probably leave us without a quorum, to let this resolution pass, because this case is one in which I suppose no Senator would object to disclosing all the testimony, all the information that can be given upon it. Let this resolution be passed, and let the subject-matter be considered hereafter by the Judiciary Committee as a matter for a law. If we delay it now by referring this particular case to the Judiciary Committee it would probably defeat the object of this inquiry or keep this witness here an unreasonable length of time; and, in the present condition of affairs, the Judiciary Committee probably would not be able to act upon it promptly.

Mr. EATON. I think the reasoning of the Senator from Ohio is conclusive. I had not thought of the condition in which our committees are at this time. Therefore I will withdraw the proposition I made; while I am very clear that I will not vote to make telegrams public at all until after there has been a very thorough examination of this matter by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to refer to the Committee on the Judiciary is withdrawn.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the English cases, I am frank to confess, somewhat misled me in regard to the privileges which a telegraph operator may have to relieve him from disclosing a communication which comes to him in the discharge of his duty; but when we reflect that there has been no legislation whatever making communications to telegraph operators confidential and relieving them from the operation of the general rule of the law of evidence, I cannot for the life of me see why a party who has knowledge of a communication made through a telegraph office cannot be compelled to testify as to the character of that communication. The fact that in the State where his office is there may be a law punishing him for disclosing what passes through the telegraph office where he is located, in no way affects the case, because Congress has by a law given him a protection where it extorts from him the evidence which he has in his possession. The act of Congress, the old act of 1862, re-enacted in the Revised Statutes, protects him entirely from any criminal procedure which may be taken by reason of the divulgence upon his part of any information extracted from him under the pressure of an examination by either House of Congress or a committee of either House. As regards the law of Oregon, it has no application to the case at all. That is intended to protect the senders and receivers of messages from the willful divulgence on the part of the operator of their private business. It has no reference whatever to a case where he is compelled to testify either in a court of law or in a tribunal erected by either House of Congress, such as a committee of the House.

Therefore I cannot for the life of me see why that testimony cannot be reached; but, like all other testimony, it ought to be limited, and no information should be allowed to be extracted from the telegraph operator which is not relevant to the issue inquired of; but wherever it is made to appear that the inquiry is a relevant one, is pertinent to the issue involved in the matter, then a telegraphic operator has no privileged communication whatever which he can hesitate to give up to the inquiring committee. No law can be found justifying any such refusal on his part. Where is the distinction between a telegraphic operator and an expressman? Does anybody for a moment suppose that we cannot send to the express office, as we did in the recent impeachment trial in this Senate Chamber, and require the custodian of receipts, the custodian of packages delivered, to produce the record of them at the bar of the Senate or produce it before a committee? Where is the difference? They are merely agencies for transmitting information in the one case and agencies for transmitting valuable property in the other case. They are mere private corporations connected in no way with the public service, enabled in no way to shield themselves behind that protection of public policy which enables the President or heads of Departments to refuse to give information upon the ground that it is incompatible with the public interests. Do you tell me that simply the agent or guardian of a corporation can shield himself from giving information upon a subject of inquiry by either House of Congress, because he happens to be a telegraph operator and receives money for transmitting over the wires messages from one party to another? In the absence of some law erecting a bulwark around the telegraph operator he is no privileged person who can refuse to obey the order of a committee or the order of either House of Congress when they tell him to deliver information that is material to the public interests.

For this reason, and as this inquiry is limited in its character, I propose to vote for this resolution.

Mr. WRIGHT. I only desire to say now that I shall vote for this resolution for the reason that I understand it to be directed to specific inquiries which the committee have determined are material, and upon a matter that is pending in the Senate; that it is not in the form or shape, nor can it be claimed by possibility to be in the form or shape, of a drag-net inquiry, but that they narrow the inquiry down to specific matters, and that being done, the ground laid, I think, is sufficient. I think in all these matters the material and the only question is whether a sufficient ground has been laid. If that is laid, then I think we have a right to compel the information.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Before the vote is taken I desire to say that I shall vote for the resolution on many grounds; principally because I think there is no reason why the telegraph system should be dignified with the secrecy which is given to the post-office. When it was first originated it was considered as merely an auxiliary to the Post-Office Department under private auspices and in the hands of private individuals. Nobody ever believed at that day that the dispatches to be sent by that system were to be kept secret. It is only recently that this new doctrine is got up in regard to their secrecy and inviolability. It is right to look at the beginning of everything. Every day, upon great constitutional questions we find the lawyers here referring to the fathers of the Revolution and the great men who sat in the constitutional convention and who made the Constitution under which we now live. They give us their speeches and their opinions, and while they have really no legal effect, yet looking upon them as the originators of the Constitution we pay deference to their views as men who are worthy of belief, and who really did give us the government we have. Everybody knows all about the telegraphic system, when it began in the country. In Pennsylvania I recollect, for I remember more about that State than most other places, when the first few individuals asked for an act of incorporation to make a telegraph from Harrisburgh to Reading, I think—it was about fifty miles—we had an excellent man who was our governor, one of the old Dutchmen of that day. He was a sensible man, and he was a prudent and a wise man. In the first place he said that he was opposed to the chartering of any company which should interfere with the mails of the United States, because the United States Government wanted all the revenues of the Post-Office Department for its support. Then he said besides that he did not believe in these blabbing fellows; that the telegraph offices would be in charge of a parcel of fellows—I think he called them—who would not be responsible to anybody at all, and who would tell all the secrets that passed over the wires. He was a sensible man. I do not believe that any man of sense will send any secret over the wires which he is not willing that the whole country should hear. Besides that, if any man is dishonest enough to get up a conspiracy to destroy this Government and trust that secret to the wires, why should he not be exposed? Suppose Governor Hayes had taken it into his head to bribe the people of Oregon and to get those three electoral votes, and he had sent out money for that purpose, and we had the proof in our minds and believed that we could bring the proof to satisfy anybody by discovering the telegrams which had been sent, would that not be doing a good service to the country? If any man who is dishonest would thus become the President of this great country, he is not worthy of the place and he ought to be exposed.

There are hundreds of reasons to my mind why we ought to pass this resolution, at least to throw it into the hands of the ablest lawyers of this body, so that they may make up such a case as will convince the country of the right in the matter. A great deal of this inviolability of the telegraph has come out of a speculation which began some years ago to make the Government the purchaser of the system at a very high price. I am in favor of these companies having all the rights which their charters give to them and no more. If they do wrong, if they carry incendiary messages over their wires, let them be exposed. If they do other wrongs or if they become participators in wrong to the country or to individuals, I would expose them, and I would want their agents as witnesses against them, as I would if a banking-house entered into a combination to cheat its depositors. I would take its clerks and its books and I would expose them to the courts and get out of them such testimony as they produced.

There are many other reasons why I shall vote for this resolution, and I shall vote for everything which will expose anything that has been done wrong in connection with the election for President of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I was very anxious to hear the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, who is not here now, give some explanation of this resolution. We have heard a great deal said about the inviolability of telegrams throughout the length and breadth of the land. I supposed when the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections reported the resolution to the Senate he would be able to give some information in regard to whether the Senate had ever exercised this power heretofore or not. When I propounded the question, no such information was given. On an examination of the impeachment trial of Andrew Johnson, I find that this distinguished body, the Senate of the United States, with the Chief-Justice of the United States presiding over it, brought before it one telegraph operator, a Mr. Charles A. Tinker, I believe it was, and caused him to produce and exhibit before the Senate certain telegrams which had passed between President Johnson and Mr. Parsons, of Alabama. It seems to me certainly that some of the distinguished Senators ought to have been able to refer to that matter as a precedent in the Senate; but still it has not been referred to.

I am decidedly in favor of making both the great political parties, who pretend to be acting in the interest and for the benefit of the people, let the people know what they have been doing in their interest and for their benefit, and I shall vote for the resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRICE, (when Mr. DAVIS'S name was called.) I am requested by my colleage to say that he is absent and is paired with the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. WINDOM.]

Mr. GORDON, (when Mr. NORWOOD'S name was called.) I wish to state that my colleague, on all political questions, is paired with the Senator from Nebraska, [Mr. PADDOCK.] This is not a political question, however, and I do not know how he would vote if here.

Mr. McCREERY, (when Mr. STEVENSON'S name was called.) I am sorry to announce that my colleague, who is usually so prompt in his attention to business, is confined to his home by indisposition. I believe, however, that he is paired with the Senator from Kansas, [Mr. HARVEY.]

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 32, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Clayton, Cockrell, Cragin, Ferry, Gordon, Ingalls, Johnston, Jones of Florida, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Patterson, Price, Randolph, Robertson, Sherman, Spencer, Wallace, Whyte, Withers, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Burnside, and Eaton—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Anthony, Bayard, Blaine, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Frelinghuysen, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—40.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted.

Mr. WHYTE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. Before the Senate adjourns I wish to make a motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have no quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is not a quorum present. The Senator from Maryland moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at two o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, January 5, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. I. L. TOWNSEND.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

BENJAMIN HOLLINGSWORTH.

Mr. SAMPSON, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4308) restoring the name of Benjamin Hollingsworth to the pension-roll; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ABRAHAM ALSTEAD.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4309) increasing the pension of Abraham Alstead, late a second lieutenant of Company A of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPROVEMENT OF SNAKE RIVER.

Mr. JACOBS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4310) for the improvement of the navigation of Snake River, Washington Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ANNA BLAIR LANCASTER.

Mr. KNOTT, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4311) granting a pension to Anna Blair Lancaster, widow of Joseph B. Lancaster, late captain in Dudley's Battalion Kentucky Mounted Volunteers of General McArthur's command in the war of 1812, and also captain of militia in the Florida Seminole war; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

OVERCHARGE ON TONNAGE AND IMPORTS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, by unanimous consent, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4250) to provide remedies for overcharge of duties on tonnage and imports, with amendments; which, with the accompanying report, were ordered to be printed and recommitted.

INDIAN TRUST FUNDS.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, also, from the same committee, reported back a bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment, and moved that the House insist on its amendment disagreed to by the Senate, and agree to the conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the bill and amendment.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is thereby, authorized to deposit in the Treasury of the United States any and all sums now held by him, or which may thereafter be received by him, as Secretary of the Interior and trustee of various Indian tribes, on account of the redemption of United States bonds, or other stocks and securities belonging to the Indian trust fund, whenever he is of the opinion that the best interest of the Indians will be promoted by such deposits, in lieu of investments, and the United States shall pay interest semi-annually, at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of deposit of any and all such sums in the United States Treasury.

The House amended by striking out the word "five" in line 11, and inserting the words "four and a half;" which amendment was disagreed to by the Senate, and a committee of conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I will explain to the House that this is simply a proposition to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to use certain funds belonging to the Indian trust fund by a deposit to the credit of that fund in the Treasury of the United States, and to receive a certain amount of interest. The Senate, as it originally passed the bill, put the rate of interest at 5 per cent. per annum. The House, on the recommendation of its Committee of Ways and Means, reduced the rate of interest to 4½ per cent. per annum. We sent the bill thus amended back to the Senate last summer. The Senate non-concurred in our amendment, and have appointed a committee of conference. The Committee of Ways and Means recommend the appointment of a committee of conference on the part of the House. I move that the House insist upon its amendment to the bill and agree to the committee of conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WOOD, of New York, moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

KENDRICK AND AVIS ET AL.

Mr. TUCKER. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee of Ways and Means, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4155) amending the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I do not object to the report being made, if the bill goes to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot make a conditional objection.

Mr. TUCKER. I think, if I am allowed to give a single word of explanation, I will be able to satisfy the gentleman that there is no necessity for this bill going to the Committee of the Whole. The act of July 28, 1876, of which this is to be an amendment, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to remit——

Mr. CONGER. Before this is considered debate, I desire to reserve the right to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] is proceeding by unanimous consent, the right of objection being reserved.

Mr. TUCKER. The act to which this bill is an amendment authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to remit certain taxes to the parties therein named. The bill passed both Houses on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee of Ways and Means of this House, and of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and was approved by the President. It appears now that the Comptroller of the Treasury construes the word "remit" as not authorizing him to pay back where the taxes proposed to be remitted have been paid; and this amendment to the former act is simply to authorize him to "pay back" where the former act would have permitted him to "remit." That is all.

Mr. CONGER. I think the bill had better go to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan objects, and the bill is not before the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour begins at thirty-four minutes after twelve o'clock, the business of the morning hour being the call of committees for reports of a private nature. The call rests with the Committee on the Judiciary.

There were no reports from the Committee on the Judiciary.

REUBEN J. CHERONING.

Mr. RAINEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3423) granting a pension to Reuben J. Cheroning; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to printed.

TIMOTHY J. HURLBURT.

Mr. RAINEY also, from the same committee, reported back, with an adverse recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 938) for the relief of Timothy J. Hurlburt; and the same was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please postpone his motion for a few moments until the call of committees has gone through. The Chair will then recognize the gentleman to make the motion he has stated.

KENDRICK & AVIS ET AL.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4155) amending the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio.

The question was on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The bill, which was read, is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act of July 28, 1876, entitled "An act for the relief of Kendrick & Avis, Kuner, Zisemann & Zott, Kuner & Zott, all of Saint Louis, Missouri, and Nachtrieb & Co., of Galion, Ohio," be, and the same is hereby, amended by inserting in the third line thereof, after the words "to remit" and before the words "so much," the words "refund and pay back."

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Virginia will have the original act read, so that it may be seen what is the effect of this proposed amendment. The terms are so entirely different that it is impossible, without seeing the context, to tell the effect of the amendment. I hope at least that the gentleman from Virginia will explain the effect of the change of language.

Mr. TUCKER. I have already done so. The original act, passed upon the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to remit certain taxes improperly assessed against these parties. It turns out after the passage of the act that the parties had paid the taxes which the report of the committee and the act of Congress indicated had been improperly assessed. Now the question is whether the parties to whom we agreed these taxes might be remitted may not be paid back when it is shown that the tax has already been paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the date of the act?

Mr. TUCKER. The 28th of July, 1876.

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition is to substitute the words "refund and pay back" for the word "remit?"

Mr. TUCKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. I understand that this amendment was suggested by the Treasury Department. Am I correct in that understanding?

Mr. TUCKER. O, yes; I suppose so.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well; that being the case, I have no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. CONGER. How did that bill come before the House?

The SPEAKER. It comes before the House under the regular call of committees. It is reported by the Committee of Ways and Means, and being of a private nature it is in order. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

Mr. TUCKER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BARBARA MILLER, JOHN S. MILLER, AND WILLIAM H. MILLER.

Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4119) for the relief of Barbara Miller, John S. Miller, and William H. Miller.

The bill was read.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that that bill involves an appropriation of money and must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HANCOCK. I will state to my friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] that, if he will hear the report, I think he will withdraw his objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will sustain the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to say a word upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair then will withhold his decision until the gentleman has been heard.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It may seem harsh and captious for a member to object to a bill of this kind being considered in the House, but the point is this: If we permit every bill which on its face appears to be fair and right to be passed in the House without a reference, while we send every bill from the Committee of Claims and the Committee on War Claims to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, it would be almost impossible to get the House to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar at all, and the favor that would now be extended to the gentleman from Texas would be a denial of justice to other claimants whose cases are referred to the Committee on the state of the Union. That is the reason why we object to the passage of these bills in the House.

Mr. HANCOCK. I do not ask that any favor be extended to me; but, if the gentleman will hear the report read, I think he will see that this is a mere matter connected with the adjustment of accounts with the Treasury Department, and it ought to be passed at an early day.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I must insist on the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. There are a large number of claims which ought to be passed, but which are referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

LEMUEL D. EVANS.

Mr. HANCOCK, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 3141) for the relief of Lemuel D. Evans, with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order upon that bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HANCOCK. The point of order is well taken; but I did not propose to ask the House to pass the bill without reference.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; this being objection day.

Mr. FOSTER. The House has made the deficiency bill the special order for to-day after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has not yet expired, and the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee is manifestly in order.

JAMES ATKINS.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1040) to authorize sundry allowances to James Atkins, late collector of internal revenue for the fourth district of Georgia, in the settlement of his accounts was taken from the Speaker's table, read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, with the accompanying papers, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4120) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1878, with the amendment of the Senate thereto, with a recommendation that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendment of the Senate was read and agreed to, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the words "Secretary of the Interior," insert the following: "Which shall be stated in the annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions hereafter, and he shall report the total of annual amounts paid for additions, and also the reductions in the annual pension-rolls."

Mr. ATKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. The morning hour having not expired, the gentleman from Tennessee has no right to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] will be recognized after the morning hour expires. The Chair is of the opinion that it is competent for the House, the call of committees having been gone over without occupying the entire hour, to entertain and adopt the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee to go into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER. And when the hour is reached the committee will have to rise?

The SPEAKER. If the committee so determine.

Mr. FOSTER. Then I will move an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that he rely upon the good faith of the House to see that the special order is not interrupted.

HOT SPRINGS RESERVATION.

Mr. GAUSE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 3494, a bill (H. R. No. 4312) authorizing the sale and disposition of the Hot Springs reservation in the State of Arkansas, and for other purposes; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now insist upon my motion.

The question was taken on Mr. BRIGHT'S motion, and it was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, (Mr. HOOKER in the chair.)

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar. This being objection day, the Clerk will report the bills on the Calendar, commencing at the point reached on last objection day.

THOMAS HUNTER.

The first business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2601) authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to issue a land-warrant to Thomas Hunter, a soldier of the war of 1812, in lieu of one lost.

The bill directs the Commissioner of Pensions to issue a land-warrant for one hundred and sixty acres of land to Thomas Hunter, of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, a soldier of the war of 1812; a warrant having issued to said Thomas Hunter, and, after being located, a patent was issued on March 24, 1824, and was lost in the mails, and pending the search therefor the land was sold for taxes.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES B. GILLESPIE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3406) granting a pension to James B. Gillespie, late captain of Company I, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Illinois Infantry Volunteers.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James B. Gillespie, late captain of Company I, in the One hundred and twentieth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, to take effect from and after the passage of the act.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

CHARLES L. RUGG.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3582) granting a pension to Charles L. Rugg, late first lieutenant of Company D, Sixth Indiana Cavalry.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles L. Rugg, late first lieutenant of Company D, Sixth Indiana Cavalry.

Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2362) granting pension to Charles L. Rugg, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The evidence shows that the said Rugg was mustered into the service of the United States as first lieutenant Company D, Sixth Indiana Cavalry, March 16, 1864, and was honorably discharged September 15, 1865. It further appears from the evidence that he was captured some time in August, 1864, in Georgia, and was imprisoned in Columbia, South Carolina, and was paroled in April, 1865. He alleges that while a prisoner as aforesaid, from exposure, he contracted nervous fever, which finally resulted in spinal paralysis, which has rendered him totally unfit for manual labor. The evidence submitted, if it is to be believed, and the committee see no reason why it should not be believed, clearly establishes the facts as alleged by the said Rugg. He has been examined on three different occasions by the medical board of examiners at Cincinnati, Ohio, and upon each examination the board expresses the opinion that his disability did originate in the service, and that disability is total and permanent.

The committee, therefore, are of opinion that said Rugg is entitled to a pension, and they report a substitute for said House bill 2362, and recommend that said substitute do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

FREDERICK W. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3583) granting a pension to Frederick W. Smith.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Frederick W. Smith, late a private in Company G, Fourth Ohio Cavalry.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 301) granting a pension to Frederick W. Smith, have had the same under consideration and submit the following report:

There is but one question involved in this case, which, if answered in the affirmative, will entitle the soldier to his pension.

Is a soldier entitled who absents himself temporarily for a few hours, by permission of his company's commanding officer, for the purpose of foraging for provisions for himself and comrades, and who is captured by the enemy, without fault or neglect upon his part, and who is imprisoned, and while so imprisoned contracts disease from exposure incident to such imprisonment, which renders him totally incapable of performing manual labor, and which is permanent and incurable?

The committee are of opinion that this question should be answered in the affirmative.

They therefore report a substitute for said House bill and recommend that said substitute do pass.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM ABENDROTH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3584) granting a pension to William Abendroth.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Abendroth, as a dependent father upon his minor son, Louis A. Abendroth, late a private soldier in Company L, Third New York Cavalry.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

NICHOLAS WHITEHALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3181) for the relief of Nicholas Whitehall, of Fountain County, Indiana.

The bill being objected to by Mr. SAMPSON, it was passed over.

W. P. BURWELL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3588) for the relief of W. P. Burwell.

The bill being objected to by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, it was passed over.

GEORGE A. ARMES.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3634) for the restoration of George A. Armes, with the rank of captain, to the cavalry arm of the service, in the army of the United States.

Mr. CONGER called for the reading of the report, and it was read.

Objection being made to the bill by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, it was passed over.

OLD DOMINION STEAMSHIP COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3198) for the relief of the Old Dominion Steamship Company.

The bill being objected to by Mr. CONGER, it was passed over.

REMOVAL OF OBSTRUCTIONS IN OHIO RIVER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1636) to re-imburse certain citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, for moneys paid to remove obstructions in the Ohio River.

The bill being objected to by Mr. EDEN, it was passed over.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSISSIPPI AT MEMPHIS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R No. 1741) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi at Memphis, Tennessee.

The bill being objected to by Mr. CONGER, it was passed over.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. The time which the morning hour would have run is now expired. I move that the committee rise and report to the House, in order that I may be able to submit a motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill reported on yesterday from the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion of Mr. FOSTER was not agreed to; upon a division there were—ayes 55, noes 69.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not a quorum.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We are not compelled to have a quorum to determine a motion that the committee rise; but if the point is insisted upon the roll must be called.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point is insisted upon the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not insist upon the point.

CHARLES W. BUTTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 433) to pay to Charles W. Button the costs of advertising property levied on by the collector of United States internal revenue in the fifth district of the State of Virginia.

The bill being objected to by Mr. CONGER, it was passed over.

CHARLES B. ROBERTS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1434) for the relief of Charles B. Roberts.

The bill being objected to by Mr. CONGER, it was passed over.

LOUISVILLE BAPTIST ORPHANS' HOME.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. No. 259) for the benefit of the Louisville Baptist Orphans' Home.

Mr. CONGER. I object to that bill.

Mr. WATTERSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion is not in order.

Mr. WATTERSON. This is a matter involving simply——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. Objection being made, the bill will be passed over.

HEIRS OF DANIEL CARROLL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3679) to ascertain the interest of the heirs of Daniel Carroll, of Duddington, in certain real estate in the city of Washington, and to secure the conveyance of the same to the United States.

The bill was read.

Mr. STONE. I object to this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no report.

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. STONE] will allow a short explanation——

Mr. STONE. I object to debate.

The bill was accordingly passed over.

G. W. SAMPSON AND BENJAMIN HENRICKS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3609) for the relief of George W. Sampson and Benjamin Henricks, of Austin, Texas.

(Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Pennsylvania.)

WILLIAM C. O'BRIEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3680) for the relief of William C. O'Brien.

The bill and report were read.

(Objection was made by Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, who subsequently withdrew the objection; when Mr. STONE renewed it.)

B. B. CONNOR & BROTHER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3681) for the relief of B. B. Connor & Brother.

The bill was read. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to refund and pay to B. B. Connor & Brother, now of Louisville, Kentucky, surviving partners of the late firm of B. B. Connor, Brother & Swan, of Nashville, Tennessee, $4,420.32, net proceeds paid into the Treasury from sale of one hundred and seventy tierces and one hundred and twenty barrels of lard, shipped by them March 24, 1862, from Nashville to Louisville without a permit, in ignorant violation of law and trade regulations, and seized, libeled, and sold by the United States, the same having been so shipped after due inquiry without willful negligence or intent to violate any law or trade regulations; and for that purpose the sum of $4,420.32 is appropriated.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it pass.

MRS. LUCIE A. JAMESON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1705) for the relief of Mrs. Lucie A. Jameson, of Memphis, Tennessee.

(Objected to by Mr. LAWRENCE.)

Mr. BRIGHT. As the hour of two o'clock to-day was set by the House for special business, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HOOKER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar had directed him to report certain bills with a recommendation that they be passed.

RECUSANT WITNESS—E. W. BARNES.

The SPEAKER. The hour of two o'clock to-day, which has now arrived, was fixed by order of the House for the presentation at the bar of the House by the Sergeant-at-Arms of the witness E. W. Barnes. The Sergeant-at-Arms will now present the witness.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House having in his custody Mr. E. W. Barnes, who was accompanied by his counsel.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Barnes, it is the duty of the Chair to ask you what excuse you have to offer for your failure to produce before the committee of this House sitting at New Orleans, on the 18th of December, 1876, or thereabouts, certain telegrams called for by subpœna duly served upon you. The Chair desires to suggest to the House that in his opinion any reply which the witness may make should be in writing and under oath. But the Chair will, if necessary, submit that question to the House.

Mr. BARNES, (the witness.) Being inexperienced in such matters I should have asked to be heard by counsel except that I am informed that the precedent in the case of Kilbourn would prevent the granting of that request. I therefore ask that, in accordance with the precedent in that case, my written answer, which has been prepared by my counsel, Messrs. Hubley Ashton and Grosvenor P. Lowrey, may be read by the Clerk.

The SPEAKER. The witness desires that his answer may be read by the Clerk. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUCKNER. I wish to ask whether this answer is under oath. I agree with the Speaker that it should be under oath.

Mr. BARNES, (the witness.) The answer is under oath, duly attested.

The SPEAKER. The witness states that his reply is in writing and under oath.

Mr. CONGER. Lest the remark of the Chair and the answer to the question put by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] should be taken as a precedent requiring that witnesses brought before the bar of this House to answer for contempt shall make answer under oath, I object to this being taken as a precedent of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair merely made a suggestion (which, however, was in accordance with examples found in congressional proceedings) that the answer be in writing and under oath. The fact of there being such precedents was the reason the Chair made his suggestion.

Mr. KASSON. I believe the precedents are not uniform.

Mr. CONGER. I protest against such a rule being established in this case as a precedent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only made a suggestion, subject of course to the action of the House; but, as the Chair will state again, the suggestion was made because he found that such had been the practice, and there seemed to be good reason for conforming to it.

Mr. KASSON. The Chair does not understand that the precedents are uniform.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not state they were all the same, but from those he has had the opportunity of reviewing, the Chair does state that in his judgment the better and most valuable practice is shown in those cases which indicate the reply was in writing and under oath, and such practice he thinks should be followed.

Mr. KASSON. I understand it may vary according to the peculiar character of the case, and that where it relates to the fact upon which the contempt is based and the fact is denied, it should then properly be under oath; but not as a uniform rule, as there is no uniform precedent of the House. I only wish to say that much.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not stated there was. He again states it was only a suggestion of his to the House. It seems the witness has complied with that view of the case and submitted his reply in writing and under oath.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to say that I agree entirely with the Chair's view, that the answer should be under oath so far as it relates to the facts. All facts answered by the witness should be under oath, but the witness may wish to plead his constitutional rights, and to that end may make an argument before the House, and I think all would admit that it would be a little rough for any of us to be compelled to swear to all of our arguments. [Laughter.] Therefore we ought not to require the witness to do any such thing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can sympathize with the gentleman from Ohio. [Renewed laughter.] The Clerk will now read the answer of the witness, which he submits in writing and under oath.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable the House of Representatives:

I have been brought from my home in New Orleans against my will and am held in custody by the Sergeant-at-Arms under the terms of a resolution of this honorable House, as follows:

"Resolved, That the Speaker of this House issue a warrant under his hand and the seal of the House of Representatives, directing the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, either by himself or his special deputy, to arrest and bring to the bar of the House without delay E. W. Barnes, to answer for a contempt of the authority of this House and a breach of its privileges in refusing to produce to the special committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, now sitting in the city of New Orleans, certain telegraphic dispatches, in obedience to a subpœna duces tecum, served on him on the 13th day of December, 1876, and to be dealt with as the law under the facts may require."

I respectfully protest, under the advice of my counsel, that the terms employed by the honorable Speaker of the House at the time of my arraignment, to wit, that I am "alleged to be in contempt of the privileges of this House, in that he (meaning me) refused to bring before a committee of this House, sitting in New Orleans, certain telegrams which said committee made demand for him for," were erroneous, and that I am under no charge or allegation of contempt except the allegation contained in the resolution of this House above quoted, and which charges me with contempt only as having disobeyed a subpœna served on me on December 13, 1876.

I have never received or been notified of any order or direction of this House or any committee thereof, or any subpœna or other process relating to the investigation referred to in the above-quoted resolution, or the production of the telegraphic messages described below, except a paper handed to me on the 13th of December, and referred to in said resolution. I have had no communication with or direction from said committee, except such as is set forth in the report of the said committee to the House under date of New Orleans, December 20, 1876, which report, except as to some matters not material to my personal defense, as I am advised, correctly gives all that has occurred between me and said committee and which I deem it important to incorporate in my answer for the better recollection of the House and for a perfect understanding of the corrections which I desire to make in the statement of my evidence.

NEW ORLEANS, December 20, 1876.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I have the honor to communicate the inclosed record of proceedings in the case of E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company in this city, a recusant witness.

WM. R. MORRISON,
Chairman of Louisiana Affairs Special Committee.

* * * * * * *

The committee caused a subpœna duces tecum to be issued and duly served on one E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New Orleans, Louisiana. Said subpœna is in the words and figures following, to wit:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the United States of America.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon E. W. Barnes, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company at New Orleans, Louisiana, to be and appear before the Louisiana affairs special committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, and with you bring all telegrams sent or received by William Pitt Kellogg, S. B. Packard, John F. Casey, J. R. G. Pittkin, Henry C. Dibble, H. C. Warmoth, George W. Carter, and General Augur at the office of the Western Union Telegraph Company, New Orleans, from and after the 15th day of August, 1876, in their chamber in the city of New Orleans, Saint Charles Hotel, forthwith, then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee. Herein fail not, and make return of this summons.

Witness my hand and the seal of the House of Representatives of the United States, at the city of Washington, this 13th day of December, 1876.

[SEAL] SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker.
Attest:

GEORGE M. ADAMS, Clerk.

The return indorsed on the foregoing is in words and figures as follows, to wit:

Served personally with a copy of the within at one and one-half o'clock p. m., December 13, 1876.

JOHN G. THOMPSON,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

By J. W. POLK,
Special Messenger.

NEW ORLEANS, December 18, 1876.

Committee met at eleven o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment. Present, the chairman, Mr. MORRISON, Messrs. JENKS, MCMAHON, BLACKBURN, MEADE, PHELPS, NEW, ROSS, BEEBE, TOWNSEND, DANFORD, HURLBUT, CRAPO, and JOYCE.

Said E. W. BARNES appeared as a witness before the committee on the 18th day of December, 1876, and, after being duly sworn according to law, was interrogated as follows:

By Mr. MORRISON:

Question. Where do you reside?

Answer. In New Orleans.

Q. How long have you resided there?

A. Two years at the present time, but I have lived here before about ten or twelve years.

Q. What is your occupation?

A. Manager of the Western Union Telegraph office in this city.

Q. Have you been subpœnaed to appear here before the committee?

A. I have.

Q. Have you a copy of the subpœna with you?

A. I have. [Witness produced copy of subpœna.]

Q. Have you in your possession any dispatches sent by or received by the persons named in this subpœna?

A. I presume I have some.

Q. In relation to the late election or the counting of the votes?

A. I am not in the habit of reading all of them, but there have been dispatches sent during the canvass to these persons.

Q. In relation to the election and counting of votes for presidential electors?

A. I cannot speak as to the contents of the telegrams. It is very seldom that I read them.

Q. As a matter of fact, have you not looked over them since you were subpœnaed?

A. No, sir; I have not looked over them.

Q. You say you have knowledge that telegrams have passed, and from some of these parties, concerning the election?

A. I assume that there is; but I have no personal knowledge.

Q. You may state to the committee whether it is true, after you were subpœnaed, that you made any arrangement about producing these dispatches; and, if so, with whom, and what it was.

A. I had an interview with you after being subpœnaed. A sergeant-at-arms called on me and asked me to see the chairman at seven o'clock and speak to him in regard to it, which I did. I introduced myself and asked what he wished. He told me he wished copies of the dispatches mentioned in the subpœna. I think I told him it was great labor to get them and our employés were very busy and we could not well take them off for this purpose, but that I could engage others. He asked me what it would cost. I said probably it would cost $30. He said he had no money appropriated for that purpose, but that it was an object to get them quickly, and he thought the committee would agree to expend the $30, and asked me what time I thought I could get them, and told him by Monday next. That is to-day. I mentioned that in these cases we always resisted an order to produce telegrams as far as we could. I had had no communication from the company at that time in regard to the matter.

Q. State whether, as a matter of fact, you did not promise me upon my agreeing to pay the expenses that you would furnish the dispatches to-day?

A. No, sir; I did not understand it so.

Q. Was not the agreement made that I was to pay expenses; that you would put on clerks, and furnish them to-day?

A. I did not understand it so. So far as I understand the matter I had telegraphed our company that such demand had been made, and at seven o'clock I had not received an answer, and I did not know whether I would be prevented from producing these dispatches or not; but I was careful in my mind not to say anything only what I could do and not what I would do.

Q. Did not you agree that I was to pay the expenses?

A. If you would pay the expenses that I could furnish them, not that I would. I had no power, without instructions, to furnish them, and we always try to evade these demands upon the telegraph office.

Q. You did not tell me that you would not furnish them to-day?

A. No, sir; I could not have told you, for I had to get the power myself from the company.

Q. You did not say anything about that to me?

A. No, sir; I had telegraphed to the company, but not received an answer up to seven o'clock that evening.

Q. Have you any of these dispatches with you?

A. No. With me? No, sir.

Q. Have you been instructed by the president of the company not to deliver them?

A. Yes, sir; not directly by the president, but by our general superintendent.

Q. Are your instructions similar to this? [Letter shown witness from President Orton, of Western Union Telegraph Company, to the chairman.]

A. I should have acted on these instructions, without any others, on this letter to you.

Q. Have you any?

A. I have only instructions from Mr. Orton to do nothing in the matter; that Mr. Orton would relieve me from all responsibility.

Q. Your instructions from Mr. Orton are not to produce the messages?

A. I understand that is my instructions from Mr. Van Horne, the division superintendent. I consider these instructions confirmed by this message to you.

Q. Then you refuse to produce these telegrams?

A. Yes, sir; I must do so according to my instructions.

Q. What did you say was the name of the division superintendent?

A. Mr. Van Horne.

Q. Where does he reside?

A. In New York.

Q. You say this is the notice you received to appear, the subpœna?

A. Yes, sir; this is the one.

Q. You answer that you were subpœnaed to appear and produce telegrams sent by and received by parties named in this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether William Pitt Kellogg is named in this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. S. B. Packard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. J. R. G. Pittkin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Henry C. Dibble?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. H. C. Warmoth and others?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You now still refuse to produce the telegrams?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. (By Mr. HURLBUT.) I understand you were served with a subpœna. At what time?

A. At about two o'clock on the 15th.

Q. Did you report the fact of such service to your superior?

A. I did.

Q. Have you instructions from your superior officers in the telegraph company not to furnish the messages?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any written instructions, any formal instructions?

A. I have no other instructions than what I have mentioned.

Q. Telegraphic instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of that instruction?

A. No, sir; but that is the purport of it, a dispatch from Mr. Orton saying he would assume the responsibility.

The subpœna referred to in the resolution of the House, and which was in the hands of the committee at the time of my examination and interrogation thereon, is correctly set out in said report.

I respectfully protest, under the advice of counsel, that the said paper is not in form or substance a subpœna to me or to any one, except it be to John G. Thompson, named therein; and that said paper is not in any sense an order or direction of this House which could be the subject of obedience or disobedience by me, the same not being directed to me, and I respectfully submit to this honorable House whether said paper or anything contained in or done under it can rightfully be made the ground for inflicting upon me a penalty for contempt of the authority of this honorable House, or a breach of its privileges, in refusing, as charged by said above-quoted resolution, to produce any telegraphic message in obedience to such subpœna.

If this honorable House should deem it just to require me to show any further cause why I should not be adjudged in contempt of its authority, I desire to present a statement of the facts and matters of law upon which I am advised I am legally entitled to be discharged from my present arrest.

Before stating the facts, I respectfully request this honorable House, before involving me in the consequences of a conviction for willful contempt of its authority, and while considering the facts which I shall state, to weigh well the recent judgment of one of the most eminent of the living judges and jurists of America against the right or power even of the judicial tribunals of the country to compel the production of telegraphic messages under the writ of subpœna.

Judge Cooley, in the last edition of his work on Constitutional Limitations, under the head of the constitutional protection of the citizen against unreasonable searches and seizures, declares his solemn judgment that the agents of the telegraph cannot lawfully be compelled to produce the messages confided to them for transmission over their wires under a subpœna duces tecum, and clearly and emphatically expresses his opinion that certain decisions of some of the State courts, affirming their power to require the production of such messages, are founded upon erroneous doctrines and unsound reasoning.

Speaking of one of those decisions, in the supreme court of Maine, in which it is said that no rules of public policy forbid the courts from exercising this power, Judge Cooley says:

"The case is treated as if no other considerations were involved than those which arise in the ordinary case of a voluntary disclosure by one private person to another without necessity. Such, however, is not the nature of the communication made to the operator of the telegraph. That instrument is used as a means of correspondence and as a valuable and, in many cases, an indispensable substitute for the postal facilities, and the communication is made, not because the party desires to put the operator in possession of facts, but because transmission without it is impossible. It is not voluntary in any other sense than this, that the party makes it rather than deprive himself of the benefit of this great invention and improvement. The reasons of a public nature for maintaining the secrecy of telegraphic communication are the same with those which protect correspondence by mail; and, though the operator is not a public officer, that circumstance appears to us immaterial. He fulfills an important public function, and the propriety of his preserving inviolable secrecy in regard to communications is so obvious that it is common to provide statutory penalties for disclosures. If on grounds of public policy the operator should not voluntarily disclose, why do not the same considerations forbid the courts compelling him to do so? Or, if it be proper to make him testify to the correspondence by telegraph, what good reason can be given why the postmaster should not be made subject to the process of subpœna for a like purpose, and compelled to bring the correspondence which passes through his hands into court, and open it for the purposes of evidence? We must maintain the opinion, notwithstanding the decision of so eminent a tribunal, that the public are not entitled to a man's private correspondence, whether obtainable by seizing it in the mails, or by compelling the operator of the telegraph to testify to it, or by requiring his servants to take from his desks his private letters and journals and bring them into court on subpœna duces tecum. Any such compulsory process to obtain it would be nothing short of a most arbitrary and unjustifiable seizure of private papers, such an 'unreasonable seizure' as is directly condemned by the Constitution."—Cooley's Constitutional Limitations, third edition, 1874, pages 306, 307.

The general rules of the Western Union Telegraph Company, by whom I was employed for the preservation of the confidence reposed in them by the public using their facilities for telegraphic intercourse, are based, as I have always understood, upon the spirit of the doctrine, founded on public policy, declared in the foregoing citation from Judge Cooley's work.

The rules and instructions promulgated for the information and guidance of the employés of the company provided as follows:

"92. All managers and other employés are strictly prohibited from furnishing copies of original messages or from certifying to the correctness of any message, or copy thereof, whether sent or received.

"93. When the sender or receiver of a message applies in person he will, if known or properly identified, be permitted to see or make a copy of his dispatch for himself. When the application is in writing the signature must be indentified as the genuine signature of the person or firm who sent it, precisely as if it were the signature of a bank check or draft. In no other case will such permission be allowed without the order of the executive officer.

"94. No original message or duplicate of a received message will be permitted to leave the possession of the company except by authority of an executive officer. Whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed to produce messages in court or before commissioners, he will notify the secretary of the company at once by telegraph for instructions."

The ninety-fourth rule, above mentioned, was modified in 1873, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH COMPANY,
New York, May 2, 1873.

Executive Order No. 147.

Rule 94 is hereby modified as follows:

No original sent message or duplicate of a received message will be allowed to pass out of the possession of the company except by authority of an executive officer.

Whenever a manager or other employé is subpœnaed on the part of the sender or receiver of a message to produce it before a court or other legal tribunal, he will comply with the subpœna and afterward return the message to the files. When subpœnaed by any other party than the sender or receiver, he will take the message into court and submit to the judge that he ought not to produce it, the communication being privileged, and that he cannot do so unless a rule of the court is entered requiring it. If such rule is entered the manager must obey it, asking the clerk to give him a copy of the rule and message.

The subpœna and other papers in connection therewith should be retained on file with the message to which they relate.

WILLIAM ORTON, President.

I deemed it my duty, under the foregoing rules and instructions of the company, as soon as I received the paper served on me on the 13th of December, which I supposed, without careful examination, to be a subpœna with a clause of duces tecum requiring me to produce before Mr. MORRISON'S committee all telegraphic dispatches which might have been sent from or received at the New Orleans office by the eight persons named therein, to apprise my superintendent of the fact of such service and to ask for instructions.

It did not appear to me that the executive order No. 147, above mentioned, applied to the case presented by the supposed subpœna duces tecum in question. I had never received a subpœna for the production of a message before an investigating committee of either House of Congress; and, besides, the terms and scope of the paper served on me seemed to be very different from those of any subpœna I had ever been served with for the production of messages before a court, inasmuch as it called for the production of all messages received or sent by a considerable number of persons during a period of nearly four months. I had never been served by any court with a subpœna so broad and general in its terms and effect.

There was another reason why I deemed it conformable to my duty to notify the company of the service of this paper upon me. Some time previous I had received instructions from my superintendent to ship to him all my business for November and December, 1876, and I had in conformity with those instructions sent to him all business in my office from the 1st of November to the 6th of December, 1876, inclusive.

No messages, therefore, sent from or received at the New Orleans office after the 31st of October, 1876, were in the files of that office on the 13th of December, 1876, when I was served with the paper purporting to be a subpœna duces tecum of the House.

Under these circumstances and for these reasons, as I have stated, I telegraphed on the 13th of December to my superintendent, Mr. Merriwether, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, 13 December, 1876.

To C. G. M., Superintendent, Mobile:

I am subpœnaed to produce all messages sent and received by W. P. Kellogg and others, from and after 15th August, by congressional committee. Had I better produce as far as in my possession, leaving those not, for further inquiry, if it has to be done?

E. W. BARNES.

On the 14th of December, 1876, I received a dispatch from Mr. Merriwether as follows:

MOBILE, 14, 1876.
(Received at 9.16 a. m., December 14.)

To E. W. BARNES,
Manager, New Orleans:

The following received last night. "New York, 13. To C. G. Merriwether, superintendent: Tell Barnes to do nothing until further orders, which will probably be sent him to-morrow. Ask him to give the other names mentioned in the subpœna besides Governor Kellogg's. Jno. Van Horne, general superintendent."

Give me other names mentioned in subpœna besides Governor Kellogg. Answer.

C. G. MERRIWETHER,
Superintendent.

On the 15th of December, 1876, I received from Mr. Merriwether the following dispatch:

MOBILE, 15, 1876.
(Received at 9.55 a. m., December 15.)

To E. W. BARNES, Manager:

The following received: "New York, 14. Superintendent Merriwether, Mobile: The company has decided to decline to surrender the political messages of either party to investigating committees. Mr. Barnes will be relieved of all responsibility in the matter by a message from Mr. Orton to Mr. MORRISON to-morrow. Jno. Van Horne, general superintendent."

C. G. MERRIWETHER,
Superintendent.

On the same day, the 15th of December, 1876, I received, by telegraph from New York, a communication signed William Orton, and addressed to Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, which I delivered personally. This communication appears to be copied in the report of Mr. MORRISON to the House upon my case.

On the 13th of December, 1876, I was informed by the person handing me the subpœna that Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON, chairman of the committee, desired to see me, and I accordingly waited upon him.

Mr. MORRISON asked me when I could furnish those messages.

I informed him that the search would take some time and would require finding all the messages of the parties named.

Mr. MORRISON said, "We only need the campaign messages."

I informed him that I had no clerks whom I could employ for the examination of this great mass of business, and that I must employ strangers, if it was done at all, and that I could not take the responsibility of determining what were or what were not political or campaign messages.

Mr. MORRISON offered to send clerks for the purpose of searching the files, which proposal I declined, or to pay the expense of searching.

I did not promise him that I would make or direct any search, for I was then awaiting instructions from my employers.

The instructions I afterward received are presented above.

On the 18th of December I was requested by a messenger to go before the committee. I complied, and was sworn for the first time.

I testified before the committee substantially as stated in the extract from the report of the committee to the House, presented at the beginning of this answer, except that I did not say that I had received instructions from Mr. Orton, and except that I did not intend to be understood, as an uninstructed layman, to express any opinion as to the character or effect of the paper served upon me, and which was at that moment in the hands of the gentleman who interrogated me.

I have already stated that before the 13th of December, the day on which I was served with the subpœna, all messages sent from or received at New Orleans from the 1st of November to the 6th of December, inclusive, had been sent by direction of my superintendent, Mr. Merriwether, to Mobile; and such messages have never since that time been in my possession, or under my control.

It is proper for me to state to this honorable House that I have no knowledge whatever that any messages were sent or received at any time at the New Orleans office by William Pitt Kellogg, S. B. Packard, John F. Casey, J. R. G. Pittkin, Henry C. Dibble, H. C. Warmoth, George W. Carter, or General Augur, never having to my recollection seen any such messages; but I believe that such messages were so sent or so received by said Kellogg, Packard, Pittkin, and Augur, because each of those persons had monthly accounts at my office and I had occasion as manager to settle such accounts and receive money thereon during more or less, of the period between August and December, 1876, and I know no reason to doubt that whatever messages were thus paid for during the months of August, September, and October were in my office on the 13th of December, but filed away with a mass of other messages so great that much labor, time, and expense would have been required to find them.

Under the rules and instructions received from my employers I did not believe that the legal possession and control of the messages described in the subpœna, if any of them remained in the files of the New Orleans office, resided in me as a subordinate employé, and I sincerely and honestly believed that under those rules and instructions I should be guilty of a palpable breach of duty and an actual trespass if I should undertake to rummage for them among the files and carry them away from the place where they were deposited without the permission of the competent authority of the company.

I am advised and most respectfully submit to the House that this was a correct view of my duty and liability in the premises of the situation as it was presented to me upon the service of the subpœna, under the settled law of England and this country applicable to the case.

(See the decisions of Lord Kenyon in Miles vs. Dawson, 1 Espinasse, 405, and Baleson vs. Hartsink, 4 Espinasse, 43; Austin vs. Evans, 2 Manning and Granger, 430; Attorney-General vs. Wilson, 9 Simons, 529, and many other cases, including the matter of opening letters in the London post-office reported in the Law Journal, volume 33, old series, 1845, page 248.)

I have already submitted to the House that no subpœna duces tecum was ever served upon me requiring me to produce telegraphic dispatches to the committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, and that I cannot therefore be adjudged guilty of a contempt of the authority of this honorable House and of a breach of its privileges for a disobedience of its process in refusing to produce such messages.

I am further advised that this honorable House could not justly or lawfully adjudge me in contempt of its authority for refusing to comply with the requirement of a subpœna duces tecum purporting to command me to produce before a committee all messages, or all campaign or political messages, sent or received by one or more individuals during a period of four months.

I am instructed that a judicial or other subpœna couched in such general and sweeping terms would be in legal effect a general warrant, within the prohibition of the fourth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and subject to the condemnation of the great principles of personal liberty and private right established for all freemen of the Anglo-Saxon race by the celebrated judgments of Lord Camden in Wilkes's case, and the case of Entick vs. Carrington, (2 Wilson's Reports, 151, 275.)

I am further advised by my counsel that no judicial tribunal proceeding in due course of law would compel a witness to obey a subpœna duces tecum in such general form as I have mentioned; and that such attempts have often been condemned in the highest courts as efforts to abuse and prostitute the administration of justice by turning such subpœnas into bills of discovery. (Attorney-General vs. Wilson, 9 Simons, 528, 529; Lee vs. Angas, Law Reports, 2 Equity, page 63.)

In further defense, and assuming that in the judgment of the House I am not fully excused and justified by the considerations foregoing, I respectfully submit: That I am in the employment of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and reside in the State of Louisiana, in which State said company has an office, and within which State said subpœna, if it is binding upon me at all, required me to reveal or make public the certain dispatches therein mentioned, if such exist. That by the revised statutes of Louisiana, (1870,) page 731, section 3763, it is provided as follows:

"Any operator, clerk, director, messenger, or other person in the employ of any telegraph company having an office or station in this State * * * who shall reveal, make use of, or make public any dispatch or message, shall, on conviction, be fined not less than $50, nor more than $1,000, * * * and for the second offense shall be imprisoned." * * * *

I am advised by my counsel, and respectfully submit, that the production of one message and the revealing or making public the same to the committee of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman would have constituted the first offense contemplated by the statute, and would have subjected me to the payment of a fine as by such statute prescribed, and that the similar revelation or publishing of any other message to said committee would have subjected me to the penalty of imprisonment, as for a second offense, unless there exists in this House some power which has been properly exercised to nullify or suspend for the time being statutes of Louisiana, or to clothe me with some secure immunity from their general operation. I am advised and respectfullly submit, that no such power exists in the Congress of the United States, even directly by a formal enactment, duly passed by both Houses and signed by the President, and much less in either House acting alone and indirectly, to abrogate, suspend, or qualify the operation of said statutes; or to compel any citizen to violate the same; or to give any dispensation or indulgence for such violation; or to restrain any court from entertaining, or any private person or public official of the State from prosecutions for such violation; or in the slightest degree to shield or indemnify any person convicted from the fullest infliction of the penalties prescribed.

I am advised and respectfully submit, that there is no analogy between the enforced production of such messages under the subpœna of a court of law and such enforced production under the subpœna of this House. That this House, though a part of the supreme law-making power of the land when acting as a branch of Congress upon subjects confided to it by the Constitution, is alien to the administration of justice in the States touching such matters as crimes and misdemeanors under State statutes, and is as powerless to intervene therein as would be the State government of another State. That while it may be competent for a State court of Louisiana to interpret the statute in question so as to require and justify a telegraph manager to reveal a dispatch, thus establishing an interpretation of that law binding upon all courts and persons, this is because the people of Louisiana have delegated to their State courts that power of interpretation; but that the people of that State have not confided to this House of Representatives such or any similar power. That if it is within the power of Congress, or a branch thereof, directly or indirectly, to abrogate or authorize the violation of one law of one State by one citizen, it has like power in respect to all the laws of all the States and all the citizens thereof. That the successful assertion of this power would effectually break down all limits between Federal and State jurisdiction, and in cases not now possible to be foreseen might come to be used so as to entirely destroy the powers of the States over matters of purely domestic concern.

So far as I am advised there has been no interpretation of this statute by the courts of Louisiana, and I submit that it is not in the power of this House to foresee or make sure that said statute will not be strictly enforced according to its terms, without allowing it as any excuse for such violation that it was done under authority of this House.

Whatever may be the opinion of this House of its right to the production of such messages by me, it certainly cannot be considered as a punishable contempt that I am unwilling to subject myself helplessly to these chances under what must be allowed to be at least reasonable doubt of that right, and of the power of the House to protect me from such consequences as may in fact ensue.

It is a universal principle of justice that a witness even under a subpœna ad testificandum, is not compellable to answer when it reasonably appears that the answer will have a tendency to expose him to a penal liability, or to any kind of punishment, or to a criminal charge, and a fortiori will be held excused from responding to a subpœna duces tecum under such circumstances.

I have not contemplated or intended any contempt of the authority or privileges of this House, and have only sought to do my duty as I understood it. I respectfully protest that I cannot justly be condemned for disobeying the commands of a subpœna duces tecum to produce papers, for no such writ has been served upon me; that I am not in this proceeding amenable for contempt in disobeying a command of the committee, for the resolution under which the warrant for my arrest has issued is limited to the charge of disobedience to a subpœna, besides which no such command was ever addressed to me; that the telegraphic messages in the New Orleans office are in the possession of the Western Union Telegraph Company, and not at all in my possession except as a clerk, and to the same extent that every clerk may have possession of his employer's books and papers; that my right and power over such papers are limited to the regular transaction of business and that other handling or interference with them by me would be without warrant, the papers being the property of the senders, not legally in my custody but in the custody of my employer; that demand of them should be made to the governing officers of said company, and not to me. That any general order in the form of the so-called subpœna in this case offends against fundamental principles of personal liberty, as well as the fourth amendment to the Constitution, as being in the nature of a general warrant commanding me to make general and inquisitorial search for papers which are only by the accident of business within my reach; that such paper offends fundamental principles which are necessarily applicable to every lawfully conducted inquiry of this nature, inasmuch as by requiring me to make search for papers which are not known to exist, it turns a subpœna duces tecum from its true function, under circumstances of great oppression to me, into a bill of discovery. That the act which I am now questioned for not performing is forbidden as a crime by the laws of Louisiana; that this House has no power to change or modify that law in itself or in its operation upon me; that it can never be considered a contempt of this House to refuse to break the law of the land.

And now humbly submitting myself to the House, I respectfully ask to be discharged from custody and permitted to return to my home.

EDMUND W. BARNES.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 5th day of January, A. D. 1877.

[SEAL.] HENRY R. ELLIOTT,
United States Commissioner for the District of Columbia.

J. HUBLEY ASHTON,
GROSVENOR P. LOWREY,
Of Counsel for E. W. Barnes.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer the following resolution, upon which I demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the committee, the answer just read to the House, and all other papers relating to the breach of the privilege of this House and contempt of its authority alleged to have been committed by E. W. Barnes, now in custody and at the bar of the House, be referred to the Committee on the Judciary, with instructions to report as early as practicable what action in their judgment should be taken by the House in relation thereto.

Mr. KASSON. That, of course, includes the paper just read?

Mr. KNOTT. It does.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask the gentleman to allow me to ask whether the committee has authority to hear the party now before the House?

Mr. KASSON. By counsel or otherwise.

Mr. GARFIELD. If not, the committee ought to have such authority.

Mr. KNOTT. As a matter of course if the committee desire to hear counsel they can do so.

Mr. GARFIELD. If that be so I have nothing further to say.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the resolution was adopted.

Mr. KNOTT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I ask that the paper just read, together with the report of the committee, be printed.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed, of course, in the report of the proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GARFIELD. But I ask that it be printed separately.

Mr. HOLMAN. It goes into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I think that is sufficient.

Mr. HOAR. I think the gentleman from Indiana will find it convenient to have the two papers, the report of the committee arraigning this witness and his response, printed together.

Objection was made.

The SPEAKER. The witness is in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The witness then left the bar of the House in the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms.

INDIAN TRUST FUND.

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces as the conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. No. 614) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to deposit certain funds in the United States Treasury in lieu of investment, Mr. WOOD of New York, Mr. THOMAS of Maryland, and Mr. BURCHARD of Illinois.

APPOINTMENTS TO COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also announces the following appointments to committees to fill vacancies, as indicated:

Committee on Freedmen's Bank—Mr. SAMPSON of Iowa, vice Mr. Farwell, and Mr. BLAIR of New Hampshire, vice Mr. Frost.

Committee on Private Land Claims—Mr. PACKER of Pennsylvania, vice Mr. Ketcham.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSTER. I rise for the purpose of moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the deficiency bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest to the gentleman from Ohio that it would facilitate business if, before going into Committee of the Whole on the appropriation bill, we dispose of the bills which have been reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair feels bound to recognize the gentleman from Ohio to make his motion; but if he consents to withdraw it for the present, the Chair, of course, will interpose no objection.

Mr. FOSTER. What is the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. That the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be first disposed of.

Mr. FOSTER. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire that?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are only six of them, I believe. It will take but a moment.

Mr. FOSTER. Very well. I withdraw my motion for the present.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

The following bills, reported with favorable recommendations from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordinly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 2601) authorizing the Commissioner of Pensions to issue a land-warrant to Thomas Hunter, a soldier of the war of 1812, in lieu of one lost;

A bill (H. R. No. 3406) granting a pension to James B. Gillespie;

A bill (H. R. No. 3582) granting a pension to Charles L. Rugg, late first lieutenant of Sixth Indiana Cavalry;

A bill (H. R. No. 3583) granting a pension to Frederick W. W. Smith;

A bill (H. R. No. 3584) granting a pension to William Abendroth; and

A bill (H. R. No. 3681) for the relief of B. B. Conner & Brother.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar have been passed, and also move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I object to that. It has always been the practice to leave the bills acted upon in this way when reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar open for reconsideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion.

HOUSE DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the deficiency appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HOSKINS in the chair,) and proceeded to consider the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, and for other purposes.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. This bill appropriates about $41,000 for deficiencies in the clerical and contingent expenses of the House, mainly in accordance with the orders of the House. That is the sum and substance and a full explanation of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the bill by paragraphs for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be paid into the contingent fund of the House, to enable the Clerk of the House to pay the sums as provided under the following resolutions of the House, and as otherwise herein expressed, namely:

Under resolution of August 14, 1876, to pay to the members of the Capitol police and employes of the House discharged by reason of the reduction of force provided for in the act of August 15, 1876, being only those employés who were discharged on and subsequently to the 14th of August, 1876, $3,476.06.

Under joint resolution of August 15, 1876, to pay clerks to committees of the House to August 31, 1876, $2,260.

Under joint resolution of August 14, 1876, to pay William H. Smith, from December 1, 1876, to March 4, 1877, at $3.60 per day, $338.40.

Under resolution of August 15, 1876, to pay Hugh J. Mohun, messenger, from August 15, 1876, to August 31, 1876, $61.20.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I offer the following amendment:

After line 31 add the following:

For the payment of C. L. Freeman for services rendered in the folding-room in the House of Representatives from August 14 to September 1, 1876, seventeen days, at $60 per month, $33.35.

This matter was referred to the Committee of Accounts, but they have not been able to report. The work was done and the man ought to be paid for his services.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that that case is covered in the first paragraph of the bill.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment may again be reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FOSTER. I must repeat that I think that was covered in the first paragraph.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I do not so understand it.

Mr. FOSTER. The first paragraph covers all cases after the 14th of August.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Under resolution of August 9, 1876, to pay W. N. Merrick, W. H. Trescott, and Henry W. Garnett, counsel for defense in the case of Hallet Kilbourn vs. Michael C. Kerr and others, $2,250; one-half of which only may be paid to them by the Clerk of the House during the progress of the suit.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state that this appropriation is made in pursuance of the resolution of the House which conferred upon the Judiciary Committee, acting in concert with the officers of the House who were made defendants to the suit, the power to employ counsel at a competent compensation. The Judiciary Committee, in pursuance of that power, employed these gentlemen as counsel and determined the fees, and all the Committee on Appropriations has done has been simply to carry out that engagement.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I offer the following amendment to come in after line 48:

Under the resolution of December 19, 1876, to pay Frank C. Hopkins the sum of $600 for services rendered as clerk to the Committee of Ways and Means, in the absence of the regular clerk of that committee during the Forty-fourth Congress.

I hope the gentleman from Ohio will accept the amendment, which is in accordance with a resolution already passed by the House.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no objection to the amendment at all, as it has been authorized by a vote of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The payment of this clerk may have been authorized, but the House certainly has not authorized the payment of two clerks for the service of an absent clerk.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The resolution merely proposes to carry out a resolution of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does the gentleman expect that two clerks will be paid for performing the duties during this time?

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The clerk of the committee was absent a portion of last session and also during the present session, and another person has been required to discharge his duties. The committee were unanimous in recommending the adoption of this amendment, and I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. HOLMAN] will not object to its adoption.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the Committee of Ways and Means, which should guide and conduct the House in the path of economy, will not ask the House to pay two clerks for performing the same service.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The committee will endeavor to follow the Committee on Appropriations in every proper effort at economy, but in this case the service was performed, and the House has already adopted a resolution providing for the payment of this gentleman.

Mr. FORT. I see no further need for a Committee of Accounts. This is a case where the Committee of Ways and Means desire to have two clerks paid. I may be mistaken about that, however, for this case has never been referred to the Committee of Accounts. But if we are to have a committee to pass upon these matters, it appears to me that this is a case where they should investigate the question.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The gentleman is mistaken; this is a case that has been already before the House and on which the House has already passed.

Mr. FORT. If all the committees are to be allowed to employ as many clerks as they want to, why it is all right. If there is any reason for the Committee of Ways and Means, who report on an average once a month, not oftener, to have three or four clerks, why then it may be very well; but there are some committees of this House who seem to have as much work to do as the Committee of Ways and Means, and those committees are satisfied with one clerk. I do not see why the Committee on Ways and Means should not be satisfied with one clerk. I am not aware that that committee more than any other committee should employ two clerks. I think it is high time that this House knew that there is no further need for a Committee of Accounts if this practice is to be the rule of the House.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. The committee were unanimous in recommending that this young man should have some compensation for the work he performed in the absence of the regular clerk to the committee, and I think the objection of my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] comes too late, inasmuch as the House has passed a resolution directing such payment.

Mr. CONGER. Does the salary of the regular clerk go on during the time that this man is paid? If not, that money may be paid to his successor in office.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I am not advised of that.

Mr. CONGER. If the regular salary did not run on then I am willing that his deputy shall be paid. I speak of it because I am reminded by this deficiency bill of the very eloquent appeals of the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] and other gentlemen on that side of the House for excessive economy and retrenchment at the commencement of the last session of Congress, and of the great parade that was made before the country by the gentleman and others of the design of the House, not only to diminish the salaries of clerks of committees, but as far as possible to reduce the number, and it was heralded through the country with a great blare of trumpets that the democratic party were going to reduce the expenditures of the House. I recall that now that, after the election is over, we may compare the two processes by which appropriations are now made for a deficiency which was created then for political effect.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. My friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is always very suggestive; but, so far as the compensation of this person is concerned, I will say that he has faithfully and laboriously performed the entire clerical service of that committee on the important questions which that committee brings before the House. I will say further that the committee unanimously recommend the adoption of this amendment, and I hope my friend from Michigan will withdraw his objection.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from New York has so often before objected to paying two salaries for performing one service for the Government, or to paying two salaries to two persons for performing the same duties, that I thought it sufficient that I should call his attention to his former remarks upon this question to see if he remembered them.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am very much astonished at the course taken by my friend from Michigian. Does he not remember that during the last Congress we reduced salaries everywhere, and we never touched the salaries of members of this House or of any employé connected with it? The gentleman from Michigan has been a long time a member of this House. He must remember that has always been the practice of the House. It is not pleasant for any of us to see the gentleman from Michigan lose the faculty of memory. He must remember that at the last session we were economical in every other direction but this. And I cannot bear to see my friend from Michigan lose his memory. He knows as well as I do at the last session of Congress we were in favor of economy and reform in everything except ourselves and our employés.

Mr. DURHAM. I wish to vote intelligently upon this question. And I am still standing by my record of economy, retrenchment, and reform. I desire to ask my friend from New York whether or not the regular clerk of this committee does not get his salary for the time this temporary clerk was employed? And I ask him this question in all candor. If such is the case I shall vote against the proposition. I ask the question for information.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. DURHAM] will not be disturbed. I assure him that there is no disposition on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means to change front on the ground of rigid economy, not only with reference to the general expenditures of the Government but to the expenses of the House. The Committee of Ways and Means was given a clerk; that clerk from physical disability was unable to discharge his duties at the last Congress; he has been absent from Washington nearly this whole session of Congress and one of his subordinates has discharged the whole duty; and it is supposed by the committee, although we did not discuss the question at all, that this allowance was made in lieu of that which would have been paid to the clerk under the law, and therefore there is no additional expenditure of money involved in devoting $600 to this individual.

Mr. DURHAM. If the gentleman will only say positively that this amount is to be paid out of the regular salary of the regular clerk, I will vote for his amendment; but if not, I shall vote against it.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I cannot state it positively, because it may become a legal proposition which I am incapable of deciding.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the amendment by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no other person shall receive compensation as clerk of said committee for the period during which the said Hopkins has performed duties as clerk of said committee.

Mr. FORT. I suggest to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that he ought to say "Provided, That no other person has received the pay of clerk of said committee." I understand that the regular clerk of the committee has already received pay for this time.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN.]

Mr. WOOD, of New York. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WOOD, of New York. My point of order is this: the amendment I have offered proposes to carry out a resolution of the House which substantially ordered this appropriation to be made, and it is not now in order for any one to throw difficulties or obstructions in the way of carrying out that order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question for the committee to determine.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] which I think will meet the point.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments already pending, and no further amendment is now in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the proposed substitute be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I think if my amendment is read the gentleman from Indiana will accept it.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposed amendment will be read for information.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That this act shall not authorize the payment of two clerks for said committee for the same time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withdraw my amendment and let the vote be taken on that of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN.]

Mr. GARFIELD. I have listened, as I always do, with interest to the just, not to say generous, opinions of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to these appropriations. I desire to say, however, that this appropriation is simply one in relation to an officer of this House who has been too ill to perform his duties, thus rendering it necessary to get some other person to serve in his place a portion of the time. Now, if gentlemen want to take away the salary of a sick man, of a regular officer of this House, or if they want on the other hand to refuse to pay the person who acted in his place a portion of the time while he was ill, then let them say so plainly. That is what the amendment to the amendment really means. If we mean to allow an officer of this House who has had the misfortune to be ill to receive his pay, as we ought to do, and if we are also willing to pay the gentleman who performed the services during the time the regular officer was sick, as the House has already ordered, then let us do it. That is all this amendment means.

Mr. HOLMAN. Allow me to make a brief statement. I have no actual knowledge of all the facts, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] may have, he being a member of the Committee of Ways and Means. My information is that the clerk of that committee went to Louisiana and has been there for some time past, and perhaps engaged in some other employment. I did not hear that statement, but I inferred that such might be the case. It would seem, then, that the employment of the person named in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. WOOD] covers the period of absence of the clerk who has gone to Louisiana.

Mr. GARFIELD. The illness of the clerk is not a recent matter, but it covers a considerable time past, before the committee went to Louisiana of which the gentleman speaks. For a number of months he was unable to perform all the duties required of him, and that lack was supplied by the employment of the gentleman named in this amendment. It is true that at the present time the clerk of the Committee of Ways and Means has gone to Louisiana in the hope that his health may be restored; and it may be that he is now assisting the chairman of our committee, who is also the chairman of the committee in Louisiana.

Mr. REAGAN. Is he paid for the services he is rendering there?

Mr. GARFIELD. He is not receiving two payments. The simple question is this: our clerk has drawn pay for considerable of the time during which he was unable to do the work, and he should not be asked to refund the amount he has so received. We should also pay Mr. Hopkins for the work he has performed. He has not yet been paid and cannot be paid unless we appropriate the money for the purpose. I hope the amendment will be adopted without the amendment proposed to it.

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to, and the amendment was then adopted.

The Clerk read the following:

Under resolution of August 14, 1876, to provide for the expense of the ventilation of the Hall of the House, to be expended under the direction of the Architect of the Capitol, $3,500.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I desire to renew the amendment which I offered a few minutes since, and to explain it very briefly.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

For the payment of C. L. Freeman for services rendered in the folding-room of the House of Representatives from August 14 to September 1, 1876, seventeen days, at $60 per month, $33.35.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Mr. Freeman was not discharged on the 14th of August, but continued to do his work until the 1st of September, for which he has not yet been paid. I have explained the matter to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FOSTER] in charge of this bill, and he has no objection to this amendment.

Mr. FORT. I understand that this amendment was voted down a few minutes ago.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. It was voted down under the belief that it was included in the first clause of the bill. That, however, is not correct; for this man was not discharged on the 14th of August.

Mr. FOSTER. And has not received his pay for the time he has been at work?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. He has not.

Mr. FORT. Why has not this case been presented to the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. This matter is before the Committee of Accounts, and that committee has not yet been able to report upon it. I have no doubt that they will report favorably.

Mr. FORT. The Committee of Accounts is of no account. [Laughter.]

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. That is the speech of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT,] not mine.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ascertain from the gentleman from North Carolina how it happened that this gentleman was not paid if he was properly employed in the folding-room.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. Because the funds were exhausted, I suppose.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law fixed the number of employés and made the necessary appropriation to pay them. I suppose this is a case where somebody was employed to perform the duties and was not able to perform them. Is not that the case? Was not somebody else employed and was not this gentleman his substitute?

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I think not. He was regularly employed and was not dismissed until the 1st of September. This is a very simple matter, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. ROBERTS. I desire to say that in my opinion this is a meritorious case; but at the same time it is one of a class; there are many more like it; and if the justice of this claim is acceded to, I sincerely trust that the same action may be taken in all similar cases. This case does not in any material aspect differ from many others now before the Committee of Accounts. I shall at the proper time offer an amendment by which the difficulty in all these cases may be cured, by increasing the miscellaneous fund to such an extent as will justify the Committee of Accounts in making proper allowance in cases of this class which may come before them.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this claim is before his committee?

Mr. ROBERTS. I say that this case is before our committee at the present time, and I believe it to be the opinion of the committee that this party should be paid. But his case does not differ in any essential respect from the cases of many others who should also be paid, and who, but for a particular species of economy, which I do not propose at this time to characterize, would have been paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. In view of the statement which has been made, I trust the gentleman from North Carolina will not press this claim, but will let it stand on the same footing with others of the same class. I admonish the Committee of the Whole that, at the rate at which we are now increasing appropriations in this bill, there will be no use for this House to talk about retrenchment. If claims of this class are as numerous as the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ROBERTS] intimates, and if they are all to be adjusted, as I infer is the intention, then I think that the attempts at retrenchment made at the last session of Congress will prove very delusive.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what we always thought.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that this claim will be permitted to stand on the same footing as others of like character, and that the gentleman from North Carolina will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. I heartily agree with the gentleman from Indiana in all his efforts for retrenchment whenever retrenchment is proper; but I confess I do not support retrenchment when it trenches upon justice and right, and so far as these employés are concerned I regard the effort to withhold their pay as inconsistent with justice.

Mr. HOLMAN. Every employé of this House is employed under the authority of law, and every dollar authorized by law to be appropriated for the payment of employés has been appropriated.

Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina. I do not propose to withdraw the amendment. The case has been made out, and it is a just one. The money is due to this man; he did the work and ought to be paid. The Chairman of the Committee of Accounts [Mr. ROBERTS] has indorsed the propriety of this amendment, and I think the House should adopt it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I desire to state in defense of the officers of this House that so far as my knowledge extends they have carefully sought to attend to the business of their respective offices. But these difficulties have arisen in various cases; they will continue to arise; and I do not see any reason why the employés should be made to suffer. The House has had the benefit of their labors; and there is no conceivable reason why they should not be paid for their services. I sincerely trust that the sense of justice on this side of the House and on the other will see that they are all paid.

Mr. CONGER. I agree with the gentleman who has just spoken as to the propriety and justice of paying for services actually rendered to committees or to the House, but I had hoped that these questions would come up at some time when it would be proper for me to inquire why persons who have been employed by this House and whose entire livelihood at this inclement season of the year depends upon the continuance of such employment—why maimed and wounded soldiers who have been serving as officers of this House have within the last two or three days been discharged from employment and their places given to others. This may not be the proper time to raise that question, but the suggestion of justice and equity by the gentleman on the other side recalls to my mind the fact that a one-armed soldier from my own State, who has been long a doorkeeper of this House and a faithful officer, has been discharged from employment within the last three days for no assigned reason except that his place was wanted for another.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. VANCE, of North Carolina, it was not agreed to, there being ayes 29, noes not counted.

The Clerk read as follows:

For amount necessary to pay the foreman of the folding-room from August 14, 1876, to June 30, 1877, $1,203.75.

Mr. FORT. I desire to ask from the gentleman who has charge of this bill an explanation of this item. I hope he will let us know why it has appeared necessary to make this appropriation in a deficiency bill. It seems to me there is but one officer in that place, and therefore how it becomes necessary to appropriate money sufficient to pay two I should like to have the gentleman explain.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Ohio will excuse me, as I wish to explain to my friend from Illinois that on the last day of the last session my attention was called to the fact by the Doorkeeper that we had not provided for the office of foreman of the folding-room, a place always filled heretofore by an eighteen-hundred-dollar messenger, and a resolution was introduced at once providing that a foreman might be employed, not at $1,800 a year, but at $3.75 a day. I am assured by the Doorkeeper of the House that he has remained in that employment ever since and that it is necessary hereafter as heretofore that employé should be retained in that employment. That is the ground upon which this stands.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that a large number of persons were employed in the folding-room at the adjournment of Congress, and what was done with the rest?

Mr. HOLMAN. They were employed by the piece. We only provided for a reduced number of messengers.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was it not the understanding that the employés of the folding-room should be continued on piece-work after the adjournment of Congress?

Mr. HOLMAN. We employed none to do the folding except laborers at $750 a year. A certain number of laborers were employed to do the folding by the piece. We have always had a foreman of the folding-room at $1,800 a year. Instead of the foreman at $1,800 a year we provided, by resolution, for a messenger at $3.75 a day.

Mr. CONGER. Is that provided for by any law?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; it was provided for simply by resolution of the House last December.

The CHAIRMAN. This discussion is entirely irregular. Does the gentleman from Illinois make any motion?

Mr. FORT. Yes, I move to strike out this section pro forma.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana why his remarks in regard to the other employés should not apply to this one.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. But the gentleman from Illinois yielded to me for a question or else I should not have trenched upon his time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. FORT. For a question.

Mr. CONGER. I suggest that if the remark of the gentleman from Indiana in regard to the other account which was defeated, that it was not authorized by law and should go to the Committee of Accounts and be reported to the House, was a proper one, then the same remark should apply to this case.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have already tried to explain this matter to the gentleman from Michigan.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. FORT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have already stated upon it being discovered that there was no foreman provided for the folding-room, as we did not have enough messengers to detail a messenger at $1,800 a year to do the duties of that particular office—for that reason on the last day, or on the day before the last of the last session, a resolution was offered and adopted by this House providing for a foreman at $3.75 per day. From that time to December, and from then up to the present time, I am informed by the Doorkeeper, this foreman has been retained in the office.

I wish to say further, that if in the judgment of the gentleman from Illinois, who understands this matter perhaps much better than I do, a superintendent of the folding-room is not required—although we always had one heretofore—if not actually required at any salary, then this may be amended by appropriating only sufficient to pay this foreman up to the time of his discharge, and he can be discharged on the passage of this bill.

Mr. FORT. I now yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. RIDDLE.]

Mr. CONGER. Was not this employé from the adjournment of Congress to the commencement of the session away from the House and in Indiana?

Mr. HOLMAN. I know that he was absent from the Capitol, but how long I do not know.

Mr. RIDDLE. I trust that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois will be adopted. Opposition was made to the amendment moved by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE,] although that case is identical with this one. In fact Mr. Freeman was employed by the gentleman who is intended to be favored by the provision of the bill to be stricken out. Now, the gentleman from Indiana proposes all these cases shall be thrown before the Committee of Accounts, to let them stand upon an equal footing. I favor his proposition. I am opposed to any sort of legislation which will make fish of one and fowl of another. If an employé of the State of Indiana is to be paid, I insist that the employé from Tennessee shall also be paid; and I trust the House will sustain the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOLMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. FORT. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a moment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. FORT. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that, if the Doorkeeper of this House thinks the services of this gentleman are required, I shall of course feel disposed to come to the same conclusion; for, in my judgment, he is doing all he can to economize; and I do not believe he would keep one employé on the pay-roll that was not absolutely necessary. But it seems to me that this is a case that ought to go along with those that have been refused; and if the gentleman from Indiana comes in and puts one individual in the deficiency bill, he ought to put the whole list in, as has been well said by the chairman of the Committee of Accounts. Now, there are quite a number of other worthy gentlemen who were relieved from duty who might be considered officers of this House; and they were turned out. Why is it—I ask the gentleman to explain while he is on the floor—that this gentleman must be put in the deficiency bill and no others of the same class?

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana if the point of order does not lie against this, that it is not provided by law?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no; the point of order does not lie against this. I have already stated, with all the distinctness I am capable of, that on the last day of the session this was authorized by resolution of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. But not by law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not by law.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the point of order had been raised in time, the Chair would have sustained it; but, debate having been proceeded with, it is too late.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Ohio would not have raised the point of order, for this reason——

Mr. GARFIELD. O, I do not raise it.

Mr. HOLMAN. He would not have raised it for this reason: We have been compelled to provide for that particular employé. We have also been compelled to provide for the gentleman who raises the flag over this part of the Capitol, and who has been here for a great many years, Mr. Chauncey. The item is as follows:

For amount necessary to pay John T. Chauncey from June 30, 1876, to March 4, 1877, as per resolution of the House, at $3.60 per day, $889.20.

There are several items of that kind. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] does me injustice about this. These cases were provided for by resolution of the House, the places being necessary to be filled.

Mr. FORT. Not this one. I understand this superintendent had no one to superintend. All the folders had been discharged.

Mr. HOLMAN. This foreman was provided for by resolution on the last day of the session. I am exceedingly anxious to be understood about it. I have before me the last volume of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD containing the proceedings at the close of the session, and if the gentleman will have patience and give me time I will find the resolution. This foreman was employed under a resolution of the House.

Mr. CONGER. I would like to hear the resolution and to learn by whom it was offered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the book here, and will hand it to the gentleman if he will hunt it up.

Mr. CONGER. By whom was the resolution offered?

Mr. HOLMAN. I offered it myself. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. Where does this employé live?

Mr. HOLMAN. Since my friend from Michigan is so curious about it, I will state that this gentleman, a very competent man for the position, is from my own State, and that he has been in the employ of the House from the time he was authorized to be employed by the resolution of the House last August to the present time. The proposition I make to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is this: if in his judgment the office is not required, let it be abolished by the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FORT. I think it is required. I do not mean to say that it is not. I think it is necessary. But I also think it was necessary to retain some other gentlemen that were discharged and who are now without pay; and if the gentleman from Indiana does not propose to pay them I do not see why it is he wants to pay this gentleman who happened to have a home in his State.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend mistakes me entirely. I have never intimated that these men were not to be paid. I have simply said that all cases of that character, where persons have been employed without any authority at all on the part of the House by the Doorkeeper and other subordinate officers of the House, if they were so employed, should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. FORT. Has this case ever been there?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has not been and it was not necessary that it should go there.

Mr. FORT. Why was it not necessary?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does my friend consider when the House directs the employment of an employé and fixes his compensation at $3.75 a day, as foreman of a given branch of the service of the House, that that has to go to the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. FORT. Yes; when his occupation is gone; when all have been discharged; when there is nobody but the superintendent.

Mr. HOLMAN. That may be true. But is it true that in the vacation he had no duty to perform?

Mr. FORT. I take the gentleman's word for it. He said the others were discharged because there was nothing to do.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, no; if the gentleman from Illinois so understood me, he has done himself and me great injustice.

Mr. FORT. I do not wish to do the gentleman any injustice.

Mr. HOLMAN. We provide for a given number of messengers and laborers and then we provide for the folding done by piece from the time of adjournment until the meeting of Congress.

Mr. FORT. Is it necessary to have a superintendent to superintend persons who work by the piece?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is necessary, and my friend himself admits that it is proper.

Mr. FORT. I think so. I think the Doorkeeper will employ only those who are necessary; if we let him alone, he will manage his work with as few employés as possible.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now I wish to say a word to the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. [RIDDLE,] but I see he has left the Hall. If he were present, I should wish to say a word to him.

Mr. RIDDLE. Here I am.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have been told very recently by the Doorkeeper that he thought this was a proper appropriation, and that in a case where a man performed services on account of somebody else properly employed, himself not being able to discharge his duties, he ought to be paid.

Mr. RIDDLE. My man was put in by Mr. Brown.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. What was the necessity to employ him?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have answered that question five times already. [Laughter.] My motion is made at the instance of the Doorkeeper of the House.

Mr. LAWRENCE. From what district is this man?

Mr. HOLMAN. From my own. [Laughter.]

Mr. FORT. By request, I would ask whether this superintendent of the document-room could not perform his duties by correspondence?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, I do not know; I am not familiar with that branch of the service. [Laughter.]

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Indiana states that these various propositions should properly go to the Committee of Accounts. I desire to ask him this question: Under this bill the amount generously placed by the Committee on Appropriations to the miscellaneous fund amounts to $500; does he know how we are to pay a claim of $1,200 out of that sum?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are specific appropriations for these cases.

Mr. FORT. I will not insist upon my motion to strike out the paragraph, but will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. RIDDLE] to offer an amendment to it.

Mr. RIDDLE. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

For the payment of C. L. Freeman, for services rendered in the folding-room, House of Representatives, from August 14 to September 1, 1876, seventeen days, at $60 per month, $33.35.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Tennessee will explain how it happened that these services were rendered.

Mr. RIDDLE. I will state that this man was employed by Mr. Brown, who went to the State of Indiana in the manner already stated. He came here and performed all the services. I understand from the Doorkeeper that while this man Brown was away in the State of Indiana the Doorkeeper appointed this man, and, the appointment being contrary to law, that is the reason why he has not been paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then, if I understand it, the citizen of Indiana was absent and this gentleman was substituted in his place?

Mr. RIDDLE. Not in his place, but was appointed under his order. I do not object to the payment of the man from Indiana, but I do insist on the payment of the man from Tennessee. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. This man Brown seems to have been employed by some kind of arrangement in the folding-room of the House, but he wandered away; he wandered to Indiana. Now I do not know what service he may have performed there, but I think it safe to say, from the result of his labors, that he ought to be paid for the services he performed there, for they were more profitable and successful than his services would have been here. I think all these cases should go to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, Mr. Chairman, my friend must remember that not merely a few doorkeepers and subordinates about this Capitol, but the great army of employés in all the Departments of the Government, flocked home last fall to cast their votes in the October and November elections.

Mr. CONGER. I do not yield the floor. I simply wished to say that I never heard of one of them about the Capitol leaving his place and employment here until he had learned that Mr. Brown had gone. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. They acted very prudently, very cautiously.

Mr. CONGER. Knowing that he was the particular and proper representative of my economical friend from Indiana, they thought it right to go if he did. That may not have been an excuse, but it is at least a paliation.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it would have been a very good excuse indeed if the thing had only occurred this year; but I believe it has happened every year.

The question was then taken upon the amendment offered by Mr. RIDDLE, and it was agreed it.

The Clerk read the following:

For amount necessary to pay John T. Chauncey from June 30, 1876, to March 4, 1877, as per resolution of the House, at $3.60 per pay, $889.20.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move to insert after the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Henry Lewis for labor in the Doorkeeper's department, performed during the months of September, October, November, and December, 1876, at the rate of $720 per year, $240.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to perfect the text of the clause of the bill just read, before any amendment is offered, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. VANCE] will yield to me for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] yield to me a moment? I desire to go back and correct the text of a paragraph which we have passed. I find that by the bill as printed the compensation for the foreman of the folding-room is provided for up to the 30th of June next. I ask consent to strike out "30th of June" and insert "4th of March," for there is no necessity for continuing this office beyond the 4th of Marth next.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no objection to that.

No objection being made, the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN was agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph just read that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay John T. Chauncey from June 30, 1876, pursuant to resolution of the House of the 13th of December, 1876, at the rate of $3.60 per day during the time of his employment, the amount necessary therefor.

Mr. KASSON. A single word of explanation. I state it in the absence of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] who introduced the resolution which was adopted by the House. The resolution does not limit the time of the employment of Mr. Chauncey, but provides for his employment for whatever time may be necessary, which may be one month and may be three months. The pending paragraph in the bill terminates his employment on the 4th of March next.

He is a gentleman well known to members here, who has charge of very important matters connected with their convenience and with the safety of their desks, &c. I have consulted gentlemen on both sides of the House, and it seems to them better not to limit his employment to the 4th of March, but to allow the Doorkeeper to continue him as long as necessary. My amendment does not change the rate of pay.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have no objection at all to the employment of the gentleman named in this proposition; for one I am very willing he should be employed after the 4th of March next. But it may be found that the number of employés of the House authorized by law is sufficient, and this gentleman can be continued in employment very well without adding to the number of employés of the House. Inasmuch as the House has adopted the resolution providing for the employment of Mr. Chauncey, we have thought proper to make an appropriation in this deficiency bill to pay him up to the close of this session of Congress from the time when he was dismissed, on account of the reduction of force, which seems to have been the 1st day of July last.

This is not a question merely of the employment of Mr. Chauncey; I think that is very proper. He is one of the old employés of the House and well informed as to all the duties required of him. But what I object to is this mode of increasing the number of our employés. Let Mr. Chauncey be paid up to the 4th of March, and then when we come to make up the regular appropriation bill for the deficiencies of this year as well as of the next, if it is necessary and proper that he should be retained after the 4th of March, and I think it is, he could be retained without adding one more to the list of our employés. That is all I have to say upon that point.

Mr. KASSON. I only wish to say that my proposition makes no change in any respect in the proposition contained in the bill, except the one which I have indicated. If it is necessary to employ Mr. Chauncey to take care of the desks of members after the 4th of March next, then his pay will be provided for by my amendment. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLYMER] who understands fully this proposition.

Mr. CLYMER. I think the change proposed by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] is eminently proper. It is not supposed that the Doorkeeper will retain Mr. Chauncey here longer than the 4th of March next if his services are not required. By the text of the bill his employment will cease peremptorily at that time. Now, I have sufficient confidence in the Doorkeeper to trust him in this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the pending amendment has been exhausted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of saying that if the House desires in this mode to increase the number of its employés, well and good. We have fixed by law the number of employés of this House, as far as this present Congress is concerned, up to its close. If it is found necessary that a particular person should be employed, then let him be employed. This was an exceptional case; it does not apply beyond the present session of the House. There is an army of employés who might be continued in the service of the House during the recess; and if that is to be done, I should have no objection at all to Mr. Chauncey being one of them.

Mr. KASSON. This does not increase the number of employés at all. It simply follows the resolution, whatever may be its force. If the resolution by its terms does not extend beyond the 4th of March, this will not extend it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Iowa certainly knows that this is adding one to the number of employés.

Mr. KASSON. On the contrary it makes no addition to the number. A resolution was adopted specifically employing Mr. Chauncey. I do not vary to the extent of a hair the language of that resolution. But I do not wish to debate this question further; it is too trifling a matter to occupy so much time.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, the gentleman from Iowa is now referring to that resolution; but not half a dozen members of this House knew that such a resolution was adopted. If in that mode you are to increase the employés of the House, there is simply no end to this matter.

Mr. KASSON. I think the gentleman from Indiana adopted this mode (did he not?) in respect to the foreman of the folding-room.

Mr. HOLMAN. O, yes, sir; and it was done at a time when it had to be done.

Mr. KASSON. So was this.

Mr. HOLMAN. And it was done on the recommendation of the Doorkeeper. I am not aware that any person has recommended this.

Mr. KASSON. This also has the approval of the Doorkeeper, as I am informed. But I will not take up further time on this matter.

The amendment of Mr. KASSON was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. I move to amend by inserting after the amendment just adopted the following:

To pay Henry Lewis for labor in the Doorkeeper's department performed during the months of September, October, November, and December, 1876, at the rate of $720 per year, $240.

I will merely say that this man was not discharged; he has faithfully and honestly performed the labors in his department during all this time, and he should properly be paid. The Doorkeeper has recommended his payment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that the gentleman will explain why this man was not paid if he was regularly employed.

Mr. VANCE, of Ohio. His name was not placed upon the roll made out by the Doorkeeper.

The amendment of Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay fees of witnesses summoned for examination before committees of the House, and other expenses incident to investigations, $13,000.

Mr. ROBERTS. I move to amend by striking out the clause just read and also the following clause: "for purchase of miscellaneous items for the use of the House, $500;" and inserting in lieu of both these paragraphs the following:

For miscellaneous items, $21,000.

I propose by this amendment to cover not only the item of $13,000 just read by the Clerk, but also to increase the miscellaneous fund of this House so that the Committee of Accounts may be enabled to continue to perform its ordinary functions by paying the small accounts passed from time to time with the assent of this House. This bill if passed in its present shape would, in my opinion, pass with an improper title. It would be, practically speaking, a bill to abolish the Committee of Accounts. If the House desires to pass the bill with that object, I, as chairman of the committee, am prepared to assent rather than to see this continual fight in regard to small matters.

If $21,000 be appropriated as the miscellaneous fund, it will be $7,000 less than the amount appropriated for this purpose in previous Congresses for years and years. To that extent my proposition is a reduction and a retrenchment, in the proper sense of the term. The sum of $21,000 I believe to be amply sufficient to meet all demands, so far as I have any knowledge. There are many reasons why this fund should be increased. The numerous accounts constantly presented to the Committee of Accounts for examination and approval are in themselves an argument in favor of increasing this fund, so that various necessary expense smay be settled without requiring the passage of a separate bill in each case. As an illustration, I will name one case that might arise. In the event of the death of any member, it would be utterly impossible under the present system to pay the funeral expenses except by a separate bill. Heretofore there has always been a fund from which such expenses could be paid. If the death of a member should occur at any time when a bill could not be passed, it would be necessary for those who might furnish various articles or incur expenses to wait perhaps twelve months before receiving their money. I do not think it is becoming on the part of this House to assent to any such system; and I sincerely trust that both sides of the House will see the justice of increasing this fund so as to cover such allowances and also the claims already mentioned of employés, who should promptly receive their per diem. I hope that if the Committee of Accounts is to continue to discharge its duties, it may have the respect and support of the House in so doing.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. FORT. I wish to indorse what the chairman of our committee [Mr. ROBERTS] has said on this subject.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to offer an amendment to the original text, to strike out $13,000 and insert $10,000 as the appropriation to pay fees of witnesses or other expenses incident to investigations. I wish to say a word to the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. ROBERTS,] and to call his attention to the remark just now of the gentleman from Ohio, "That is right." The gentleman from Ohio never gave his approval in this direction when his side of the House was responsible for the expenditure of a contingent fund. My friend from Maryland must have seen that while the passage of a simple resolution in regard to the expenditure of the contingent fund of the House was all that was necessary to take money from the Treasury anything like economy was absolutely impossible; and no one has shown more anxiety than have the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] and his predecessor in the chairmanship of the Committee on Appropriations that the contingent fund should not be in such a position that we might reach out at any moment and expend it upon a mere House resolution. No other mode of expenditure could offer greater facilities for extravagance.

Mr. HOAR. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana (for I suppose he knows) whether it is true, as the gentleman from Maryland has just said, that there is now no fund from which the funeral expenses of a member of this House can be paid.

Mr. HOLMAN. And there has not been, so far as I am aware, for years. Those expenditures were made either by specific appropriations or a fund was added to the contingent fund of the House with a view to such expenditure.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I appreciate the compliment he has paid me for my action when I was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the contingent fund of the House. I admit it is the most reckless and wasteful thing that can be done to allow a large contingent fund to be at the disposal of any one who can get a resolution through the House. For years we have sought to put the contingent fund within so narrow a limit that it could not be abused. For instance, we made it the law that the contingent fund should not be used to pay a salary. I would not disturb that; but the gentleman who is in charge of the Committee of Accounts, and who has spoken for it to-day, asks us to give seven thousand, or perhaps eight thousand dollars in addition to the $13,000 provided here. The $13,000, as I understand it, is for the specific purpose of paying the expenses of the investigating committees now out.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; he proposes to strike that out. He proposes to make the whole a contingent fund, every dollar of it.

Mr. GARFIELD. The $13,000, as I understand, is for that purpose, and he asks that it should be increased to $21,000. He says that will give $8,000 to meet little unnamable expenses, such as may be necessary on the sudden death of a member or to put wooden steps in this icy weather to enable us to go down in front of the Capitol without slipping on our icy —— [Great laughter.] That is the contingent fund of the House, and it ought to be large enough to meet expenses which are not salaries. I think the gentleman from Maryland is perfectly right in asking us to do that to meet these little expenses, but we should not provide a grab-bag into which every member shall thrust his hand to get a folder here or a folder there, just as he happens to have the temper of the House to help him or his personal popularity to get one through. I think it better to trust the Committee of Accounts of the House with the small fund of $8,000, as suggested by the gentleman from Maryland, and in doing that I do not break over all the old limits which I have been so careful to prevent and for which my friend from Indiana has complimented me.

Mr. ROBERTS. The illustration which the gentleman from Indiana himself has given this morning in regard to the passage of these resolutions of the House is the best evidence why they should go to the committee to be paid out of a fund under the control of the committee. There have been two or three resolutions passed just in the manner which the gentleman has indicated, and he has criticised the action of the House to the extent of saying that not more than a half dozen members knew of the passage of such resolutions. If that be true, then certainly it is an argument why the Committee of Accounts should have the superintendence of these accounts, to assent to them when they are proper and dissent when they are improper.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Let me say one word.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I have the floor. My friend from Maryland should see that we do not put ourselves to the trouble as individual members in trying to reach a given object by referring the subject to the Committee of Accounts. On the contrary, we ask the House to adopt a resolution, and it is paid, and that is an end of it. It never goes to the committee at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. I am only condemning the practice; saying the proper practice would be to send these resolutions to the Committee of Accounts with authority to act in the premises.

Mr. HOLMAN. All experience demonstrates that when we have a contingent fund it will be used up day after day by just such resolutions.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I understand there are employés of this House who though duly employed have not yet been paid. I have one particular case in my mind at the present time where the account has been properly certified and yet the man has not been paid since the 1st of December. His account has been certified to by the Doorkeeper of the House as payable, but, as the gentleman from Maryland has informed us, these employés have been left without their money since December 1 because of this deficiency in the contingent fund of the House. For that reason I am in favor of committing this question to the charge of the Committee of Accounts, perfectly satisfied that it will exercise a just discretion in the expenditure of the contingent fund of this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to amend the text by striking out "13" where it occurs in line 68, and inserting "10,000," so as to make it $10,000 instead of $13,000. I think the amount is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Indiana that the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland is to amend the text by striking out and inserting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I thought his amendment was to strike out the whole of it. I ask that the amendment be again read.

Mr. ROBERTS's amendment was again read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish any misunderstanding as to this matter. We wish a small fund to be set apart to meet the current expenses of the investigating committees of this House. We had proposed $13,000. I am led to believe that $10,000 is sufficient for that purpose. I trust the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. ROBERTS] will withdraw his substitute. He does not wish that money to be appropriated to any other object.

Mr. ROBERTS. I can only answer that I am willing to do what the gentleman suggests provided he will further amend by adding "for miscellaneous purposes, $11,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not say "$11,000."

Mr. ROBERTS. That is exactly what I do say.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by striking out "$13,000" and inserting "$10,000" in the original text.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana to amend the text of the paragraph proposed to be stricken out. If his amendment is lost, then the question will recur on the motion of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. ROBERTS.]

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment, there were—ayes 22, noes 56.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted. I call for tellers. I say to the House that $10,000 is all that is required for this purpose of paying fees of witnesses.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. ROBERTS and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 48.

Mr. HOLMAN. A quorum has not voted. I do not ask for further count.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. ROBERTS.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend the substitute of the gentleman from Maryland by adding these words:

Thirteen thousand dollars of which shall be to pay fees of witnesses summoned for examination before committees of the House, and other expenses incident to investigations not otherwise provided for.

Mr. FORT. I desire to make an inquiry. What has become of the amendment offered by the chairman of the Committee of Accounts?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is still pending, and this is an amendment to that.

Mr. FORT. Does that leave anything for contingencies?

Mr. HOLMAN. O, yes, it leaves a large amount.

The question being taken on Mr. HOLMAN'S amendment to the substitute offered by Mr. ROBERTS, it was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move further to amend the substitute as now amended by inserting after the word "dollars" the words "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The amendment was agreed to.

The question being taken on the substitute as amended, it was adopted.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill and read the following paragraph:

To provide for a deficiency in the contingent expenses of the Department of Justice, $5,000, to be disbursed under the Attorney-General.

Mr. CAULFIELD. I offer the following amendment:

Strike out the paragraph just read and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To remedy error in enrolling act of last session making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes, $11,000, to be disbursed under the Attorney-General."

The language of the bill is entirely erroneous. At the last session there was in the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government a fund provided for the Department of Justice amounting to $11,000. That appropriation was omitted by a mistake of the enrolling clerk. The purposes for which those $11,000 were appropriated are as follows:

For contingent expenses of the department, namely: for furniture and repairs, $1,000; for law and miscellaneous books for the library of the Department, $1,000; for the same for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $500; for stationery, $2,500; for miscellaneous expenditures, such as telegrams, fuel, lights, labor, and other necessaries, $6,000; in all, $11,000.

That is the law as it stands to-day; but by a mistake of the enrolling clerk that was omitted in the enrollment; and therefore I say that the provision now to be made ought to be in the language of the amendment I have offered.

Mr. KASSON. I would suggest to the gentleman that, instead of saying "to remedy error in enrolling act," the amendment should rather read "to supply omission."

Mr. CAULFIELD. Very good; I will modify the language so as to make it "to remedy error and supply omission."

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the following amendment:

For purchase of coal, labels, &c., for the Botanical Garden, $500.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Superintendent of the Botanical Garden insists that he cannot get along without this.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. In line 59 of the bill the amount "$1,203.75" should be stricken out and "$761.25" substituted to make it correspond with the amendment.

Mr. FOSTER. That is right.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the committee rise and report the bill as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOSKINS reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4307) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the contingent fund in the House of Representatives, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same with sundry amendments.

The amendments reported by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union were agreed to; and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. FOSTER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to

Mr. CONGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion to adjourn, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To the Chaplain, Mr. Townsend, for January 6th.

To Mr. LEVY, for two days on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. KNOTT. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the House will not adjourn over to-morrow; the public business is getting greatly behindhand.

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn over is not debatable.

The question was taken on Mr. KNOTT'S motion; and on a division there were—ayes 64, noes 50.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. KNOTT were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 70, noes 47.

Mr. BUCKNER. I make the point of order that no quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; less than a quorum cannot adjourn over. The only motion now in order is a motion for a call of the House or to adjourn, and a motion to adjourn is already pending.

The question was taken on Mr. CONGER'S motion, and it was agreed to; and the House accordingly (at four o'clock and forty-five minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions, &c., were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. G. A. BAGLEY: The petition of citizens of various States, that the United States assume the award made in favor of American citizens and against Mexico, under the last joint commission, to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, the petition of P. Lipscomb and other citizens of Tucker County, West Virginia, for the establishment of a post-route from Saint George to Aurora, in said State, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. FRANKLIN: The petition of James A. Price, for compensation for services rendered while second lieutenant and recruiting officer for the Sixteenth Kansas Cavalry Volunteers, to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FREEMAN: The petition of citizens of Philadelphia, that Congress may amicably adjust the question of who is to be inaugurated President of the United States, to the committee on counting the electoral votes.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, January 6, 1877.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. A. F. STEELE, of St. Mark's church, Washington.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I rise to a privileged report. I am instructed by the Select Committee on the Freedman's Bank to report to the House the bill (H. R. No. 4284) authorizing the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company to buy in certain real and other property, and to sell the same at public or private sale, and for other purposes.

The bill was read. It gives the commissioners of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, their survivors or survivor, and their or his successors, the right and authority to buy in, for the benefit of said company, any real or other property which may be offered for sale at public auction to pay debts or liabilities due said company, if, in their or his judgment, said property will otherwise be sacrificed, and to dispose of the same at public or private sale, as in their or his judgment may be deemed most advantageous to the creditors of said company, furnishing to the purchaser or purchasers of any property thus sold by them or him good and sufficient deeds of conveyance for their respective purchases.

The second section provides that the action of the said commissioners, in buying in each and every of the pieces of real and other property heretofore purchased by them to prevent their sacrifice, and in selling and conveying sundry parcels thereof, is approved and ratified; and that said commissioners, their survivors or survivor, and their or his successors, are fully authorized and empowered to sell and convey any of said property not heretofore sold to any purchaser or purchasers upon the most favorable terms for the creditors of said company.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire to make a single remark in explanation of one or two points in connection with this bill. It has been drawn after full conference with the commissioners of the Freedman's Bank, and is designed to remove a difficulty which they have encountered in closing up the affairs of that institution. When the bank went into liquidation under the act of 1874, there was a large amount of real estate conveyed to the institution to secure loans made by it. The commissioners, in proceeding to wind up the affairs of the bank, conceived that they had the right to buy out that property and also to resell it, and in my opinion they were invested with full powers to do so; but nevertheless there is a doubt as to the validity of the title they conveyed, which threatens not only to impede them in the winding up the affairs of the bank, but also to involve them in the expense of litigation. It has therefore been suggested by Mr. Creswell, an able lawyer, that a bill of this character be passed to relieve them of this embarrassment. I hope, therefore, there will be no objection to the bill, and I call the previous question on its passage.

Mr. HOAR. I trust that before the gentleman insists on the previous question he will allow the bill to be read again.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Certainly.

The bill was again read.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DOUGLAS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EPHRAIM P. ABBOTT.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour will now begin at twelve o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m. The first business in order is the consideration of reports from committees of a public character, and the pending business is the unfinished business of the last morning hour for reports of this nature, being Senate bill No. 678, for the relief of Ephraim P. Abbott, reported from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the bill be again read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That upon the payment of $2.50 per acre by Ephraim P. Abbott, of the county of Wayne, in the State of Michigan, his heirs or assigns, into the Treasury of the United States, or to the receiver of the land office of the district in which the following lands are situated, within six months from the passage of this act, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall cause a patent to be issued to said Ephraim P. Abbott, his heirs or assigns, releasing to him or them all the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the following described tract of land, situate in the township of Ecorse, county of Wayne, and State of Michigan, lying in rear of and adjoining private claim numbered 667, fronting on the river Rouge, and patented to Gabriel Godfrey, said tract so lying in the rear of said front claim and extending back, of equal width of said front claim, to the line of lands patented to James May, and being bounded on the north by the rear of said front claim, eastwardly by the line of private claim numbered 37, confirmed to Charles Chovin, continued to the land so patented to James May, and westwardly by lands authorized by act of Congress of July 1, 1870, to be pre-empted by Thomas Henderson; but such patent shall, in no manner, interfere with any valid adverse right to said land, nor preclude a judicial investigation, in any court of law or equity, between the patentee, his heirs or assigns, and any adverse claimant of the said lands: Provided also, That any incumbrance or conveyance of said land by Robert Abbott, now deceased, the father of said Ephraim P., or any of the heirs of said Robert Abbott, shall have the same effect as if said land had been patented to said Robert Abbott during his life.

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the report be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk informs the Chair that there is no report; this is a Senate bill.

Mr. GOODIN. In order to give a better understanding of the provisions of this bill I send to the Clerk's desk to be read the report of the Senate Committee on Private Land Claims, upon this bill.

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ephraim P. Abbott, to be allowed to purchase a tract of about eighty acres of land in the county of Wayne, Michigan, in the rear of private land claim No. 667, report:

That the front claim No. 667, on the south side of the river Rouge, in front of the land asked to be purchased, was patented to Gabriel Godfroy July 3, 1812, under "An act regulating the grants of land in the Territory of Michigan," approved March 3, 1807, (Statutes at Large, volume 2, pages 437 to 439,) having been confirmed to said Godfroy by the land board December 29, 1809, (State Papers, "Public Lands," volume 1, page 482,) under a previous act of Congress; that under the first above-named act the several claimants were entitled to a quantity not exceeding 640 acres, and their right was based upon occupancy and improvements made by the claimants, or those under whom they claimed, prior to 1796, and continued occupancy from that date; that this act was general, applying to all lands thus occupied in the district of Detroit, in which these lands were situated; that very few of the claimants made their claims for the whole amount allowed by the act, the rear lands being then of comparatively little value, and the claimants being bound to pay for the survey; that the settlements being confined to the margin of the Detroit and other rivers and along Lake Erie, in the eastern border of the territory, and the settlers generally within short distances of each other for mutual protection from Indians, the result was that each claim was comparatively narrow, and to give any considerable quantity must extend back to considerable depth, the width of such claims varying from one arpent to six or seven arpents, and the depth from forty to ninety arpents, but along the Detroit River and the river Rouge the length of the claims was generally either forty or eighty arpents, and some of intermediate length; that in 1812, when the rear lands began to be thought of greater value, Congress, by the act of April 23, 1812, (Statutes at Large, volume 2, page 711, section 2,) gave to all who had claims confirmed along the Detroit River, whose claims did not extend to eighty arpents in depth, the right to a tract in the rear of such front and original claim of equal width and extending far enough to make, with the front grant, eighty arpents in depth, and the claimants along the Detroit River availed themselves of the benefit of this second or back concession. But this act did not extend to any other claims than those bordering on the Detroit River, though the reasons would seem to have been the same in the cases of other claims generally, and especially those along the river Rouge near its mouth into the Detroit River, where this land was situated. But, whether from the public expectation that such second concessions would be allowed in all cases where the front tract confirmed was less than eighty arpents in depth, or because the surveyor who subsequently surveyed the public lands in the rear of the claims in some cases failed to discover the true lines in the rear of the shorter claims situate between longer ones, and supposed such short claims to be of equal length with the longer, it is very clear that in many cases the respective pieces of land lying in the rear of the shorter claims (where long claims adjoined them) were not surveyed by the government surveyor; and though still in fact government land, these portions not surveyed have generally been claimed and occupied and improved by the respective owners of the front grants as a part of the latter, and in some cases other persons have taken possession of such lands, occupied, claimed, and improved them; and in both classes of cases the parties in possession and claiming the land have sold, mortgaged, or leased the lands, and such lands have passed from the original down through many subsequent occupants, by a regular chain of conveyances, and taxes have been paid and valuable improvements made, and great injustice would now be done, and a fertile field of litigation opened, by treating these as public lands subject to entry by any but the occupant or holder of the record-title. They have, therefore, uniformly, and very properly, been treated in the General Land Office as not liable to sale, and only to be disposed of by congressional legislation.

In the present case, the front grant No. 667, and that adjoining on the east, No. 259, were short claims of only forty arpents in depth, situate between longer claims on each side, and the land in the rear (forty arpents in depth) was not surveyed as public lands. The portion of such land in rear of the adjoining claim 259 was by act of Congress of July 1, 1870, (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 647,) treated as a pre-emption claim, and allowed to be purchased by Thomas Henderson at $2.50 per acre, he paying for the survey.

In the present case, the grantee of the front claim 667, Gabriel Godroy, after the proof of his claim, and prior to the issuing of the patent to him, conveyed the same to Robert Abbott, since deceased, the father of the petitioner, who not long after took possession as well of the land in rear as of the front grant, and continued to claim and hold the land until his death, in 1850, and his heirs have since claimed and held possession, treating the same as their own. That they have for many years regularly paid taxes on the land. All the other heirs of said Robert Abbott, deceased, have conveyed all their right and interest to the petitioner.

Your committee therefore report a bill allowing the petitioner to purchase the right and title of the United States to said land at $2.50 per acre, and providing for a patent which shall operate only as a release, and saving any rights of adverse claimants as well as the rights of any purchaser or incumbrancer from said Robert Abbott or any of his heirs, and recommend its passage.

Mr. GOODIN. I now call the previous question on the third reading and passage of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to say——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GOODIN] yield to the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER?]

Mr. GOODIN. Certainly I will, if the gentleman desires to be heard.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that I am acquainted with this particular land, although it is within five or six miles of the city of Detroit, in the State of Michigan, connected with the old French claims along the rivers of Michigan. It seems to me that the proper place to settle such questions as this is in the courts, where heretofore such claims have been settled. I cannot see any special reason for this legislation; but if there is to be such legislation I think the last clause of the bill should be modified. That clause as it now stands makes any deed of Abbott or his son, any conveyance from either of them, as binding as though the patent had been granted to said Robert Abbott. That takes this land out of the control of the courts and overcomes all rights of adverse parties. I call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas to that last clause.

Mr. GOODIN. If the gentleman will examine particularly the latter portion of the bill, he will find that the rights of all adverse parties, if there be any, are entirely saved.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me a moment. The clause to which I refer is the following proviso:

Provided also, That any incumbrance or conveyance of said land by Robert Abbott, now deceased, the father of said Ephraim P., or any of the heirs of said Robert Abbott, shall have the same effect as if said land had been patented to said Robert Abbott during his life.

Now it seems to me that that proviso, notwithstanding the reservation of the rights of adverse claimants contained in another portion of the bill, conveys absolutely to the grantors of Robert Abbott this land by congressional legislation, against all other claimants. I think the bill should not be so sweeping.

Mr. GOODIN. I ask the gentleman to read the last few lines of the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I read the last proviso. It is true that in a previous portion of the bill it is provided—

But such patent shall in no manner interfere with any valid adverse right to said land, nor preclude a judicial investigation, in any court of law or equity, between the patentee, his heirs or assigns, and any adverse claimant of the said lands.

That is a very proper reservation; but the proviso which I send, and which follows in the bill, seems to do away with that reservation. There is in the body of the bill a clause protecting adverse claimants, and then comes a proviso which cuts off all adverse claims against the title given by Robert Abbott or his heirs. I think that portion of the bill should be modified.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. This is an application to obtain a patent for a piece of land that has been in the possession of the Abbott family since 1814, and in the possession of the grantors probably fifty years anterior to that time. By the act of 1805 commissioners were appointed to examine these claims and to grant concessions to all those who had been occupying the lands previous to 1796. In 1809 a concession was make by these commissioners to Gabriel Godroy, who was the grantor of the Abbotts who claim this land.

This land is situated on the river Rouge; the front of it is more than eight miles from the city of Detroit and the rear of it three miles farther off, the land having been laid out in long narrow strips. When Mr. Abbott received this land from the grantor in 1814, he held a patent for simply the front concession. He could have obtained a patent under the act of 1812 for a sufficient additional amount to make a total of six hundred and forty acres. But the land in the rear of his patent seemed to be so far from settlements, there being but few French settlers along the river, that he did not comply with the conditions of the law requiring him to pay the expenses of the survey before he could have a patent for the additional land. It is within my own recollection that that land was deemed hardly worth surveying; it was considered a very inferior quality of land.

This state of affairs continued until three or four years ago, when it was ascertained that no patent had ever been obtained for this land. It has been in possession of Robert Abbott and his heirs ever since 1814, and there can be no question but what a patent ought to issue to Robert Abbott, or if there is any doubt there are sufficient conditions in the bill to save everybody that may have any claim. A similar patent was issued under the law of the Forty-first Congress for land adjoining this same tract, in which case there had been the same neglect to obtain a patent.

Mr. CONGER. Allow me to make this suggestion to the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. GOODIN,] that he modify the proviso to read, "shall be as binding upon the said Abbott and his heirs," instead of saying "shall have the same effect as if said land had been patented."

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS. That would create a necessity for sending the bill back to the Senate.

Mr. GOODIN. I hardly deem that change necessary; I think the bill is perfect as it has been reported. If we should make any amendment to it it must be sent back to the Senate, and at this late day of the session that may endanger the passage of the bill. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LAND-GRANT RAILROAD IN IOWA.

Mr. GOODIN, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the bill (H. R. No. 4168) to amend section 1 of the act of May 12, 1864, for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas by the first section of the act entitled "An act for a grant of lands to the State of Iowa, in alternate sections, to aid in the construction of a railroad in said State," approved May 12, 1864, it is provided that the railroad therein named, known as the McGregor Western Railroad, should be constructed in a westerly direction, by the most practicable route, on or near the forty-third parallel of north latitude, until it shall intersect the road therein named running from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line, in the county of O'Brien, in said State of Iowa;

And whereas it has become expedient, with the consent of the United States, that said western terminus of said McGregor Western Railroad should be changed: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That said McGregor Western Railroad, or any company to which the State of Iowa has made, or may hereafter make, the grant of the lands applicable to the completion of said road, as provided by the said act of Congress and the laws of Iowa, may, with the consent of the State of Iowa, intersect said road leading from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line, at a point outside and west of the said county of O'Brien in said State of Iowa, but not south of the said forty-third parallel of north latitude; and the consent of the United States is hereby given to said change: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to in any manner change the grant of land made to either of said roads by said act of May 12, 1864, or any other act, or to increase or change the lands taken under said grant: And provided further, That this act shall not be so construed as to change or affect the rights of any homestead or pre-emption settler, nor to extend the time for the completion of said McGregor Western Railroad; it being the sole and true intent and meaning of this act to give consent to the change of the western terminus of said road as herein declared.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve any question of order to which this bill may be liable.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman make a point of order on the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not certain that it is subject to a point of order; but it seems to me that the change of the terminus of this road must necessarily involve a change in the lands granted to the road.

Mr. GOODIN. I think not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The point of order will be reserved until the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GOODIN] has an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. GOODIN. As the point of order has been reserved and as this bill was introduced by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. OLIVER,] I now yield to him to explain the provisions and objects of the bill.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. Speaker, I think the point of order is not well taken. The bill does not propose to change the grant of land in any manner, either by increasing or diminishing it; it does not affect the grant in any way.

Mr. HOLMAN. It takes different lands, does it not?

Mr. OLIVER. No, sir; it does not. In 1864 a grant was made to the State of Iowa for the construction of two roads: one running from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line in a northeasterly direction and another from McGregor, on the forty-third parallel, to an intersection with the other road in O'Brien County. At that time it was contemplated that the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line should run through the whole length of O'Brien County from north to south, thus enabling the McGregor road to make the connection on the forty-third parallel, which the law provided it should do. Afterward the Sioux City road was constructed so as to touch only the northwest corner of O'Brien County, thus compelling the McGregor road to change its point of connection to a point some miles north of the forty-third parallel, in order to make the connection in O'Brien County. This bill simply proposes to allow the company to go back to the old line where its lands were selected and build the road on that line to a connection west of O'Brien County.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that this road has been actually constructed or is being constructed upon a different line from that originally provided for by the act of 1864?

Mr. OLIVER. No, sir. The road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line, which has been actually constructed, was not constructed on the exact line that was contemplated at the time of the grant. It has been built so as to run through a corner of O'Brien County. The object of this bill is to permit the other road to connect on the forty-third parallel, as originally contemplated.

Mr. HOLMAN. But does not this bill authorize a change of the line of the road as defined in the act of 1864?

Mr. OLIVER. The law of 1864 did not provide that the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line should be constructed through O'Brien County. When the road came to be located, it was not located on the line that had been contemplated at the time the act of 1864 was passed. This bill does not affect the Sioux City road at all; it affects only the other road which connects with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. This is not the Sioux City branch of the Union Pacific Railroad?

Mr. OLIVER. No, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then the gentleman states, as I understand, that this bill will not increase any appropriation of land heretofore made. Does it change in any degree the lands to be selected?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. It merely allows this road from McGregor to make its connection at the point originally contemplated where its lands were selected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the road last mentioned by the gentleman—the McGregor road—a road having also a Government subsidy?

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, sir. That is the road to which this bill refers.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the effect of the bill to give this road different lands from those it would take under existing law?

Mr. OLIVER. Not at all. The bill expressly provides that the grant shall not be affected in any way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then this does not affect the grant in any way?

Mr. OLIVER. In no way. It merely allows the company to extend its road so as to connect west of O'Brien County, thus enabling it to build the road where the law says it must be built: on the forty-third parallel or near it. The gentleman will understand that, owing to the fact that the Sioux City and Minnesota road was constructed farther west than originally contemplated, so as to just touch the corner of O'Brien County, it becomes impossible to connect in O'Brien County on the forty-third parallel. Therefore the McGregor road, if it makes this connection with the Sioux City and Saint Paul road in O'Brien County, will have to move several miles north. This bill allows it to go off the forty-third parallel, where the law provides it shall make this connection, and make it west of O'Brien County.

Mr. HOLMAN. If I understand the gentleman the provisions of this bill simply confirm existing law.

Mr. OLIVER. Yes, sir; the bill simply confirms the existing law by enabling the McGregor road to carry out the intention of the act of 1864 and make its connection west of O'Brien County.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman speaks of the intention. Is that clearly expressed in the law itself?

Mr. OLIVER. I believe the law of 1864 says that the McGregor road must be built on or near the forty-third parallel and make connection with the road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line in O'Brien County. The road from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line has been changed from what appears to have been contemplated so that connection cannot be made in O'Brien County on or near the forty-third parallel.

Mr. HOLMAN. By what authority was that change made?

Mr. OLIVER. There was no authority for the change; there was no provision in the law requiring the road to be built on any particular line from Sioux City to the Minnesota State line. In the mean time the McGregor road had located its grant on the forty-third parallel or near it, to the center of O'Brien County. It is now either compelled to change its road to make connection west of O'Brien County near the forty-third parallel or else it cannot make connection with the Sioux City and Saint Paul road. It must go west of that county and north of the forty-third parallel. It is proposed to let it drop back to the original line where its lands were selected and to build the road off the forty-third parallel and to make the connection west of O'Brien County.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last provision of the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to in any manner change the grant of land made to either of said roads by said act of May 12, 1864, or any other act, or to increase or change the lands taken under said grant: And provided further, That this act shall not be so construed as to change or affect the rights of any homestead or pre-emption settler, nor to extend the time for the completion of said McGregor Western Railroad; it being the sole and true intent and meaning of this act to give consent to the change of the western terminus of said road as herein declared.

Mr. GOODIN. I now demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Indiana has raised the point of order that the bill must have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. HOLMAN. With the explanation which has just been made by the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. OLIVER,] in connection with the provision which has just been read by the Clerk, and which seems to be very clear, I will withdraw my point of order.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SALE OF DESERT LANDS.

Mr. LANE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4261) to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that it shall be lawful for any citizen of the United States, or any person of requisite age, "who may be entitled to become a citizen, and who has filed his declaration to become such," to file a declaration with the register and the receiver of the land district in which any desert land is situated, that he intends to reclaim a tract of desert land not exceeding one section, by conducting water upon the same, within the period of three years thereafter. Said declaration shall describe particularly said section of land if surveyed, and, if unsurveyed, shall describe the same as nearly as possible without a survey. At any time within the period of three years after filing said declaration, upon making satisfactory proof of the reclamation of said tract of land in the manner aforesaid, and upon the payment to the receiver of the sum of $1.25 per acre for a tract of land not exceeding six hundred and forty acres to any one person, a patent for the same shall be issued to him.

The bill in the second section provides that all lands, exclusive of timber lands and mineral lands, which will not, without irrigation, produce some agricultural crop, shall be deemed desert lands within the meaning of the act.

The bill in the third section provides that the act shall only apply to and take effect in the States of California, Oregon, and Nevada, and the Territories of Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, New Mexico, and Dakota.

Mr. LANE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CHEYENNE WATER-WORKS.

Mr. GOODIN, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3566) to authorize the board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, Wyoming Territory, to enter and purchase for the use of said city certain public lands, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, in the first section provides that the board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, in the Territory of Wyoming, are hereby authorized and empowered to enter and purchase, for the use of said city in maintaining a reservoir of water, and for other purposes, the north half and the southeast quarter of section No. 30, in township No. 14 north, of range No. 66 west of the sixth principal meridian, of lands in the district of Wyoming Territory; said lands being now withdrawn from entry or sale and reserved for the use of said city.

The bill in the second section provides that upon the entry of said lands by said board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, and the payment therefor to the United States of the sum of $2.50 per acre, patent shall issue to the said board of trustees of the city of Cheyenne, conveying to said board of trustees, for the use and benefit of the said city of Cheyenne, in the Territory of Wyoming, the title of the United States in and to the said lands.

Mr. GOODIN demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GOODIN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF LANDS TO COLORADO.

Mr. REA, from the Committee on Agriculture, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. No. 3007) donating public lands to the State of Colorado for the establishment and endowment of a college for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

The bill was read.

Mr. FORT. I rise to a question of order. The point of order I make is that the State of Colorado has not been recognized by this House, and therefore this bill cannot properly be considered.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It ought to go to the Committee of the Whole anyhow.

Mr. HURD. I make the point of order that the bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, because it donates public lands.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] makes the point of order that this bill is not in order, because it recognizes Colorado as a State of the Union when in fact this House has not recognized Colorado as a State in the Union.

Mr. FORT. My point of order is that the State of Colorado has not been recognized by this House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Colorado is certainly a State.

The SPEAKER. That is a question of fact, and not a parlimentary question at all. The point of order made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. HURD,] that the bill should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole, holds good.

Mr. REA. I had not called for the present consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Missouri to demand the present consideration of the bill. It will be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HALE. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that perhaps the point of order will be obviated if he will consent to amend the bill by striking out those portions of it which seem to indicate that Colorado is not yet admitted as a State, and then it can be considered now.

The SPEAKER. The point of order which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HURD] raises, is under Rule 112, which provides that bills of this character shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. HALE. I understand that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that the point of order is well taken; and the Chair also recognizes the fact that it was not the purpose of the gentleman from Missouri to press the bill in the House at this time. The gentleman was himself aware of the point of order which rested against it.

Mr. REA. I ask that the bill may be made a special order in Committee of the Whole House on the 15th instant, after the morning hour.

Mr. SPRINGER. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Missouri requires unanimous consent, and the gentleman from Illinois objects.

The bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

CHARLES METCALF.

Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 3283) for the relief of Charles Metcalf.

The bill was read.

Mr. CLYMER. I make the point of order on the bill that it appropriates money, and should have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BANNING. I ask that the report be printed.

Mr. CLYMER. Let the report be read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the report, and had not concluded the reading when the morning hour expired.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SINGLETON. I rise to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill.

Mr. FORNEY. Will the gentleman yield to me to allow me to introduce a bill for the removal of political disabilities.

Mr. SINGLETON. I will yield to the gentleman for that purpose if it will not take any time.

CHARLES L. SCOTT.

Mr. FORNEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4313) to remove the political disabilities of Charles L. Scott, of Alabama.

The bill was read three times and passed, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

JAMES A. PRICE.

Mr. FRANKLIN, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4314) for the relief of James A. Price, late second lieutenant and recruiting officer Sixteenth Kansas Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the consular and diplomatic bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. HOOKER in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the special order, being the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill by paragraphs for amendment, and read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects herein expressed, namely:

For salaries of envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, at $17,500 each, $70,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offer as a substitute for the paragraph which has been read what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That from and after the 30th day of June, 1877, embassadors, envoys extraordinary, ministers plenipotentiary, and ministers resident shall be entitled to the salaries following, namely:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to Great Britain, France, Germany, and Russia, $15,000 each; to Spain, Austria, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Japan, and China, $10,000 each; to Chili and Peru, $10,000 each.

Ministers resident accredited to Belgium, Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, Turkey, Venezuela, Hawaiian Islands, and the Argentine Republic, $6,000 each.

Minister resident accredited to Guatemala, Costa Rica, Honduras, Salvador, and Nicaragua, to reside at such place in either of said states as the President may select, $8,000.

Minister resident and consul-general to Hayti and Liberia, $4,000 each.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

Mr. HOLMAN. It does change existing law, but in the interest of retrenchment. It reduces the appropriation for salaries.

Mr. CONGER. It increases the number of ministers and the aggregate amount of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir; it decreases all of these salaries; if it increased any one of them the point of order would be good.

The CHAIRMAN. It seems to the Chair that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the rule touching this subject be reported to the House—I mean the rule as to changing existing law. The rule of the House is that a change of existing law shall not be in order unless it is germane to the bill and also tends to decrease the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. CONGER. I object to discussion after the Chair has decided the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman from Indiana is entitled to be heard on the point of order. The Chair may not fully understand the point.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendment is in order because it is germane to the bill, because it applies to the very ministers for whom these appropriations are made, and because it proposes to retrench expenditures on each item—not simply in the aggregate, but upon each item of expenditure. The old rule was that no change of existing law could be made on an appropriation bill, but the rule as amended last session is that where an amendment is germane to the bill and is in the line of retrenching expenditures, it is in order.

This amendment is clearly germane and is also in the line of retrenchment, and therefore it answers both the requirements of the rule. It has uniformly been so held since the rule was adopted. This reduces each item for the ministers, envoys, and ministers resident, and retrenches each item of the clause.

Mr. MILLS. Does it reduce each one?

Mr. HOLMAN. It does each one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to reduce each item, then it is clearly not subject to the objection made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] and may be considered in order under the rules.

Mr. CONGER. But it is not apparent on the face of the amendment that it proposes any decrease in the expenditures. There is an increase in one branch and a decrease in other branches, and it does not clearly show upon its face that it decreases expenditures.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman indicate what item is increased?

If there is one item where there is an increase, the amendment will be subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that if the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is an aggregate reduction, it is not subject to the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.]

Mr. HOLMAN. It reduces each item, and I understand the Chair to rule that the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so rules.

Mr. MONROE. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I have no question that the effect of the amendment of the gentleman in particular and in the aggregate is to reduce expenditures, and I am not without sympathy with the policy of the gentleman from Indiana in that respect. I often vote with him in this House upon questions of economy and retrenchment, and I have no doubt that he has often been very useful in his place here in the attention he has given to subjects of this kind.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. I want to ask my friend from Ohio a question. Will he hear me.

Mr. MONROE. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of New York. Did my friend vote yesterday with the gentleman from Indiana to increase the salary of the superintendent of the folding-room? [Laughter.]

Mr. MONROE. I do not recollect whether I voted for that or not, nor do I suppose that it is very important to the consideration of the question now before the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to vote with the gentleman from Indiana upon this question if I could really understand the grounds upon which his proposition is based. The gentleman from Indiana has, both at the last session of Congress and this, proposed amendments of this kind in connection with the diplomatic service without, so far as I know, presenting to the House the grounds upon which his proposals are made. Now, I do not wish to vote in the dark upon a matter of this sort. I am in favor of a reduction of expenses, wherever it can be properly and reasonably made, as sincerely as the gentleman from Indiana. I desire to support every effort for honest, reasonable economy; but I think it a mistake on the part of the Committee on Appropriations at the last session, and of some of its members at this session, to advocate a reduction of salaries in the diplomatic service without giving reasons for these reductions. I think they ought to explain to us what investigations they have had, what facts they have ascertained, what inquiries they have made, what knowledge they have as to the cost of living at foreign courts.

Mr. FOSTER. My colleague will allow me to correct him? This is not a report of the committee, but a volunteer amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana; it does not come from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague on the committee will understand that I did not offer it as coming from the committee; I offered it on my own motion.

Mr. FOSTER. But my colleague [Mr. MONROE] has treated it as though it came from the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MONROE. I believe I have the floor, and I hope, if other gentleman are allowed to consume my five minutes, my time will be extended a little, because I wish to say a word or two upon this question. My colleague, Mr. FOSTER, misunderstood my statement in reference to the Committee on Appropriations. One branch of it had reference to the action of the committee and the other had reference to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana. It seems to me that the mistake made by the majority of the committee at the last session, and by the gentleman from Indiana and those who sympathize with him at this, is that they have never given us the grounds for these reductions, and I am called upon to vote utterly in the dark. I do not know why we should be called upon to reduce the salaries of ministers from $17,500 to $15,000, or from $12,000 to $10,000; and I could not give to an intelligent constituent, who might ask me, one word of explanation why the reduction was made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAMPSON obtained the floor, and yielded his time to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. I thank my friend from Iowa for yielding me the floor. I think more than half of my time has been occupied by others.

I sincerely desire to do right in regard to propositions of this kind. I am a friend of honest economy; but I do not know any reason why the gentleman from Indiana did not propose to make these salaries $12,000 instead of $15,000, or $8,000,000 instead of $10,000,000. Why not reduce the salaries that are now at $12,000 to $6,000? We seem to be in the dark, and the effort is made to chop off so much without our knowing why. Let us know why it is that the salary of the minister to Great Britain should be cut down from $17,500 to $15,000 or why it should not be cut down more. Why should the salary of the minister to Brazil be reduced from $12,000 to $10,000? How happens it that that is just the amount of reduction that should be made? Has the gentleman examined the subject so as to be able to say that the line should be run just there, or is it a blow struck in the dark? Is it merely a well-meant but blind proposition to reduce expenditures, without knowing the effect of the reduction or why the reduction should be made?

I suppose we shall all agree in this, that we should pay our ministers abroad enough to enable them to live decently and becomingly among their peers there. We certainly do not wish them to live extravagantly or magnificently, or to make any great or senseless show or parade, but we wish them to appear like gentlemen representing a great nation, and serving along with their peers, the representatives of other great nations at foreign courts. We should pay them enough for that, and no more.

Now is this the place to run the line? What facts have we in regard to this matter? What investigations have been made on this subject? This question as to how much a representative abroad should receive in order that he may be able to live reputably there is a question of fact, a question to be settled by testimony, by the evidence of intelligent men. It so happens that in this country we have a large number of distinguished gentlemen of the very highest character who have heretofore served their country abroad, and who have certainly no interest in misrepresenting this matter. They are gentlemen who are accessible to members of the Committee on Appropriations and to members of this House, gentlemen whose judgment as regards how much ought really to be appropriated to this branch of the service certainly should have very great weight.

I would like to know whether my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has ever taken any measures to obtain information from these gentlemen. We have in this very city one of the most distinguished names in the country, a gentleman who lately served his government as its representative at the court of Berlin. We also have in our country a very distinguished gentleman, a gentleman of the very highest character, certainly one above all suspicion of self-interest in the decision of a question like this, who for many years served as our representative at the court of St. James. And there are other sources of information from which we could learn something of what we really should expend for purposes of this kind.

Has the gentleman from Indiana taken any pains to consult these gentlemen and to get at the facts in order to ascertain what is really demanded so that a representative of the United States may live creditably at these courts? I certainly wish to pay these gentlemen enough for that purpose; I do not want to pay them any more; I do not want them to make money out of the position. But it does seem to me that when we have so many opportunities for acquiring information of real value we ought to obtain that information, and not work in the dark; not indulge in any mere guess-work as regards the course we ought to pursue.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have always observed that a residence abroad has a very peculiar effect on the American citizen. Even so fair-minded and good a gentleman as my friend from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] is not an exception to that general rule, as to the effect of a residence abroad. The smallest matter of diplomacy must be dignified by the appropriation of vast sums of money; and the honor and dignity of the position, as also the honor and dignity of the nation, seem to be involved in the amount of money appropriated in connection with the office.

Now, will my friend from Ohio tell me how it happens that the distinguished gentleman to whom he has just referred, residing, I believe, at this time in this city, continued for many years in Berlin as our minister to that court, and made no complaint, although his salary was $12,000 a year? The salary of that position is now $17,500 a year. The distinguished citizen to which reference has been made held the position during a period when the expense of living was as great in Germany as it is at the present time. Will my friend, who now talks about cutting down and splitting hairs upon a question of salary, tell us how it happens that a few years ago that very distinguished scholar esteemed the salary of $12,000 for the minister in Berlin as a very ample salary, and was willing to hold the post for that compensation, and now even $15,000 is not deemed sufficient, but my friend wishes the salary to remain at $17,500?

Will he also tell us how it was that a few years ago our ministers to the court of Russia, one of whom is now in the body sitting at the other end of this Capitol, deemed this salary of $12,500 sufficient, and at that salary the Government was enabled to command the best talent which this or any other country could furnish, and yet at this time a salary of $15,000 a year is deemed insufficient?

Sir, the truth is that this whole diplomatic system ought to be abolished. I admit the weakness of the argument to fix these salaries. The whole system should be abolished, and in the enlightened progress of the ages it will soon disappear in every one of the important powers of the world. Whatever pertains to the diplomacy of this country is transacted from our capital with the capitals of other nations. Treaties are so made; even the most unimportant treaties comparatively speaking are so made. The different nations of the world have been brought close together by the developments of science during the last few years. The reasons for retaining this relic of the feudal ages have become entirely obsolete. I admit the argument of my friend; you weaken the proposition when you talk about continuing these positions at all. They are the merest sinecures, as my friend very well knows.

This proposition does not come from the Committee on Appropriations. I have offered it as a member upon this floor. If I have not already so stated, I state it now. The salaries I think are higher now than they ought to be. During the past year many of our distinguished diplomatic representatives spent almost the entire season, summer and fall, in our own country, leaving their ministerial duties in the hands of subordinates receiving comparatively small salaries, such as secretaries of legation; yet I have not learned that the public interests suffered at all. Did the public interest suffer when our minister to Spain came home and remained for months?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HALE. In replying to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] I wish to direct the attention of the committee to a practical point in connection with this matter; that is the question whether we are now prepared, against the voice of the Committee on Appropriations, to enter into a new combat with the Senate. Last year, upon this very bill, the House took its stand and sent to the Senate a measure making many reductions. All of us remember how, during the hot summer days, the fight was waged upon that bill in conference committee after conference committee until at last an agreement was reached in a spirit of compromise, by which the House abandoned certain things and the Senate certain other things. The main object of the House was reached in this, that the appropriation as formerly made by this bill was reduced something more than $200,000, a good work to be done; and upon that both Houses came into accord and passed the bill.

Now this year the Committee on Appropriations has seen fit, with small reductions amounting to $30,000, to take that settlement agreed upon by the two Houses, and has so reported the bill now before the committee. The gentleman from Indiana is not content with that, but seeks to go further and to renew in this short session that old fight with the Senate, in which democratic as well as republican Senators took ground against this House. The gentleman proposes to embark us again in that controversy. I do not believe that anything will be gained by a re-opening of that question. Even if the House should in this bill reduce the salaries of these first-class ministers and others comprehended in this amendment, I do not believe that in the end anything practical will be accomplished. It is my conviction (in this I may be mistaken) that the House is not prepared to enter again into that contest.

The gentleman from Indiana and his party reduced the appropriation bills last year something like $25,000,000; and they received the credit of it. I do not believe that there is now any call to disturb that adjustment. We are asked by this amendment to reduce the salaries of these ministers when every particle of testimony shows that they do not receive too much, when all examinations show that the salaries are small compared with those paid at the same places by other nations. In these positions some state and style must be kept up; not extravagantly, but in accord with our own standing as a nation; and no man, I venture to say, can be found who will claim that any one of these ministers has been able to save a dollar from his salary.

The cases referred to by the gentleman from Indiana, where it is stated our ministers abroad were able to live upon less than the sums now given, were, I believe, without exception cases of gentlemen who spent large sums in this service aside from their salaries. The result of paring and cutting down the salaries of these high and dignified stations must finally be that none but wealthy men can take these places, men who have accumulated property and desire to be sent abroad, without reference to the question whether the salary of the position will support them. I do not believe the House is desirous to bring about such a state of things.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the argument with which my colleague on the committee [Mr. HALE] started out, that the Senate will not consent to such reductions as we may propose, seems to me directly in conflict with the rules of this House. In ascertaining what it is proper for us to do, it is not fitting for us to consider what attitude the Senate may take in the matter. I think the House will not entertain such a consideration for a single moment, if the public interest justifies the adoption of a different course.

With the view of weakening somewhat the force of this proposition, it has been said that it comes from my friend from Indiana personally, not from the Committee on Appropriations. But, sir, we all remember well that this proposition in respect to every one of these missions was sanctioned with energy by this side of the House during the last session of Congress; and hence, so far as the principle goes, it has been sanctioned not alone by the Committee on Appropriations, but by a large majority of the members of this House.

The honorable gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MONROE] asks—and he repeats and presses the inquiry—how does the gentleman get at this particular sum? Why, sir, that might be asked in reference to any question of this kind. How was the sum of $8 a day reached as the former pay of members of Congress; and how was a higher rate afterward reached? Who can tell why the salary of the President of the United States should have been enhanced from $25,000 to exactly $50,000? Can any one say how this precise figure was reached? This very same difficulty arises in regard to any question of salary.

As to these ministers, there are some reasons which make it necessary that they and others holding positions in this service should have their pay reduced. We have a debt of over $2,000,000,000. We have a pension-roll of $29,000,000. Our ordinary expenses are threefold what they were before the war, when these salaries were fixed. There is a large indebtedness all over this land—State, county, corporate, and individual. It has been stated that the interest on our public debt exceeds the net profits of the labor of the country. These are reasons which make it necessary that there should be greater economy in the administration of every department of this Government than in 1855.

Gentlemen say that in 1855 the salary of our minister to Great Britain was fixed at $17,500, and they ask why we now propose to reduce it. But, sir, can the same thing be said of these other missions? Is it true of the mission to Russia, or the mission to France? Why, sir, in 1872 the salary of the Russian mission was increased to $17,500. Up to that period it had been what we propose in this amendment to make it. Our minister at Berlin received prior to that time the very same salary we now propose to allow him in this amendment.

In view of these facts I think there are reasons why these reductions shall be made.

Gentlemen speak about our having made reductions in reference to the diplomatic service. What reductions have we made?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCKNER. I rise to what I believe to be a privileged question, and that is to move that the committee rise, in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of the business of the District of Columbia, which was set for two o'clock to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can move that the committee rise, but he cannot move to proceed to any particular business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOOKER reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the special order, which was the bill (H. R. No. 4251) making appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1878, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The hour of two o'clock having arrived, the House, under previous order, proceeds to the consideration of the business of the Committee for the District of Columbia, and reports are now in order from that committee.

TAX-LIEN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3558) to provide for the settlement of tax-lien certificates erroneously issued by the late authorities of the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that in order to settle and pay to the holders of those tax-lien certificates purporting to have been issued pursuant to an act of the Legislative Assembly of the District of Columbia, approved June 24, 1873, which in fact were erroneously issued by the late authorities of said District against property exempt from taxation, or upon which the taxes purporting to be represented by said certificates had been paid, the commissioners of the District be, and they are thereby, authorized to pay to the holders of such certificates, upon surrender of the same, the amount of the original debts of the District for which such certificates were respectively issued, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the dates on which payment of such debts was attempted to be made with such erroneous certificates; and where moneys were paid into the District treasury by way of purchase from the late District authorities of such erroneously issued tax-lien certificates, said commissioners are hereby authorized to pay to the present holders of the same, upon surrendering the same, the amount so paid, with interest thereon at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date of such payment into the treasury. And immediately upon the redemption of such erroneously issued certificates the same shall be canceled, and a proper record of such payment and cancellation be made.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I raise the point of order that under Rule 112 this bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BUCKNER. I do not think that rule applies to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri on the point of order.

Mr. BUCKNER. The rule does not apply to money which is to come out of the District of Columbia treasury, but only to that which comes out of the Treasury of the Government of the United States.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We are proceeding under the theory that this is money under the control of the Congress of the United States. We are responsible, as I understand, for the interest on the bonds of this District. All money coming out of the treasury of this District affects the Treasury of the United States necessarily.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order again.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We are proceeding on the theory that the treasury of the District of Columbia, that the money of this District, is as much under the control of Congress as any other money in the Treasury of the United States. It is generally believed that we are responsible for the interest on the bonds of the District. That is the theory, and if we grant authority to pay money out of the District treasury to-day, we may be called upon hereafter to re-imburse the District treasury for any amount which may be lacking. In other words, it is almost impossible to separate the District treasury from the Treasury of the United States. To be sure, certain taxes are levied upon the property of people in this District to pay certain expenses, but all which may be needed to make the required amount will have to be made up by Congress. To authorize the payment of money out of the District treasury is tantamount, according to the theory upon which we have been acting, to authorize any payment out of the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that it must appear plainly on the face of the bill itself that the money is to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States. The Chair might agree in opinion with the gentleman from Iowa, that ultimately the United States may have to re-imburse this money; but he does not see on the face of the bill that it takes any money out of the Treasury of the United States. The point of order is therefore overruled.

Mr. BANKS. This bill merely grants legislative authority for the expenditure of this money out of the District treasury, and is not what may be called an appropriation bill of money out of the Treasury of the United States. Therefore I think the Chair is right.

Mr. BUCKNER. In order that the House may understand the object of this legislation, I will state that, during the existence of the District territorial government, for the purpose of anticipating the revenues a District law was passed authorizing the issue of certain tax-lien certificates for a certain time therein mentioned, to be deposited in the treasury of the District, and upon which money was be to raised. They were authorized to be taken in lieu of any debts due the District. It turned out that to the amount of $55,000 they were transferred for other evidences of debt, and got into the possession of parties who paid their money for them. The simple object of the proposition is to enable the parties who advanced the money to this District to get it back with 6 per cent. of interest. If gentlemen do not desire to be heard on the question. I will demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DEPREDATIONS UPON DISTRICT PROPERTY.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4041) to prevent depredations upon property in the District of Columbia, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that every person who, in the District of Columbia, shall willfully and without color of right enter into any occupied or unoccupied dwelling-house or other building, the property of another, and shall cut, break, or tear from its place any gas-pipe, water-pipe, door-bell, or other fixture therein; or who shall in such dwelling-house or other building cut, break, or tear down any wall, or part of a wall, or door, with intent to cut, break, or tear from its place any pipe or fixture therein, shall for the first offense be fined not more than $200 and be imprisoned in the District jail not less than two months or more than one year, and for any subsequent offense shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary for not less than one year or more than three years.

Mr. BUCKNER demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BUCKNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONSTABLES' BONDS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. NEAL, from the same committee, reported back, with the recommendation that it do pass, the bill (S. No. 526) to amend section 1036 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That section 1036 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia, be amended to read as follows:

"Each constable shall, before performing any of the duties of his office, take the oath prescribed for civil officers in the District, and shall enter into a bond to the United States in the sum of $5,000, with security, to be approved by the clerk of the supreme court of the District, conditioned for the faithful performance of the duties of his office, and for the punctual payment of all moneys coming into his hands to the persons entitled to receive the same. And the clerk of said supreme court shall approve of no bond of any constable until at least three bondsmen shall sign said constable's bond, and each of said bondsmen shall file with said constable's bond an affidavit that he is the owner in fee-simple of unincumbered real estate, situated in the District of Columbia, of the cash value of at least $5,000."

Mr. NEAL. The only change which this bill makes in the law as it now is, is to require bonds of constables to be signed by three bondsmen, and each one of the bondsmen to file an affidavit that he is the owner in fee-simple of unincumbered real estate in this District of the value in cash of at least $5,000 before his bond is approved by the clerk of the supreme court of the District.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. NEAL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REPAVEMENT OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. CATE, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with amendments, the bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue" and the act amendatory thereof.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That so much of said act, and the act amendatory thereof, approved August 15, 1876, as provides that the said pavement shall be fully completed and ready for use January 15, 1877, is hereby amended so as to extend the time for the completion of said work to the —— day of ——, 1877: Provided, That before this act shall take effect and be in force the sureties in the contract for doing said work shall file with the commissioners of the District of Columbia their consent, in writing, to the extension of time provided for in this act.

SEC. 2. That section 6 of the said act approved July 19, 1876, is hereby so amended as to read as follows:

That if the Washington and Georgetown Railroad Company, or any private citizen, or other corporation or person, shall neglect or refuse to pay the amount assessed for the paving herein authorized in front of or adjoining their property, when the work so fronting or adjoining their property shall have been completed to the satisfaction of the commission provided for in this act, and assessed by the commissioners of the District of Columbia, within —— days after the notification of such assessment shall have been published in one or more of the daily newspapers printed and published within said District of Columbia, the said commissioners of the District of Columbia shall issue certificates of indebtedness against the property subject to assessment according to the provisions of this act; which certificates shall contain a description of the property, the amount and purpose for which the property is assessed, and the time when the holder will be entitled to a deed thereon, according to the provisions of this act. The said certificates are hereby declared negotiable and transferable by delivery, and shall bear interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, and be and remain a lien, until paid, upon the property on or against which they are issued. And if the said certificates are not paid within one year from the date thereof, the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall, on the application of any holder of any such certificate, sell so much of the property described therein as may be necessary to pay the sum due, together with costs of sale; such sale or sales to be advertised daily for one week next prior to the sale, in some daily newspaper printed and published in the city of Washington, and be made at public auction to the highest bidder; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners of the District of Columbia to make and deliver to the purchaser at any such sale a deed of the premises sold, which deed, properly executed, shall be deemed and held to be a good and perfect title to the property therein described and sold under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the owner, or any person having an interest in the property so sold as mortgagee, judgment creditor, or otherwise, may redeem the same by paying the amount for which the said property was sold, together with costs of sale and fees for recording the said deed, and interest thereon at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum, at any time within one year from the time of sale.

SEC. 3. That the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall enter in a book, to be by them kept for that purpose, a duplicate of all certificates of indebtedness issued by them under the provisions of this act, and redemptions therefrom shall be made, whether before or after sale, by paying to the said commissioners of the District of Columbia the sum due upon any assessment certificate or sale, with interest and cost at the time of any such redemption, and the fact of such payment shall be entered of record on the margin opposite the duplicate of the certificate redeemed; and the said commissioners shall give to the person making such payment a receipt or certificate of such fact, and such payment shall be held effectual to discharge the lien created by the assessment provided for in this act. The money so paid shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States, and paid out upon the orders of the said commissioners to the holders of the certificates or purchasers at any such sale in redemption of which said money was paid.

SEC. 4. That the said commissioners shall retain 10 per cent. of the aggregate amount of the face value of the said certificates of indebtedness as a part of the guarantee-fund mentioned in the second section of the said act approved July 19, 1876; and the balance of the said certificates shall be delivered, to the contractor or contractors performing said work, at their face value, in part payment therefor, as contemplated in said act of July 19, giving to the several contractors the certificates of assessments on the property opposite to or adjoining that portion of the work done by him or them respectively.

Mr. CATE. I ask that the report of the committee showing the amendments which are recommended, be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee for the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4281) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the repavement of Pennsylvania avenue," and the act amendatory thereof, report the same back to the House with the following recommendations:

First, That the whole bill after the first section be stricken out.

Second. That the blank in the eighth line of section 1 be filled with the word "first" and the blank in the ninth line with the word "June," so as to extend the time for the completion of said work to the 1st day of June, 1877.

Third. That the proviso in section 1 be amended so as to read as follows:

"Provided, That the sureties in the contract for doing said work shall file with the said paving commissioners their consent in writing to the extension of time provided for in this act, and in default thereof that the contractors shall file a new bond to the satisfaction of the said paving commissioners before said contractors shall be entitled to any benefits under the provisions of this act."

Mr. CATE. It will be remembered that the law which authorized the doing of this work contemplated but one contract. The contract, however, was divided into two. The work has been prosecuted with reasonable diligence, in the opinion of the committee; and the part of the contract at this end of the Avenue could be completed in about one day; the other end of the Avenue would require about twenty-two days to complete it. It would have been completed long ere this if the weather had been favorable.

The committee are satisfied that the fault of the non-completion does not lie with the contractors and that they have prosecuted the work with reasonable diligence; but that it is wholly in consequence of the inclemency of the weather. A shorter time than that required by this act of course would complete the work if the weather was favorable; but the committee conceive that it is important that the completion of the work and the time of the acceptance of it should be when the Avenue is not covered with snow, and the ground frozen, as it is of course desirable that the work should be completed in as good order as possible. We believe that it would be unjust to the contractors and probably to the public if it were required that this work should be completed and accepted during the winter season and are satisfied it is better to wait until the ground shall settle and the frost shall be entirely out of it. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendments of the committee were adopted.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CATE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MUTUAL FIRE-INSURANCE COMPANY OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. CATE also, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 4202) to amend the charter of the Mutual Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act to incorporate the Mutual Fire-Insurance Company of the District of Columbia, approved January 10, 1855, be so amended as to authorize the interest on the premium notes held by said company to accumulate to the extent of $250 0 0; and also to authorize said company to acquire and hold real estate, not exceeding $100,000 cash value at any one time.

Mr. CATE. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CATE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT RECORDER'S OFFICE.

Mr. HARTRIDGE, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (S. No. 752) authorizing the recorder of the District of Columbia to appoint an assistant with certain powers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the recorder of deeds for the District of Columbia is authorized to appoint a deputy recorder; and all deeds of conveyance, leases, powers of attorney, and other written instruments required to be filed and recorded, and all copies of instruments and records, and certificates authorized by law, filed, recorded, made, and certified by the deputy recorder, shall have the same legality, force, and effect as if performed by the recorder. In case of a vacancy in the office of recorder by death, resignation, or other cause, the deputy recorder shall act until a recorder shall be duly appointed and qualified.

The recorder shall be allowed by the District for all record books, dockets, and furniture necessary for his office.

Mr. HARTRIDGE. I call for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HARTRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON CITY AND ATLANTIC RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HENKLE, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 1860) to incorporate the Washington City and Atlantic Coast Railroad Company.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That C. C. Cox, A. M. Gangewer, M. Meigs, Allan Rutherford, J. A. Lynch, W. F. Sliney, C. D. Sloan, G. W. C. Waite, ——, ——, toge'her with such persons as may become associated with them for that purpose, together with their successors, are hereby created and erected into a body corporate and politic, in deed and in law, by the name and title of the Washington City and Atlantic Coast Railroad Company, and by that name have perpetual succession, and may sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, and be defended, in the courts of law and equity within the District of Columbia, and may use a common seal, and adopt by-laws for the regulation of its government.

SEC 2. That the said corporation is hereby fully authorized and empowered to survey, locate, lay out, construct, collect tolls upon, maintain, and enjoy a railroad line, with the appurtenances and machinery necessary for one or more tracks, within the District of Columbia, commencing on the southern bank of the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River, at or near the village of Uniontown, and from thence to the line dividing the District of Columbia from Prince George's County, in the State of Maryland, and from said line to Upper Marlborough in said county or adjacent thereto, and from thence to the Chesapeake Bay in Anne Arundel County, in said State of Maryland, and there, as also at its terminus on the Eastern Branch aforesaid, to construct one or more depots and a wharf or wharves for the purpose of landing and transferring goods and passengers, and to own and hire steamboats for that purpose.

SEC. 3. That the capital stock of said railroad company shall consist of 25,000 shares of $50 each; which stock shall in all respects be deemed personal property, and shall be transferable in such manner as by the by-laws of said company shall be provided.

SEC. 4. That it shall be lawful for the said railroad company to borrow from time to time sums of money not exceeding in the entire $500,000, and to issue bonds therefor bearing interest not exceeding 7 per cent., payable semi-annually, and to mortgage as security therefor all the corporate rights, franchises, property, real and personal, of what kind soever, belonging to said company.

SEC. 5. That the persons herein named as corporators, or a majority of them, shall, within ninety days after the passage and approval of this act, meet in the city of Washington for the purpose of prescribing regulations for opening books of subscription to said capital stock, at such times and places as they may designate by public notice of at least ten days in two daily papers in the city of Washington; and said books shall be kept open until $100,000 of said stock shall be subscribed; and 5 per cent. on all subscriptions shall be paid in lawful money at the time of subscribing to the person or persons authorized by the corporators to receive the same; and whenever that amount shall have been subscribed, and 20 per cent. of the same paid as above described, it shall be the duty of the above-named corporators (a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business) to call a meeting of the stockholders, at the city of Washington, for the purpose of electing directors of the said corporation; and each share of said stock on which the said 20 per cent. has been paid as hereinbefore provided shall entitle the owner to one vote. The corporators herein named shall designate a majority of their number to act as inspectors of elections, which majority of inspectors so designated shall certify under their names the directors thus duly elected, and shall notify them of their election and the time and place of the first meeting of the said board of directors. At such meeting the above corporators shall deliver to the said directors the books of subscription to the said Washington City and Atlantic Coast Railroad Company, together with the amount paid thereon, with a full report of their proceedings under this act; and thereupon the duties of the corporators hereinbefore named shall cease and determine forever; and thereafter the said directors, with their successors or assigns, shall constitute the said body politic and corporate. The directors thus chosen shall hold their office for one year, and until others are elected and qualified to fill their places. A majority of said directors shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business.

SEC. 6. That the said directors shall, at their first meeting, elect, from their own number, a president and a vice-president. They may also from time to time elect a treasurer, a secretary, a chief engineer, and a general superintendent, together with such other officers, agents, and employés as they may deem necessary, each of whom shall hold office or position during the pleasure of said board of directors. The directors shall have power to fill all vacancies in the board which may be caused by death or resignation, except as is hereinbefore provided for. The treasurer shall give bonds with security, as the board shall from time to time require. Meetings of the stockholders of the said corporation for the election of directors and for the transaction of business shall be holden annually, and at such other times and upon such notice as may be prescribed by the by-laws. The directors of the said corporation may require the subscribers to the capital stock to pay the amount by them subscribed respectively at such times and in such manner and in such installments as they may deem proper; and, if any stockholder shall refuse or neglect to pay any installment as required by a resolution of the board of directors, the said board may forfeit said stock for non-payment, and all previous payments shall revert in law and in equity to the said corporation under such regulations, or may sue for and collect the unpaid installments in any court of competent jurisdiction.

SEC. 7. That the said corporation is hereby empowered to purchase, lease, receive, improve, and hold such real estate or other property as may be necessary for accomplishing the objects of this act, and may, by their agents, engineers, contractors, or workmen, immediately enter upon, take possession of, and use all such real estate and property as may be necessary for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said railroad and the accommodations appertaining thereto. But all real estate or property thus entered upon and appropriated by said railway, and the accommodations appertaining thereto, which are not donations, shall be purchased by said corporation from the owner or owners of the same at a price to be mutually agreed upon between them; and in case of a disagreement as to price of any real estate or property situate in the District of Columbia, the said corporation, or the owner or owners of such real estate or property, shall apply by petition to a justice of the supreme court of the District of Columbia, particularly describing the property; and the said justice shall direct the manner of ascertaining the true value of said real estate or other property, together with the damages which the owner or owners thereof have sustained or may sustain by reason of the appropriation, occupation, and use thereof by the said corporation; and the said justice shall appoint not less than three nor more than seven competent and disinterested commissioners, who shall be freeholders of the District of Columbia, and who shall, under the direction of said justice, view said premises or property, take such testimony as they may deem proper, make appraisement, and determine said damages, and report the same under oath and in writing to said justice. The report shall contain a minute and accurate description of the real estate and other property appraised, together with all the evidence taken by the commissioners in the case. It shall be the duty of said justice to examine the report of said commissioners, and, upon application of either party, he shall give the parties a hearing in relation thereto; and he shall have power to increase or diminish said appraisal or damages, if he shall become satisfied upon such hearing that injustice has been done. Upon proof to the said justice, to be made within sixty days after his determination, of payment to the owner or owners, or depositing to the credit of the owner or owners, or their legal representatives, in such banking institution as said justice shall direct, the amount of said award, and the payment of all expenses attending the same, including an allowance of $3 per diem to each of the aforesaid commissioners, the said justice shall order or decree, particularly describing said real estate or other property, and reciting the appraisement of damages, and the mode of making it, together with such facts as he may deem pertinent; and when the said order or decree shall be recorded in the recorder's office of said court, the said corporation, or its successors or assigns, shall be legally and equitably seized and possessed of such real estate or other property, for the use and for the purposes hereinbefore described. In case any married woman, infant, idiot, insane person, or non-resident of the District of Columbia, in which said real estate or other property may be situated, shall be interested in such real estate or other property, the said justice shall appoint some competent disinterested person to appear before said commissioners, and act for and on behalf of such married woman, infant, idiot, insane person, or non-resident. And as to the appropriation of any real estate or property in the State of Maryland, necessary for the purposes of said railway, and the accommodations appertaining thereto, which are not donations, shall be purchased by said corporation from the owner or owners of the same, at a price to be mutually agreed upon; and in case of a disagreement as to the price of any such real estate or property the said corporation or owners of such real estate or property shall take such proceedings before court of competent jurisdiction, or before such other tribunal or public officer as is now or may be hereafter provided by the laws of the State of Maryland in such cases.

SEC. 8. That if any person shall willfully do, or cause to be done, any act or acts whatever whereby any building, structure, or other work, or any engine, car, or machine, or other property appertaining to said railway, shall be injured, impaired, or destroyed, or stopped, the person or persons so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof by any court of competent jurisdiction, shall be punished by a fine at the discretion of the court of not more than $5,000 and the assessed value of the property destroyed or injured, or by imprisonment of not more than two years, or both, at the discretion of the court, and also forfeit and pay to the said company, its successors and assigns, the amount of damages sustained by means of such offense, to be recovered by said company, with costs of suit, by an action of debt or case, or in such manner as provided by law.

SEC. 9. That said railway company shall not grant to any railway company or other corporation the exclusive right to transfer passengers or freights over said railway; but any privileges granted to one corporation shall be extended to all who may make application for such privilege on the same terms, conditions, and rates, and shall not sell, transfer, or lease their corporate rights to any company that shall not check baggage or commute fares with all connecting railways upon the terms specified in this section.

SEC. 10. That the said corporation shall, as soon as practicable after the election of directors as hereinbefore provided, so commence and prosecute the work of constructing and equipping said railway that it shall be fully completed and equipped in five years from and after the first board of directors have been elected.

SEC. 11. That said railway shall be a post-route and a military road; and Congress may at any time fix rates of tariff for troops, marines, materials of war, and mails, and may add to, alter, or amend this act.

The amendment reported by the committee was to amend the seventh section by striking out all after the word "shall," in the sixteenth line, to the end of the sixtieth line, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Take such proceedings as are for that purpose provided by the act of Congress of May 5, 1870, entitled "An act to provide for the creation of corporations in the District of Columbia by general law."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENKLE] whether this railroad proposed to be incorporated by this bill is confined within the limits of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HENKLE. I will state that this is an ordinary act of incorporation, to enable this company to build a railroad from the south side of the Eastern Branch to the Chesapeake Bay. It does not confer any rights outside of the portion of the District of Columbia through which it passes inconsistent with the laws of Maryland.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to reserve points of order upon this bill, as I cannot hear a word the gentleman from Maryland says.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question I wish to ask is, whether this bill confers upon the company proposed to be incorporated by its provisions the power to construct a railroad through a portion of the State of Maryland; and, if so, does the gentleman from Maryland think that it is within the power of Congress to incorporate a company to construct a railroad beyond the limits of the District of Columbia?

Mr. HENKLE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that there is an express provision in the bill in regard to the proceeding of the company on the territory of Maryland, that it shall be constructed under the general incorporation laws of the State of Maryland.

This is an ordinary act of incorporation, as I have already said, for the construction of a railroad from the south side of the Eastern Branch to the Chesapeake Bay, and probably about four miles of the proposed road are in the District of Columbia. I do not think there are any extraordinary provisions in the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Are the corporators required to become incorporated under the laws of Maryland before they construct the road?

Mr. HENKLE. The bill is very carefully guarded or I would not have offered it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] reserved points of order on this bill.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I would like to have read the last section of the bill, relating to the power of Congress in this matter.

The Clerk again read the eleventh section.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The usual clause of that kind is "that Congress shall have power to alter, amend, or repeal." I do not insist upon the point of order against the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa suggests an amendment, to add to the eleventh section the words "or repeal."

Mr. HENKLE. I have no objection to that whatever.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should be glad to have that portion of the bill read which authorizes the corporators to operate beyond the limits of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HENKLE. I will then ask the Clerk to read the last clause of the seventh section of the bill.

The Clerk again read the last clause of the seventh section of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. That provision does not reach the question. It only relates to the way in which condemned property shall be paid for. I submit that if we charter a company to construct a railroad in the State of Maryland we should be taking a step further than we have ever yet gone.

Mr. HENKLE. I have no objection to any amendment that the gentleman from Indiana may offer to obviate his objection.

Mr. REAGAN. This is the incorporation of a railroad company by act of Congress, and the clause read merely recognizes the authority of the State of Maryland in regard to the condemnation of property, but it charters the company to operate a road in the District of Columbia and in the State of Maryland, and I agree with the gentleman from Indiana in regard to that. I know of no precedent or authority for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. There have been a great many such bills before Congress, but we have never passed them. I ask for the reading of the first and second sections of the bill.

The Clerk again read the first and second sections of the bill.

Mr. HENKLE. I suggest to the gentleman the following amendment, to be added to the second section of the bill:

Provided, That this act of incorporation shall have no effect or operation outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOLMAN. That covers the ground.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask the gentleman to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENKLE. I will hear the amendment.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I would call attention to section 11 of this bill, which provides that "Congress may at any time fix rates of tariff for troops, marines, materials of war, and mails." It leaves to the company the power to fix their own tariff for all other property. Now, while I suppose that the power reserved in this bill to Congress to alter or amend this act would give the power to prescribe the rates of freight on other property, it seems to me that it would be well to incorporate a distinct provision to that effect. I therefore move to amend section 11, line 3, by inserting after the words "materials of war" the words "and all other freight and passengers."

Mr. HENKLE. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HENKLE] to yield to me to offer an amendment.

Mr. HENKLE. I will hear it read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the company receiving the benefits of this grant shall not charge for transporting persons or merchandise more for a less than for a greater distance, nor discriminate against shippers from the same point on their line to any other point on their line, or to points on other lines of railroad.

Mr. HENKLE. I am decidedly opposed to that amendment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Why is the gentleman opposed to it?

Mr. HENKLE. I am a granger, but I would not vote for that amendment under existing circumstances.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Then I give notice that I shall oppose this bill at every point.

Mr. HOAR. There have been two instances within a few years past of railroads chartered by Congress, one a street railway and the other a steam railway, under general charters like this, and they undertook to lay out their roads across Government land. They took the ground that they had received from Congress authority to go from point to point, and as they could not do so without crossing the property of the Government, they were entitled to go over the Government land. In one case the railroad laid its track right along the river-front of the Insane Hospital grounds of this District, very materially injuring the value of those grounds for the purposes of the asylum. Now, I suggest to the gentleman whether there should not be some provision in this bill to prohibit the crossing of any land belonging to the United States without express authority from some tribunal, either Congress or some designated public authority. Otherwise we will have the same trouble over again with this bill that we had with regard to the other two bills.

Mr. HENKLE. I do not believe that this projected road will run through any Government property; but I have no objection to an amendment incorporating the idea suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

Mr. HOAR. I then move to add to section 7 that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no property belonging to the United States or the District of Columbia, or any property heretofore appropriated by the United States to public use, shall be entered upon or used under the authority granted by this act, excepting such highways as it shall be necessary to cross.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENKLE. I now call the previous question upon the bill as amended.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And I move to lay the bill and amendments upon the table.

The question was taken; and upon a division there were—ayes 18, noes 35.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Should the House now adjourn when will this bill again come up?

The SPEAKER. On the next day assigned to District of Columbia business.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I move that the House now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

ADVERTISING FOR INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, in regard to the compensation authorized by law to be paid for advertising for that Department in newspapers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SOCORRO, NEW MEXICO.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the report of the surveyor-general of New Mexico on the private land grant to the town of Socorro; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

POSTAL SERVICE OF QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a communication from the Quartermaster-General, asking early action upon a bill appropriating money for postal service; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations for various departments for service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877; and also a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a statement of balances of appropriations required by law to be re-appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, and prior years; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ROBBINS, of North Carolina, for ten days on account of illness;

To Mr. HURD and Mr. VANCE, of Ohio, for Monday and Tuesday next; and

To Mr. FAULKNER, for ten days from and including the 8th instant.

DEFECTIVE ENTRIES OF LAND.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4315) for the relief of the holders of defective entries of land; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and also ordered to be published in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill for the relief of the holders of defective entries of land.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in all cases where an entry has been, or may be, made by any person, other than corporations, in good faith, at the proper local land office, of any tract of land lawfully subject to entry, which may be informal, irregular, defective, or void, and whenever such entry shall be canceled, the person or persons having made such entry, their heirs, devisees, or assigns, shall have the first and preferable right to make a lawful entry of, and procure a patent for, such lands, within one year after notice of such cancellation as herein required; but nothing herein shall divest any right heretofore acquired.

Whenever any entry or patent shall be canceled, the Commissioner of the General Land Office shall give notice thereof by mail, if practicable, to the person claiming the land under such entry, or if it be impracticable to ascertain the name and post-office address of such person, then notice shall be given by publication in such manner as said Commissioner may deem proper.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office shall have power to prescribe all proper rules and regulations to carry this act into effect.

Mr. LAWRENCE. This is a measure of very great importance and should receive prompt action.

The motion of Mr. HOLMAN that the House adjourn was then agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and ten minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS.

The following petitions were presented at the Clerk's desk under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. ELLIS: The petition of Charles H. Levy, of Louisiana, for the removal of his political disabilities, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MILLER: The petition of citizens of Harpersfield, Delaware County, New York, that the General Government purchase and operate the telegraph lines of the country, to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. W. B. WILLIAMS: The petition of Emily E. Wheelock, widow of Edward C. Wheelock, deceased, late a bugler in the Third Michigan Cavalry, for a pension, to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, January 8, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles and referred as indicated below:

The bill (H. R. No. 2114) to give parties contestant time to file on or enter lands under the pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture acts after the contests shall have been finally decided—to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. No. 2283) granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Mexican, Florida, and Black Hawk wars, and certain widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the same—to the Committee on Pensions.

The bill (H. R. No. 3567) to make the ports of Brownsville and Galveston, Texas, ports to which unappraised merchandise may be transported—to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (H. R. No. 3775) fixing the compensation of United States marshals and deputies—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in compliance with section 1665 of the Revised Statutes, a statement exhibiting the expenditures at the Springfield armory, and the arms, components of arms, and appendages fabricated, altered, and repaired thereat during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending to the Senate and House of Representatives the enactment of a law to provide for the better care and protection of quartermaster stores, similar to that approved March 3, 1873, providing for the better care and protection of subsistence supplies; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, inviting the attention of Congress to the present condition of the appropriation for temporary clerks for his Department, and to the necessity of providing an additional appropriation therefor to complete the service for the current fiscal year; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate the annual report of the Public Printer, showing the condition of the public printing, binding, &c., December, 1876; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SPENCER presented the remonstrance of W. W. Corcoran and 50 other property and lease holders on Pennsylvania avenue; which was read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

We, the undersigned property and lease holders on Pennsylvania avenue between First and Fifteenth streets northwest, respectfully protest against having certificates issued which will be a lien upon our property, until Congress shall be satisfied that the pavement now being laid on Pennsylvania avenue is not a failure, as present appearances indicate.

We respectfully submit that the property-holders have already paid for a perishable pavement of wood, laid under a former act of Congress on this thoroughfare, and that inasmuch as the commissioners admit in their report to the President of the United States (using the following language in reference thereto) that the kind of pavements they have selected are still experimental, and that they "depend for their quality upon the proportions of the ingredients used, the amount of heat employed in the preparation, and thorough work in laying. If too great heat be applied, the mixture loses its cementing properties and the pavement becomes a mass of loose powder. This cannot generally be determined during either process of mixing or laying, but is soon developed by use. When this happens, the defective portion is removed, and new material substituted therefor. A large percentage under each contract has been condemned by the commission, and has been, or will be, relaid."

This being the case, and the fact that "a large percentage" of the pavement which was laid during the fine weather of last fall and under the most favorable circumstances, after about two months' wear "lost its cementing qualities and became a mass of loose powder;" and as this process of disintegration is being gradually "developed by use," we respectfully request that no certificates shall be issued against our property for this pavement until these gentlemen shall have finished experimenting and the pavement shall have been sufficiently "developed by use" to satisfy your honorable bodies that it is the "best kind of pavement" that could have been selected for Pennsylvania avenue, as contemplated by the act of Congress approved July 19, 1876, under which the work is being done.

Mr. EATON presented a petition of Yale & Bryan and other leading business men of New Haven, Connecticut, praying the repeal of the bankrupt law; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of Barnett, Morrill & Co., of Hiawatha, Kansas, representing that the taxes now imposed on State, national, and private banks are onerous, unjust, and inequitable, and praying the repeal of the law imposing taxes upon banks; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH presented a memorial of ship-masters commanding deep-water vessels sailing out of the port of San Francisco, California, remonstrating against the passage of House bill No. 3187, amending the shipping act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of 1,068 officers and seamen serving on deep-water vessels sailing out of the port of San Francisco, California, remonstrating against the amendments proposed in House bill No. 3187 to the shipping act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DORSEY presented the memorial of a large number of citizens of Hot Springs, Arkansas, relating to the disposal of the Hot Springs reservation; which was read and referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

Your memorialists, citizens and property-owners of Hot Springs, Arkansas, beg to represent that they are now and have been for a long period of years settlers and residents upon the four sections of land known as the Hot Springs reservation; that during all this time the title has been in dispute, which was finally settled by the decision of the Supreme Court April 24, 1876, vesting the same in the United States; that prior to said decision many substantial improvements had been erected, numbering over one thousand and consisting of residences, hotels, store-houses, bath-houses, private residences, gas-works, churches and public buildings, steam and horse railroads, the aggregate value of which reaches a large sum of money.

The capital represented by these improvements with few exceptions includes all the means your memorialists had at the date of said decision, which fact will not be questioned when it is further represented that nine-tenths of the settlers came here with exhausted means and impaired health and are compelled to remain here for the use of the hot water and baths. We would further represent that by virtue of law and a decree of the Court of Claims a receiver has taken possession of all the land and improvements, and collects a large rental, not only for the use of the land, but for the buildings and the water flowing from said springs.

We beg to further represent that said receiver collects a monthly rental which amounts in the aggregate to a large sum of money for the use of the private residences, store-houses, and all buildings which were erected by and belong to the occupants of the same, that is to say that the United States is collecting from your memorialists a heavy rental for property the undersigned have accumulated by their individual labor and industry and which belongs exclusively to them.

We believe your honorable body will agree with your memorialists that such collections of rent are unjust, inequitable, and without precedent, and that all money so collected should be returned to those who paid it.

We would further represent that more than nine-tenths of the residents upon this reservation are very poor, and owing to the large sums of money which the receiver has collected, and which has been consequently withdrawn from local circulation, business has become paralyzed, building and all improvements stopped, and labor without employment. It is therefore impossible for the greater part of the residents here to pay their monthly installments of rent. In view of the fact that the material value of this property is the result of individual capital and labor, we respectfully ask that your honorable body will, at an early day of the present session, make such disposition of the same as in your wisdom and discretion may be deemed equitable to the settlers and just to the Government and the whole people of the United States.

The Senators and Members of Congress from the State of Arkansas are urged and requested to use their best endeavors to secure the speedy consideration of the subject presented in the foregoing memorial; and we will, in duty bound, ever pray.

Mr. DORSEY presented the petition of Julia Scroggin, widow of Humphrey Scroggin, late private in Captain Worthey's company of Georgia militia in the war of 1812, praying an amendment to the act granting her a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am requested to present the petition of a number of citizens of Cincinnati upon the importance of a peaceful and legal count of the recent presidential election. I notice among the names attached to this petition many of the leading business men of Cincinnati, persons in high social and official positions in the State of Ohio, who are well known throughout the country and of both political parties. Their opinions are entitled to great respect and consideration. Perhaps no number of names from that portion of the United States would be entitled to more consideration and respect from their weight, character, and influence than these gentlemen. The general tone of the petition, also, I think will meet with the almost universal sense of the Senate. There may be differences of opinion as to the particular mode of accomplishing the object they pray for, but the object they seek, the peaceful, quiet, orderly count of the electoral vote, is one that every member of the Senate will heartily concur in. There will be differences of opinion as to the mode that may be devised hereafter for counting the vote, but the importance of the subject and the character of the petitioners entitle this petition to be read in full and to be referred to the select committee having charge of this subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the petition being read? The Chair hears none.

Mr. THURMAN. Before the petition is read I wish to say in one sentence that I entirely concur in what my colleague has said in respect to the character and standing of the gentlemen who have signed it. That the petition is in the most respectful language, and that it is in the proper spirit the Senate will see when they hear it read. As to any of the questions that arise on this subject, I do not now feel it necessary to say a word, but I do commend, as my colleague has done, the petition to the consideration of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the petition.

The Secretary read as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, members of all political parties, beg leave respectfully but earnestly to represent to your honorable bodies that in their belief the citizens of the United States are almost unanimous in the demand that the questions arising from the late presidential election shall be dealt with in a spirit predetermined to harmonize conflicting views, irrespective of the success or defeat of individual candidates.

The undersigned feel that any other course involves perils to the very structure of our Government, which no thoughtful man can contemplate without dread. Even should such perils be averted, a partisan contest in Congress, resulting in the proclamation of a President without the acquiescence of both Houses, would destroy the confidence of the people in the justice of the decision adopted, would weaken their respect for the forms of law, and impair their faith in the adequacy of the Constitution to preserve substantial justice between contending parties.

The consequences of such action could not fail to be deplorable to the country and ruinous to the party which might achieve a temporary triumph. No administration placed in power in any manner that may offend the popular sense of right could conduct the affairs of the nation with credit to itself or advantage to the country. Under such an administration the opposition would enjoy an overwhelming advantage, and a short-lived party triumph would be followed by inevitable downfall. It may be emphatically asserted that the future will belong to those who now show themselves superior to the blind partisanship of the moment, and ready to promote harmony and to avert strife.

Even a prolongation of the existing uncertainty is greatly to be deprecated, entailing, as it must do, a paralysis of industry and a prostration of all material interests, which will work incalculable evil by destroying the demand for labor and depriving of support the poor and unemployed.

The undersigned therefore confidently hope that your honorable bodies will earnestly seek some mode of reaching a decision of the pending questions that will satisfy the conscience of the country. They feel assured that when Senators and Representatives of the United States are called upon to exercise judicial powers fraught with consequences so momentous they will bring to the discharge of their high functions a spirit of fairness and impartiality that will result in virtual unanimity of judgment. A result so reached, whatever it may be, will unquestionably command the willing acquiescence of the whole nation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the petition be referred to the select committee to devise a mode for counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a petition of citizens of Ohio, praying for the enforcement of the provisions of the act of July 24, 1866, to aid in the construction of telegraph lines and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, and for cheaper telegraphic facilities, so as to secure cheap telegraphic communication; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the petition of B. T. Thurlow of New York, praying that additional interest may be paid to those whose claims have been allowed under the Geneva award; a similar petition from Richard B. Buck & Co., of New York; and a similar petition of S. W. Casey, executor of the estate of Thomas Dunham, deceased. I move the reference of these three petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING presented additional papers relating to the petition of Daniel Houlihan, late sergeant of Company F, Eighty-second New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have received and been requested to present to this body the memorial of Charles H. McLellan, and sundry other commercial men and merchants of the city of Bath, Maine, who represent that during the late war they retained their own navigation, under their own flag, at great expense, being compelled to pay extra war premiums. They ask the attention of the Senate to the consideration of the bill of the House distributing the balance of the Geneva award. I desire to express the hope that the Judiciary Committee, in some form at least, will give us that bill, and that we may consider it and act upon it as the judgment of the Senate shall deem best. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say to my friend that certainly the Judiciary Committee has been endeavoring to give that bill the very earliest attention.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WALLACE presented a petition of citizens of Chickies and Marietta, Pennsylvania, praying an amendment of the Constitution so as to provide for the election of President and Vice-President by the direct vote of the people; which was referred to the select committee to devise a mode for counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

He also presented a memorial of citizens and business men of Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, without distinction of party, praying for a speedy and amicable adjustment of the pending political difficulties arising out of the late presidential election; which was referred to the select committee to devise a mode of counting the electoral votes for President and Vice-President.

Mr. BOGY. I presented a few days ago a memorial of Mexican claimants, praying the payment of their claims against the republic of Mexico, and accompanied it with a motion that it be printed. My motion was not heard, and therefore I move now that the memorial be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. EDMUNDS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1119) to extend the operation of the act of February 27, 1875, entitled "An act to provide for settlements with certain railway companies" for one year; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say that I present this bill by request and have no knowledge, information, or belief as to whether it is right or not, but to give gentlemen interested an opportunity to be heard. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PADDOCK (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1120) to modify the mode of appeals from the Patent Office; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1122) to secure the rights of settlers upon certain railroad lands, and to repeal the first five sections of an act entitled "An act granting lands to the State of Kansas to aid in the construction of the Kansas and Neosho Valley Railroad, and its extension to Red River," approved July 25, 1866; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON—RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to submit a report; which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by resolution of the Senate to inquire into the facts attending the casting of the electoral vote of the State of Oregon, beg leave to report to the Senate:

That Enos Runyon was duly summoned as a witness and appeared before said committee on Saturday, the 6th instant; and, being duly sworn, the following questions were asked him, to which he made the following replies:

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Question. Where do you reside?
Answer. At Newark, New Jersey.
Q. Where do you do business?
A. My office is on Wall street, New York.
Q. What is your business?
A. Banker and broker.
Q. What is the name of your firm?
A. Martin & Runyon.
Q. Who is your partner?
A. Augustus F. R. Martin.
Q. With what bank in New York City do you do your business?
A. The Bank of North America.
Q. Have you any business correspondents in Oregon?
A. We have correspondents all over the country, in every part of the country.
Q. You understand what I mean, you have no regular business correspondents in Oregon, have you?
A. We have a business correspondence, as far as that goes, in collections or anything of that kind, that we do with parties in Oregon and all over the country.
Q. Have you any business transactions of your own with any person in Oregon?
A. I have not.
Q. Have you ever had?
A. I have not.
Q. State what you know about a draft having been drawn by your firm or any of its members, or under their direction, for the sum of $8,000, in favor of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, on or about the 6th day of December last.
A. In reference to a check, do you mean?
Q. Check or draft.
A. I know there was such a check drawn.
Q. State what it was.
A. A certified check.
Q. State what that check was; in whose favor was it drawn; by whom was it drawn; on whom it was drawn, and for what amount.
A. The check was drawn by Martin & Runyon on the Bank of North America.
Q. In favor of whom?
A. In favor of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon.
Q. For what amount?
A. Eight thousand dollars.
Q. What was the date of it?
A. I think it was December 6.
Q. For what purpose was that draft drawn?
A. I know not.
Q. Who drew the check?
A. My book-keeper always draws the checks.
Q. Who is your book-keeper?
A. Mr. Hughes.
Q. What is his full name?
A. George H. Hughes.
Q. Who directed him to draw it?
A. I did.
Q. For what purpose?
A. To draw a check for that amount to that order, and I told him——

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who procured the check to be drawn?
A. I do not understand you.
Q. Who came and got the check to be drawn? At whose instance was it done?
A. At mine.
Q. Was there no person who got you to do it?
A. I do business for my customers all the time.
Q. Who was the customer that got this done?
A. That is a thing that in our business we never divulge—the name of a customer. I shall have to decline to answer, because our business is the same as a lawyer in that respect; we cannot divulge the name of a customer. If we did we should not have many customers. When I first went into business as a boy, when a clerk, I was told the first thing was never to take a check of any party and cash it without I knew the parties; and the next thing was never to divulge any business connected with any of the customers of the office.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. This check then was not for your own use?
A. No, sir.
Q. For the use of some other person, was it?
A. It was.
Q. Who was that person?
A. Do you mean the person that wanted me to draw it?
Q. Who wanted you to draw that check for $8,000 in favor of Ladd & Bush, of Salem, Oregon, on the Bank of North America?
A. That I shall have to decline to answer.
Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on an answer.
The CHAIRMAN. I will state as my view of the law that it is not a privileged communication, but a matter that the witness is required to answer.
Mr. KERNAN. That is my judgment. I would advise him to answer, both as a lawyer and a member of the committee. I think he should answer as he would if he were before a court in a pending proceeding.
The CHAIRMAN, (to the witness.) It is your duty under your oath, Mr. Runyon, to answer the question.
The WITNESS. I shall have to decline answering the question.
Mr. KERNAN. Let me make a suggestion. If you were brought into a court of justice to show who the man was that came and got the check you would be compelled to answer. I hope you will do so here.
The WITNESS. I do not see how I can. In the first place, that check was returned.
Mr. MITCHELL. I object to any voluntary statement until this question is answered.
The CHAIRMAN. The committee ask the question, who procured you to draw the check?
Mr. KERNAN. Which means who came and asked you to do it?
The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir. You are advised by all the members of the committee that it is your duty to answer that question. Once more we ask you who it was procured you to draw that check?
The WITNESS. As I said before, I shall have to decline answering under the circumstances.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there money deposited or paid to you as a consideration for that check?
A. That check was returned.
Q. But at the time you gave it?
A. I was told to do that for a regular customer; that was all. Afterward the check was returned.
Q. I am not asking about the check being returned; you need not state that; but when you state who procured you to draw the check we will go into the circumstances of the returning of the check if it was returned. Are you in the habit of giving checks for money without your being paid for the check or the check being secured by the deposit of collaterals or in some way?
A. Through the day do you mean?
Q. Yes.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I ask you what was the consideration given to you for drawing that check?
A. At that time?
Q. Yes, sir.
A. No consideration.
Q. Was there any security given to you in any way?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Do you mean to say that you drew that check by which you would pay $8,000 to Ladd & Bush, without any consideration given to you for it?
A. I mean to say at the time there was none. We do business between ten and three, and a check is drawn and very often I do not have the collaterals or anything else or the money returned until three o'clock; sometimes after three.
Q. You drew the check and handed it over to some person, did you?
A. No, sir. I did not hand over the check. The check was not handed over.
Q. Did any person take it away from the house?
A. I was the one who took it away.
Q. Where did you take it?
A. I took it to Liberty street, to Mr. Dimon.
Q. What is his first name?
A. Charles, I think, is his name.
Q. Did you hand it to him?
A. No, sir; he was not in.
Q. Did you bring the check away with you?
A. I did.
Q. Did you afterward hand it to anybody else?
A. I think not.
Q. Did the check remain in your possession all the time?
A. It did until I brought it back to the office and put it into the drawer.
Q. What became of it?
A. It was redeposited in our bank.
Q. To whose credit was it deposited in your bank?
A. Martin & Runyan's.
Q. Is the check there yet?
A. I suppose it is charged up to our account and returned with the checks; it is in our bank there.
Q. You say you brought it back yourself?
A. Yes, sir.
Mr. KERNAN. To the office, and then it was deposited to their own credit in the bank, as I understand; and then he says the bank returns the vouchers. Am I right about that?

The WITNESS. It is returned with the returned vouchers of the bank.

Mr. KERNAN. It was not a check, however, for anybody's benefit but their own, as he states it now.

Q. (By the CHAIRMAN.) Was the check taken to the Bank of North America?

A. It was taken and deposited with the rest of our checks.

Q. In the Bank of North America?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it taken there and deposited for the purpose of being sent to Oregon?

A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. For what purpose was it deposited in the Bank of North America?

A. Instead of destroying it we redeposited it in our bank.

Q. If the check was not to be used by anybody why was it not destroyed or canceled?

A. If we should do that we could never keep any record of our checks in drawing our deposits. Sometimes we make a mistake in a check. If we make a mistake in drawing a check, it may be one letter wrong, instead of using that check and having it go out in the streets or paying it to anybody, we take that check and draw another one and deposit that check in our bank.

Q. But the point is this: If you draw a check which is not used by the person for whom it is intended, why should you not cancel the check instead of keeping it alive and depositing it in a bank, it being your own check?

A. Am I allowed to explain this?

Q. I am asking you the particular reason for that.

A. In our business—and I suppose it is the same with every other broker in the street—we have our checks all numbered, stamped, and everything. Then, of course, a check we draw is a voucher; and in case that check is not used that check is put back into our bank deposit the same as if it were John Jones's check or John Smith's check. I generally indorse on the back, "For deposit for account Martin & Runyon," because there is nobody else to indorse it.

Q. Why is not the check canceled?

A. I was explaining to you. The reason why it is not is that we could not keep our checks straight if we did that. Our checks are numbered, and when they are returned to us the banks cut them, and there would be trouble if there was a wrong number. We never destroy a check that has been drawn in regular order.

Q. What was the object of depositing this check in the Bank of North America if it was not to be used?

A. It was because the check was not used and there had to be some disposition made of it, and as there was a charge there had to be a credit of it.

Q. There was no charge of the check on any books but your own?

A. That was all, on the check book.

Q. If the check was not used it would have been sufficient simply to have destroyed the check and made an entry on your book which would have shown that the check was not used but destroyed?

A. No, sir, we cannot do that; we never do that.

Q. Is this check that you deposited in the Bank of North America to be used hereafter by anybody?

A. No sir, it is not to be used again, because the check is cut and canceled and charged up on our books.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose, gentlemen, there is nothing to do but present this witness to the Senate.

Mr. KERNAN. Of course I quite concur in that. But let me ask one question. (To the witness.) Was this check disposed of as you in your regular course of business dispose of any other that is never issued to any one?

A. Yes, sir, precisely.

Q. (By Mr. KERNAN.) If, for instance, I should go there and you should draw your check in my favor and for any reason you never give it to me, you send that to your bank to be deposited?

A. We put it in with our checks.

Q. And it goes through and is both charged and credited to you?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. This check then never did go out of your possession?

A. No, sir, never.

Q. Nobody ever drew any money on this check?

A. No, sir.

Q. It went back into your own account again. Instead of your doing what so bad a banker as Mr. KERNAN does when drawing a check and writing on the margin "not used," as he does not keep regular books, and tearing it up, you send it to the bank so that all your numbers appear?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. They being numbered on the stubs and on the checks from one through?

A. Yes. I can probably make it plainer by just stating the habit of drawing our checks.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I do not care about that. You went up to the house where Mr. Dimon was. By the way, what house is that?

A. It is A. E. & C. E. Tilton, I think.

Q. You say Mr. Dimon was not in?

A. He was not in.

Q. Did you see any other member of the firm?

A. I saw Mr. Tilton, I think it was. That was said to be his name.

Q. Did you have any talk with him about this check?

A. I asked him about it.

Q. What did he say about it?

A. He said he could not reply, for Mr. Dimon was not there.

Q. Have you seen Mr. Dimon since that time?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have a talk with him about it?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see him during the course of that day?

A. Yes; he came over in the afternoon.

Q. To your establishment?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What passed between you in regard to the check?

A. In what way?

Q. What was said by you or by him in regard to that check?

A. He said that the check was not a check that could be used by Ladd & Bush; that he was not of the firm of Ladd & Bush.

Q. Why could it not be used by Ladd & Bush; it was made payable to them, was it not?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why could it not be used by them?

A. Because it was not indorsed, I suppose; the check would have to go out there. That is as near as I could come at it.

Q. Did he want it put in a different form?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it put in a different form?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the other form?

A. I simply gave a check to him.

Q. You gave a check to Charles Dimon for the amount?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he take that away with him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the firm of Ladd & Bush mentioned in that check?

A. No, sir.

Q. Was this second check that you gave for the benefit of Ladd & Bush?

A. I presume it must have been. I do not recollect exactly what it was.

Q. Do you not know that it was? Was not that the understanding and talk between you, that it was for their benefit?

A. That Mr. Dimon was their agent here; that was all; and the check was for him.

Q. Has that check been paid?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When was it paid?

A. The check that he gave?

Q. Yes; the second one.

A. The next day, I presume.

Q. What was the amount of that check?

A. Eight thousand dollars.

Q. Was there anything said between you and Mr. Dimon as to what that check was for; what that $8,000 was for?

A. He asked me what it was for, yes.

Q. What did you tell him?

A. I told him I did not know.

Q. I ask you the question again, if it was not said there between you and him, or so understood, that that check was given for the benefit of Ladd & Bush; that you were just changing the form of it and making it payable to him instead of to that firm?

A. I presume it was; he was their agent.

Q. Did you see the person who procured you to draw the first check again that day?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you state ever to him what had taken place between you and Mr. Dimon?

A. I believe that I did.

Q. That check, you say, was paid the next day. Have you been paid for that check?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. When were you paid for it?

A. On the 11th of December, I think it was.

Q. By whom were you paid?

A. By Mr. Dimon.

Q. When you saw the person who procured you to draw that check and stated to him what had taken place, was that satisfactory to him?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any other moneys or any other checks or drafts in favor of Ladd & Bush, in Oregon?

A. I do not.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. When this first check was drawn was there any person charged with the amount in your banking-house?

A. No, sir.

Q. There was no charge made against any person?

A. Because it was returned.

Q. But at the time it was issued you did not know whether it would be returned or not?

A. Nobody was charged with it.

Q. There was nothing said in this check about Mr. Dimon, was there? His name was not mentioned in it all?

A. No, sir.

Q. How did you come to go to Mr. Dimon?

A. That was my customer's instructions.

Q. He wanted you to take that check and go and see Mr. Dimon, did he?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he go with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. Did you go alone?

A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is your clerk, Mr. Hughes, present here?

A. No, sir.

Q. Will he be here to-day?

A. I cannot say that he will be to-day. He has a sick child, so that he cannot come on. In fact we cannot all leave.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Who was finally charged with that money?

A. For the few days it was advanced?

Q. Yes.

A. I was charged with it. That is, I charged myself with it.

Q. It was not your transaction?

A. I did not want to make a charge because it was settled so soon.

Q. You had the promise of it, had you, in three or four days?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. By this same person that ordered the original check to be drawn?

A. Yes, sir; that I would have the money back.

Q. In what way were these $8,000 returned to you; by draft or deposit?

A. By a check of Mr. Dimon to me.

Q. A check by Mr. Dimon in your favor on what?

A. On the Saint Nicholas National Bank.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. As I understand, you gave the check to Dimon the 6th or about that time?

A. About then, I think.

Q. Payable to his order, as I understand?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he gave you the same amount back again on the 11th?

A. Yes, sir; that is, less telegraphic charges, which were $2.75.

Q. He gave you back the same amount less $2.75 on the 11th?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Telegraphic charges to where?

A. I do not know. "Charges" was all; I do not know where. It was the same amount, with the exception of $2.75.

Q. And that, you say, was taken out on account of telegraphic charges?

A. That is what I understood.

Q. Have you any receipts or memoranda or documents here about these checks?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me see them?

Mr. MITCHELL. Before he produces the papers let me ask a question. (To the witness.) What is your politics, Mr. Runyon?

A. I am a democrat.

Q. (By Mr. KERNAN.) Is the other member of your firm a democrat too?

A. No; a strong republican. [Producing papers.] Here are the papers.
Q. Is this [exhibiting] the paper you took from Dimon when you gave him the check?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I will read this:
"Received, New York, 6th December, 1876, of Messrs Martin & Runyon, $8,000, for account of Messrs. Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon; which is advised this day by telegram.
"CHAS. DIMON."
That you took from him as a voucher?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is this [exhibiting] what he brought you when he gave you back the check?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. I will read this:

CHARLES DIMON,
P. O. Box 4094. No. 115 Liberty street.
NEW YORK, December 11, 1876.
Messrs. MARTIN & RUNYON,
New York City:

GENTLEMEN: I received this morning Messrs. Ladd & Bush's telegraphic message from Salem, Oregon, dated December 9, advising receipt of my telegram of the 6th instant, and to return the $8,000 to parties who deposited it.
Accordingly I herewith hand you my check, 11878, for $7,997.25, together with cost of telegram, $2.75, makes the $8,000, which I inclose a receipt for, which please sign and return to
Yours, respectfully,
CHAS. DIMON.

So you received the $7,997.25, did you?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that money came back to you in that way with this letter of his?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That is the transaction you gave Dimon your check to his order on the 6th?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And he gave you that receipt?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. And on the 11th he paid you back inclosed in that letter the amount therein named less the expenses as therein stated?
A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You gave Mr. Dimon a check for $8,000 which was paid. According to this he paid you back $7,797.25; that was what you got back?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That left you to pay the cost of the telegrams?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did that close up the transaction?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What interest had you in paying the cost of the telegrams?
A. No interest; no more than the transaction was through with.
Q. I know, but that did not make you whole by $2.75. Why should you lose $2.75?
A. That was paid to me.
Q. Did you get $8,000 back?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Was part of it paid in money?
A. Two dollars and seventy-five cents was.
Q. This is December 11. Did you get any interest on that $8,000?
A. No, sir.
Q. Why did you get no interest on it?
A. It was so short a time that it did not make only a day or two's difference.
Q. Is that the ordinary method of doing business, to charge no interest?
A. It is not the ordinary method; but when we have a little transaction like this with our customers we never charge them interest.
Q. Did you have any commission?
A. No commission on this transaction.
Q. And no interest?
A. No interest on it. Excuse me; I did receive interest in money. I overlooked that.
Q. How much interest did you receive?
A. That I do not remember; a few dollars; that was all.
Q. Why would not that be stated in this paper if you got interest? He specifies the exact amount he paid you here?
A. The interest was not from Mr. Dimon; I did not receive it from him.
Q. From whom did you receive the interest?
A. I received it from my customer.
Q. Do you know how much the interest was?
A. I cannot say exactly; but only a few dollars. I could figure it up for you very quickly.
Q. When did you get the interest?
A. At the time the check was returned me, giving the amount in money.
Q. Did the customer return the check to you himself?
A. No, sir.
Q. Who did return it?
A. Mr. Dimon.
Q. Was your customer Mr. Dimon?
A. No, sir.
Q. When did you see your customer?
A. In the afternoon.
Q. In the afternoon of the same day?
A. I am not certain, but I think it was.
Q. Was that interest entered on the books of your bank?
A. It was entered in a little blotter, just as we enter receipts.
Q. Was the interest paid to you in your bank?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where was the interest paid to you?
A. It was paid at my customer's office to me.
Q. I am speaking about the interest to you for the use of your money?
A. That was paid at my customer's office.
Q. When did your customer pay it to you?
Mr. KERNAN. He went to his customer's office and got the interest there.
The WITNESS. Yes.
The CHAIRMAN. You went there and it was paid to you there?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. (By the chairman.) You do not remember how much it was?
A. I do not.
Q. Do you know what that money was for?
A. No, sir.
Q. You do not?
A. I do not.
Q. Have you any opinion of what it was for?
A. I have not. I know nothing about the transaction at all, in no way, shape, or manner.
Q. What is your objection now to telling who your customer was who procured you to send that money?
A. For the reason, as I have stated, that I cannot divulge my customer's business.
Q. Do you undertake to say that there is such a rule generally prevailing among bankers that they refuse in courts to testify?
A. I think it is so.
Q. Do you think that is a rule among bankers?
A. I think so.
Q. That they refuse to testify as to who has procured checks or drafts of them?
A. I am not conversant enough with law to know whether it is so or not; but I know bankers and brokers never give up their principals on things.
Q. Did you ever know an instance of a banker or broker in court refusing to testify in such a matter? Were you ever in court when a refusal of that kind took place?
A. I have never been in court but once in my life; so I cannot state as to that.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. You got from Dimon only a check for $7,997.25?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. The cust omer, I suppose, paid you the expense of the telegram and the interest
A. Yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you mean to say the customer paid for the telegram?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who paid you for the telegram?
A. My customer.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Dimon inclosed you nothing but his check?
A. That was all.
Q. Dimon paid you nothing but the check?
A. No, sir.
Q. Then you went to the customer and he paid you what you were out and the interest?
A. Yes.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If you gave Mr. Dimon a check for $8,000 what had you to do with his telegram? Why should he not pay you back the whole $8,000? What right had he to deduct the cost of the telegram from the $8,000 of you?
A. It is customary always to take out charges for anything of that kind.
Q. But you had nothing to do with his telegram, had you? Whether he telegraphed or not was not your business?
A. No.
Q. Why then should he deduct the cost of that telegram when he came to pay you back the amount of your check?
A. It was taken on the same principle that exchange would be. A man might take out so much for exchange and have a right to do it. He probably had a right to take off for exchange.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. At the time of issuing this first check or draft, whatever it was, had you issued any draft or check to this same customer on any parties in Oregon, or in favor of any parties in Oregon?
A. No, sir.
Q. Had you any business connection or arrangement with him at all in regard to matters in Oregon?
A. Not at all.
Q. State the number and street of this customer.
A. I cannot state it. I decline to do so.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When were you first subpœnaed to come here?
A. I forget the date of the telegram.
Q. Do you know when Mr. Martin was subpœnaed?
A. I was expected to come on myself, and I telegraphed the next day that I would; but on account of the expected confinement of my wife I did not, however. I could not go away until I was forced to go last night.
Q. Did you suggest to Mr. Martin the day before yesterday, or a day or two since, that he should consult with anybody in regard to what course he should take about his testimony here?
A. I did not.
Q. Did you advise him to consult with Mr. Harrison?
A. I do not remember that I did.
Q. Did you introduce him to Mr. Harrison?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where did that take place?
A. I think it was at Mr. Harrison's office.
Q. Where is Mr. Harrison's office?
A. Where I went was in the Security Life and Trust Company's building; I think 33 Pine street.
Q. How far is that from your office?
A. Right back of my office.
Q. How did you and Mr. Martin come to be in Mr. Harrison's office together?
A. I did not know what to do about coming on here so I suggested the aid of Mr. Harrison for consultation to know what I could do about it, and as I showed him the telegram he said, "One of you must go right on out of respect to the committee of the Senate." I suggested the way I was fixed and he suggested Mr. Martin's coming on.
Q. Did you invite Mr. Martin to go with you into Mr. Harrison's office?
A. Yes, sir; and I went around with him.
Q. Is Mr. Harrison a lawyer.
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did you suggest the propriety to Mr. Martin of bringing Mr. Harrison here with him?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did you know that Mr. Harrison was coming here?
A. I did not until I had gone back to the office.
Q. How did you find it out then?
A. Mr. Martin told me he was going on on some business and would accompany him on.
Q. Did you advise Mr. Martin that he should consult with Mr. Harrison as to his testimony here, or the course he should take here?
A. No, sir.
Q. Is your memory clear on that point?
A. I think it is. I stated that anything he wanted to find out he could, as Mr. Harrison was a lawyer. That was all I said. As far as advising, I did not.

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Why did not you want to come on? What was the matter with your wife?
A. Confinement was expected.
Q. And that is the reason you did not want to come on?
A. Yes, sir. I expected it every day.

By Mr. MITCHELL:

Q. Did I understand you to say that you charged on your blotter to your customer this interest?
A. No, sir; we enter there little things that come in and go out.
Q. Is your customer named in that entry?
A. No, sir.
Q. Is it customary to do business in that way without naming parties?
A. We do it on the blotter. We keep a regular blotter instead of charging these things on a ledger.
Q. Have you seen that customer since you have been subpœnaed?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Where?
A. At his office.
Q. When?
A. I saw him yesterday.
Q. Have you seen him since?
A. No, sir.
Q. Where is he now?
A. I suppose he is in his office.
Q. Why did you go to see him yesterday?
A. I went to see him to tell him I was coming on last night.
Q. What had he to do with that?
A. He had nothing to do with it here.
Q. Why was it necessary that you should see him to tell him you were coming on?
A. Nothing more than to say I was going.
Q. Did you have any conversation with him as to your testimony here?
A. No, sir.
Q. Did he make a request that you should not disclose the name of your customer?
A. No, sir.
Q. Who did make that suggestion?
A. That is my own.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you a conversation with anybody in regard to the subpœna to attend here before this committee before you went into the office of Mr. Harrison?
A. I consulted with my principal or customer.
Q. Did your customer or principal advise you to consult with Mr. Harrison?
A. Well, he did indirectly. I did not know what to do in reference to the matter, and he told me that I might go and see Mr. Harrison; he might be better posted than anybody else, and tell me how to proceed. The only hesitancy I had to come was because of my wife's condition.
Q. Do you mean by "customer or principal" the man who bought the check of you?
A. I mean the man who told me to give this check.

And the said Runyon, being subsequently recalled on the same day, was further interrogated and made answer as follows, viz:

By Mr. KERNAN:

Q. Do you know Colonel William T. Pelton personally?
A. I do not.
Q. Did he know anything about this matter before or after?
A. I do not know.
Q. You do not know him at all?
A. I do not know him. I think I know the man by sight.
Q. Did anything ever pass between him and you about this check or anything connected with this matter, or your coming here?
A. Nothing of the kind.

The committee are of the opinion that in the investigation of the facts attending the casting of the electoral votes of the State of Oregon on the 6th of December last it is important for the witness to answer the question who it was that procured the firm of Martin & Runyon to give their check to Charles Dimon for the sum of $8,000, and to answer all questions touching that transaction. The committee therefore submit to the Senate for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and to bring to the bar of the Senate the body of Enos Runyon, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Runyon in his custody to await the further order of the Senate.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I ask to have the report printed, and give notice that I will call up the resolution to-morrow morning for action; and while I am on the floor I ask an order to print the testimony taken by the several subcommittees of the Committee on Privileges and Elections as fast as it may be received, the usual number of copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the proposed order to print testimony? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

PRODUCTION OF TELEGRAPHIC DISPATCHES.

Mr. MORTON. There was a vote taken on a resolution last Friday which was lost for the want of a quorum. If there is no objection, as there is a quorum present, I should like to have that vote taken now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired and the Chair will call up the unfinished business, which is the resolution referred to by the Senator from Indiana, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That William M. Turner is in duty bound under his oath to answer the questions that have been propounded to him as above stated, and that he cannot excuse himself from answering the same by reason of his official connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company as the manager of their office at Jacksonville, Oregon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution. The call of the yeas and nays revealed the lack of a quorum. The question will now be put again.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have not heard the previous part of that paper read, and I rise for the purpose of propounding a question to the honorable Senator from Indiana, so as to give me light on the subject that I may vote in accordance with my judgment. It is proposed, I believe, to issue a subpœna to compel the telegraph company to come here with certain papers.

Mr. MORTON. No, sir.

Mr. HAMLIN. What is it?

Mr. MORTON. I will state to the honorable Senator that it is to declare the duty of a witness, a telegraphic operator and manager, to testify as to the character of a message that passed through his office, the message itself having been refused.

Mr. HAMLIN. There is, then, a specification of the precise message about which the witness is to testify?

Mr. MORTON. The general character of the dispatch, as near as we can come at it.

Mr. HAMLIN. It is not a drag-net to bring in all transactions over the whole world relating to every subject?

Mr. MORTON. No, sir. We describe the message, and as nearly as we can the subject referred to, the transmission of money.

Mr. HAMLIN. I do not believe in, and I will not vote for any proposition that seeks to bring the telegraphic company here with all their telegrams, no allegation being made of any knowledge in relation to them, for the purpose of hunting up evidence. I would, in the action of this body, as near as may be, follow the rules of the courts of law. I will vote for anything that will come within those rules, and I will vote against everything that goes without them.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I was not able to be here on the last day's session of the Senate, and am therefore lamentably ignorant of the precise question which the resolution asserts that it is the duty of this witness to answer, and I should like to inquire, either through the Clerk or the Senator from Indiana, the precise question that the resolution says it is his duty to answer.

Mr. MORTON. I think it will be more satisfactory to Senators to have the report read.

Mr. DAWES. I do not want to consume much time.

Mr. MORTON. It is a short matter. The reading of the report will show what the question is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Committee on Privileges and Elections, who were instructed by resolution of the Senate to inquire into the facts attending the late presidential election in the State of Oregon and concerning the casting of the electoral vote of that State, beg leave to report to the Senate:

That one William M. Turner was called as a witness by the said committee, and, after having been duly sworn, had the following questions propounded to him and made the following answers thereto:

Question, (by the chairman.) Do you know whether Mr. Patrick had asked to have that canvass withheld until he could get there?
Answer. I cannot answer that question.
Q. Have you any knowledge on that subject?
A. No, sir; nothing that could be made public.
Q. Explain what you mean by that.
A. Our knowledge on political subjects and all others, of course, has to be very sacred. It would be a violation of the law of the State to divulge anything that passes over the telegraphic wires, and also a violation of the rules of the company.
Q. I propose to ask the witness the question if he knows of any dispatch passing through that office, on the part of Mr. Patrick or any one else, asking that that canvass be deferred until he could get there.
A. I ask to be excused from answering that question.
Q. You decline to answer?
A. I must decline.
Q. Upon the ground before stated?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. That you cannot divulge anything passing on the wires?
A. I cannot do it.
Q. What do you know, if anything, in regard to $8,000 being transferred from New York to Salem or to Portland at any time after the election in November and up to the time that the electors cast their votes?
The WITNESS. Transferred in what manner?
The CHAIRMAN. What do you know about money being sent from New York or persons there being authorized to draw for $8,000?
A. I do not know anything with regard to the transfer of any money that would be a public matter. We have a great deal of business of that kind going through the offices, and as a matter of course it only concerns those who are interested.
Q. Do you know of any dispatch being sent to Salem or to Portland from New York authorizing any person there to draw for $8,000?
A. I must decline to answer that.
Q. Do you know of any dispatch having been sent by Charles Dimon, or a man named Dimon, in New York, to Ladd & Bush, in Salem, in regard to $8,000 or any sum of money?
A. I cannot answer.
Q. Do you mean to say that you cannot answer or that you decline to answer?
A. I decline.
Q. You decline to answer?
A. I decline to answer any question touching anything that passes over the telegraph wires.
Q. Did you simply say that you decline to answer or do you mean to say that there was no such dispatch?
A. I decline to answer questions of that character.
* * * * * * *
Q. Now I propose to ask this witness the question directly, if there was not a dispatch passing through that office from Charles Dimon to Ladd & Tilton, in Portland, authorizing them to draw for $8,000.
A. I must be excused from answering any question of that character.
Q. I put this as occurring subsequent to the 25th of November, and before the first Wednesday in December.
A. I decline answering any questions, as I remarked, touching the business over the wires.
Q. I ask if you know anything in regard to another sum of $17,000 that was authorized in New York to be drawn by Ladd & Tilton, in Portland, subsequent to the presidential election?
A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it.
Q. You do not then decline to answer that on this ground?
A. I decline on the same ground.

The committee have been informed that it is important to have the witness answer these questions, as the answers may be material in the investigation of the matter intrusted to the committee, and submit to the Senate the following resolution:

Resolved, That William M. Turner is in duty bound under his oath to answer the questions that have been propounded to him as above stated, and that he cannot excuse himself from answering the same by reason of his official connection with the Western Union Telegraph Company as the manager of their office at Jacksonville, Oregon."

Mr. DAWES. It is hardly worth while, but I desire to put myself on record very much as the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] has; and to the extent that the Senator from Maine has put himself on the record I am willing to go. When a committee of this body is of opinion that there is reason to believe that a particular telegram has passed over the wires and that it contains information material to the investigation with which the Senate has charged that committee, I think that the telegraph company is bound to give it the information precisely as the Post-Office Department would be bound under the same circumstances and with the same precaution to permit the investigation of a letter in the Post-Office Department, but anything beyond that, as at present advised, I should not feel willing to sanction.

The idea of a general divulging of what has passed over the telegraph wires is a thing which I would not by the vote I give to-day, even by any implication whatever, sanction. What the newspapers have informed us has transpired of late, a telegraph company selling the messages that have been received in confidence by them from their customers to the paper-makers, and paper-makers reselling them and they being distributed around among favorite newspapers, is such an outrage that, if it is in the power of this Congress by legislation to take away the franchise of any such telegraph company, I think it is their duty to do it at once. But the telegraph being no more than the mail, no more than any private individual who has possession of a written communication which contains evidence bearing upon the guilt or innocence of an accused person or the materiality of any investigation over which a committee of this Senate has jurisdiction or a court has jurisdiction to try, I think it is the duty of any person having that information, whether it be in a letter or in a telegraphic message or in any other form, to disclose it with those limitations. Beyond that I do not desire by the vote which I shall give for this resolution to be construed as sanctioning the practice which has been instituted and which has prevailed, I am sorry to say as much in my own party as in any other, of invading the secrets of the private business and confidential communications of the whole community. That practice should cease if there is any power in Congress to prohibit it.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I neither desire nor intend to argue this question; but inasmuch as the witness gives as one reason why he should not answer this question the fact that to answer it would be in contravention of a statute of Oregon, I desire to call attention to that statute for the purpose of showing that it has no application whatever to the case. That statute only applies to a case of willful divulgence on the part of the agents of the company. I ask the Secretary to read the statute which I send to the desk.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. If any officer, agent, operator, clerk, or employé of any telegraph company, or any other person, shall willfully divulge to any other person than the party from whom the same was received, or to whom the same is addressed, or his agent or attorney, any message received or sent, or intended to be sent, over any telegraph line, or the contents, substance, purport, effect, or meaning of such message, or any part thereof, or shall willfully alter any such message by adding thereto or omitting therefrom, any word or words, figure or figures, so as to materially change the sense, purport, or meaning of such message, to the injury of the person sending or desiring to send the same, or to whom the same was directed, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $1,000, or imprisonment not to exceed one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court: Provided, That when numerals or words of number occur in any message, the operator or clerk sending or receiving may express the same in words or figures, or in both words and figures, and such fact shall not be deemed an alteration of the message, nor in any manner affect its genuineness, force, or validity.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, as this question is of very great importance and is becoming more so every day, I desire to state that I concur entirely with the views expressed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] as to the law, and with that understanding I am willing to vote for this resolution. I propose to vote against resolutions making a general drag-net. At the same time I am willing to compel these companies to divulge telegrams on the principles that apply in courts of justice.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, if there is any one subject on which there is more delusion and nonsense and humbug going than upon this, I do not know it. The security of society, the security of private rights, liberty, property, peace, reputation, depends, first, upon good laws, and, second, upon their being put in execution; for a law is nothing at all that is not carried into effect. You cannot put laws into execution through the courts of justice or any other tribunal that is trying to get at the truth in a constitutional way without getting at the truth through witnesses who are to testify; and the idea that because something between two men or fifty men is confidential when the necessity for that truth bears upon the rights of somebody else it cannot be disclosed, is utterly absurd. You cannot carry on a government of law and of peace and of private right on any such notion at all, as it seems to me. I do not wish to force my notions upon anybody else.

Now the statute of 1825, it is said, declares that it shall be penal to open any letter. Grant it, if you please. Whether it is a wise law or not a wise law, grant that it is the law. Then do not open that letter. But when Congress sees fit to pass a law, or the States see fit to pass laws as far as their operations go, that every communication that two burglars or two thieves or two murderers, as they frequently do, choose to send by telegraph shall also be regarded as sacred—and why because it is sent over a wire instead of by a man it should be any more sacred I am not able to see—it will be time enough for us to obey such a law; but when you pass such a law you will not have the administration of justice or security any more. If we go on in the way certain people desire us to start, a little while longer, everything will be sacred and confidential, and you cannot ask anybody to say anything that he knows if it is going to be an injury to his particular case or his particular friends. We must remember that it is the right of everybody and the security of everybody that depends upon getting at the truth if the truth bears upon public or private interests, and no man has a right to set up his private confidence or his private honor or his private anything when it stands in the way of the countervailing considerations of security to the whole body of community or justice or security to other people, when they are drawn into question. That is the principle upon which all civilized law has heretofore proceeded.

So then, without wishing to offend anybody, I cannot help characterizing this sort of talk that has been prevalent for a few years as not only absurd but as fatal, if it were carried into effect, to the rights that these very persons who talk so loudly of private rights would find it most necessary to protect if it was brought home to their own doors.

Now, as to the law of Oregon which has been cited, it has not a thing to do with the case. If the statutes of Oregon absolutely forbade the production of any telegram or the testimony of any telegraph operator under any circumstances whatever, it would have nothing whatever to do with the constitutional exercise by this Senate or by the courts of the United States, or the House of Representatives or any other national authority of their own functions which are not derived from the constitutions of the States. The citizen of Oregon, the telegraph operator, is a citizen of the United States, and the supreme law of the land to him is the Constitution and the laws of the United States. If this proceeding, therefore, is constitutional at all, as nobody questions, then any prohibition of a particular State as to what shall operate upon it is absolutely inefficacious.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 35, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bogy, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Chaffee, Cockrell, Cragin, Davis, Dawes, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Gordon, Hamlin, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, Kernan, McCreery, Maxey, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Price, Randolph, Robertson, Sherman, Wallace, Whyte, and Withers—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Barnum, Burnside, and Eaton—3.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Blaine, Cameron of Wisconsin, Christiancy, Clayton, Conkling, Conover, Cooper, Goldthwaite, Hamilton, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones of Florida, Jones of Nevada, Key, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Merrimon, Norwood, Oglesby, Paddock, Patterson, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sharon, Spencer, Stevenson, Teller, Thurman, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—37.

So the resolution was agreed to.

MODE OF COUNTING ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. BOOTH. I ask permission to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That in counting the votes for President and Vice-President of the United States, whose terms are to begin on the 4th of March, 1877, the following rules be observed:

I. The President of the Senate pro tempore shall report the certificate of each State before handing it to the tellers. It shall then be the right of any Senator and of any member of the House of Representatives to object to the counting of the votes of said State, which objection shall be reduced to writing. Upon objection being made, the President of the Senate pro tempore shall rule whether or not the votes of said State shall be counted and for whom. Any Senator or member of the House of Representatives may appeal from said ruling, which appeal shall be reduced to writing. Upon appeal being taken the two Houses shall immediately separate and each shall convene in its own Chamber without delay.

Immediately on the convening of each House its presiding officer shall submit the following propositions in the order herein named, which shall be decided without debate:

First. Shall the ruling of the President of the Senate pro tempore upon the counting of the vote of the State of —— be affirmed?

Second. How many votes of the State of —— shall be counted?

Third. For whom shall the votes of the State of —— be counted?

Upon each proposition, each Senator and each member of the House of Representatives shall announce his vote viva voce, and it shall be entered upon the Journal.

The Journal of each House of the proceedings of that meeting shall then be read and approved, and no other business shall be in order.

The two Houses shall then assemble in the Chamber of —— for the purpose of continuing the count.

II. When the President of the Senate pro tempore shall have received two or more packages purporting to contain the certificate of the votes of the same State, he shall open and report all of said purported certificates, and then rule for whom the votes of said State shall be counted. Any Senator or member of the House of Representatives may appeal from said ruling, which appeal shall be reduced to writing. Upon appeal being taken the two Houses shall separate, convene in their respective chambers and the same proceedings shall be had as prescribed in Rule 1.

III. A complete record of the proceedings when the two Houses are assembled together, and of the proceedings of each House, together with all the certificates and purported certificates of the votes to the counting of which objection has been made, shall be submitted to the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States for their decision.

The Senate and House of Representatives may each appoint a committee of three to present the cases to the justices, subject to such rules as the justices may prescribe. If the justices deem it essential to a final determination, they may in their discretion receive as evidence the official acts and proceedings of any State officer or board of State officers, and the reports of any committee appointed by either House of Congress.

The Chief Justice shall transmit to the President of the Senate the decision of the majority of the justices upon each case of contested votes, when all the cases have been decided; whereupon the two Houses shall assemble in the Chamber of —— and the contested votes shall be counted in accordance with such decision.

Mr BOOTH. I move that the resolution be printed and lie upon the table. I give notice that on Friday morning next, if I can succeed in obtaining the floor, I shall speak briefly to the resolution.

The resolution was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GORDON. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Robert Erwin.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Iowa who is not in his seat this morning [Mr. WRIGHT] is detained, as I understand, from the Chamber by ill-health. The Senate will remember that last week he called up the report from the Judiciary Committee in relation to the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, which has been continued from time to time as unfinished business; and while I am opposed to the bill and shall be glad to have it defeated, yet I feel that courtesy to him requires me to object to the consideration of this bill except with the understanding that that bill shall remain as the unfinished business of the Senate.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Under the circumstances I think I am justified in asking the attention of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia has moved the present consideration of a bill. That motion takes precedence.

Mr. INGALLS. It is the understanding that the bill of the Senator from Iowa will remain as the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no unfinished business. The unfinished business of the last session of the Senate has been disposed of. The resolution of the Senator from Indiana from the Committee on Privileges and Elections was the unfinished business, and that has been disposed of.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the condition of Senate bill No. 60?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has gone to the Calendar. The Senator from Georgia moves the present consideration of the bill stated by him.

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that that bill came from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. MITCHELL. The Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask what committee that came from?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. From the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand the Senator who reported it is not in his seat. The Committee on the Judiciary being engaged by the leave of the Senate on other business, or a majority of them, I do not think we ought to take this bill up.

Mr. GORDON. I was not aware that the chairman of the committee was absent when I called up the bill. I recognize the propriety of the objection, and therefore withdraw the motion.

Mr. WALLACE and Mr. BOUTWELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3156) to perfect the revision of the statutes of the United States.

Mr. WALLACE. I thought I rose to address the Chair first. I ask the courtesy of the Senator to permit me to offer a resolution.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will hear what the Senator from Pennsylvania has to say.

Mr. WALLACE. I desire to offer a series of resolutions to be referred to the committee on counting the electoral votes and to submit brief remarks on the proposition, as I expect to have to go home to-night.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I think it is rather a public duty to try to secure the early passage of this bill; but I feel constrained to assent to the request of the Senator from Pennsylvania under the circumstances he has indicated.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

Mr. WALLACE. I offer a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the special committee on counting the electoral vote be instructed to inquire and report to the Senate upon the following propositions:

I. Electors of President of the United States are a part of the machinery of the Federal Government.

II. The power to appoint them is in the States, to be exercised under the restrictions and guarantees of the Federal Constitution.

III. The power to ascertain who has been elected President and Vice-President of the United States by counting the electoral vote is a quasi-judicial one, and carries with it the right to inquire and decide what are votes.

IV. This power is in the two Houses acting concurrently as independent bodies.

V. Each House may examine both facts and law to enable it to determine these questions:

1. Are the returns of the electoral colleges before them the true returns?

2. Were the votes therein shown to be cast given by those appointed by the State to the office of elector of President of the United States?

3. Was the appointment of electors made and were the votes cast in accordance with the provisions and guarantees of the Federal Constitution?

VI. The certificate and seal of the executive authority of the State made under the act of Congress is prima facie proof of the appointment of an elector by the State. This mode of proof may be overthrown by the decision of the highest judicial tribunal of the proper State or of the United States, or it may be contradicted by evidence of plain mistake or palpable fraud.

VII. When two returns come from a State the two Houses acting concurrently must determine which is the true return.

VIII. No electoral vote can be counted without the concurrence of both Houses.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. President, these resolutions embody what I believe to be the law controlling the counting of the electoral vote. To ascertain what the Constitution, laws, and precedents establish upon this subject is my sole object in presenting them and in endeavoring to elicit discussion thereon. When we shall have settled this, our path of duty is a plain one. Law and justice must control and direct our votes. That a safe path may be found in accordance with these, I do not doubt. When it is found, partisan bias and personal ambition must give way before the high duty of obedience to law.

I shall not attempt now to elaborate all of the propositions I have made. My desire is to get the thoughts in concise form and to group around them the arguments in their favor.

That electors for President of the United States are a part of the machinery of the Federal Government needs no proof. They came into existence with it and their functions relate solely to its perpetuation.

The power to appoint them is given to the States by the Constitution, and the manner of their appointment is left to the control of the Legislatures of the States. That this power and control can be exercised so as to conflict with the provisions of the Federal Constitution will scarcely be contended. That instrument is the supreme law, and in this matter as in all else in which it may conflict with State authority it is the weightier. Of the restrictions imposed by the Constitution upon the States and the electoral colleges the familiar one that they cannot vote for an alien for President is sufficient here. Of the guarantees it is sufficient to name that which gives to each State electors equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which she may be entitled, so that while in the House of Representatives and upon the popular vote Rhode Island and Delaware each stand to Pennsylvania in the proportion of 1 to 27, in the electoral colleges they stand in the proportion of 3 to 29. That the number of votes in the colleges shall be as fixed by article 2, section 1, clause 2, is guaranteed by this provision, and the States can lawfully appoint no more.

In the third proposition, which is that "the power to ascertain the popular will by counting the electoral vote is a quasi-judicial one and carries with it by necessary implication the right to inquire and decide what are votes," I come in conflict with the views expressed by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] in his speech of the 4th instant. He said:

> Under no construction, as it seems to me, can it be claimed that Congress in any capacity (certainly not in the absence of legislation) has judicial powers or any other power than to inquire and declare what the people, through their electors, on the face of the returns have said as to their choice for President. In saying this I do not lose sight of the different theories as to how this result is to be reached and who is to declare it. I am sufficiently understood for my present purpose, I hope, when I repeat that, in the absence of some law, there is no power to investigate and determine whether there was fraud in this State or that; whether the State law was wise or unwise in providing for the organization of its returning boards; whether a hundred men here or a thousand there would have voted differently but for intimidation, corruption, violence, or fraud; whether the returning or canvassing board or tribunal in a State reached the true result from all the facts before them, or the like; for, whatever any one may think as to any of the other powers of the presiding officer or of the two Houses acting separately or together, the law, as gathered from the almost, if not quite, unbroken precedents from the very foundation of the Government, would clearly seem to teach that our powers are purely ministerial, not at all judicial.

If I correctly understand the doctrines here asserted, they are, first, that no power exists in Congress to determine "in counting the vote" whether the State in its action has violated the Constitution of the United States; second, that Congress in executing its power to count the vote has no judicial or quasi-judicial power, but that this is a power purely ministerial, and that by reason thereof Congress can neither act upon any authority necessarily implied from the principal power expressly given, nor reject any return for palpable fraud or plain mistake. Are these doctrines sound? The tribunal (whatever it may be) which counts the electoral vote must, from the very character of its duties, inquire and judge of alleged infractions of the Federal Constitution. Suppose that in the joint meeting a Senator objects that the vote of a State cannot be counted for a candidate for President either because he was not a "natural-born citizen" or because he was not thirty-five years of age, or because he had not been a resident within the United States for fourteen years, must the vote still be counted or must the question be met and settled? How met? By debate or by judicial inquiry? Are we not compelled to inquire, deliberate, and judge? Or suppose that it is alleged that electors appointed by the State were at the time of their appointment members of Congress, persons holding offices of trust or profit under the United States, or who had been in rebellion and were not relieved, or that the electoral college did not meet in its proper State, or that it did not vote by ballot, or on the day fixed by law, or that it voted for citizens of its own State for both President and Vice-President? In each of these cases questions of fact are involved and must be decided. Take the case of the Oregon elector now undergoing investigation. What is this? Is it a mere ministerial duty or is it not the essential preliminary to the application of constitutional law to a given state of facts? Such a proceeding is the highest exercise of judicial inquiry.

In all of the cases cited, indeed in every case of alleged violation of the restraints imposed by the Constitution, either as to choice of electors or as to qualifications of officials voted for, there is a case for judicial and not ministerial action. The guarantees of the Constitution, if violated, may be inquired of in the same manner. If, for instance, a State by its statutes or through its returning boards refuses by reason of his color to certify that a colored elector who had a majority was chosen, could not the tribunal to count the vote make the proper inquiry and correct the wrong? Or if a State has by its laws undertaken so to constitute its electon tribunals as to nullify the provisions of the Constitution guaranteeing privileges and immunities to citizens of the United States, is there to be no remedy? Must the vote still be counted? Or if the State sends one return and in its transmission to the President of the Senate another and a different one is substituted, must the latter be counted? Or if between the act of the people in voting and the opening of the return by the President of the Senate there is interposed under State law a tribunal without responsibility to any power and above judicial control, which, violating the guarantees of the Constitution, deprives the man chosen of his place as elector and substitutes another in his room; or, if plain mistake or palpable fraud be shown to exist in the paper upon which the tribunal is called to act; is there still no power to inquire and decide? Such an organization would be constituted to nullify the popular will, and not to ascertain and declare it.

The power to count the vote is given in express terms. If Congress has this power it is to judge of the means proper to reach the end sought. Those means are to be legitimate and necessary to that end, and must be necessarily implied from the character of the power conferred. All of these instances in my view imply the necessity for other and higher power than mere ministerial action. The enactment of an act of Congress might be, and probably is, a just means to simplify the manner of reaching the end sought; but there is no act of Congress that can be drawn that will cover every case that may arise, and relieve the tribunal vested with power to count the vote from a necessity for the exercise of its judgment and discretion in such a contingency as is now upon us. Our safety now consists in the patriotism, sense of justice, and obedience to law of the two Houses and of the people.

The two Houses of Congress are vested by the Constitution with the power of judging of the necessity and means to be used in several instances. They may admit new States. Congress alone can judge of the fitness of the State or of the character of its constitution. It may deliberate and judge, reject or admit. The writ of habeas corpus may be suspended. Congress must judge when "in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety demands it." It may deliberate and judge, suspend or refuse to suspend.

Upon this subject I cannot do better than to quote in extenso the language of Hon. John Sergeant, one of Pennsylvania's most gifted jurists, in the Missouri case in 1820.

I have said that it is derogatory to the authority of Congress and wholly inconsistent with the tenor of its ideas and capacities to suppose that it is merely to perform the humble ministerial office of opening the door, upon demand, for the admission of a State, without any discretion whatever. No instance can be found where the Constitution has assigned to the legislative power the performance of such a duty. Thus construed it is not a power at all The cases that have been put are in no respect analogous. The power of Congress, upon the death of the President and Vice-President, to declare what officer shall act as President of the United States is a very high power, involving in its exercise much discretion, a discretion commensurate with the various and important trusts confided to the Chief Magistrate.

It can with no propriety be said to be ministerial, and its being deposited with Congress is the strongest proof of the confidence reposed in that body. The office of counting the ballots upon the election of President and Vice-President, simple as it may seem, and easy as in ordinary cases it is, is nevertheless an office of important trust, and including some judicial discretion, as well as a most serious responsibility. It is a fit office to be executed by the highest body in the nation. The power of impeachment is not ministerial but a judicial power, and it belongs not to Congress, but to a single branch The same remark applies, with equal force, to the right which each branch possesses of judging of the election and returns of its members; a judicial power, incident to every body composed of elective delegates, and one of its inherent privileges. In all these cases, however, it may not be amiss to observe that the Constitution gives only the principal power. The incidental powers, such as sending for persons and papers, enforcing the attendance of witnesses, and the like, are implied from the principal grant.

The fourth proposition, which is: "The power to count the electoral vote is in the two Houses of Congress acting concurrently as independent bodies," may be sustained by three classes of arguments: those drawn from the structure of the Government, those drawn from the words of the Constitution, and those drawn from the precedents. The two Houses are best fitted to perform this duty, for they have local knowledge which becomes valuable for protection of the returns from wrong and fraud. The duty to be performed is a high and important one. It is the recording of the popular will. Without its performance the government would stop and anarchy ensue. To the Congress are given all of the great powers of the Government. It can make laws, declare war, tax the people, and raise armies and navies. To the Vice-President, as President of the Senate, the Constitution denies a vote in the body over which he presides. Which is the more likely depositary of such a power? The votes to be counted are those for President and Vice President. In the event of a failure to elect the former the House is given exclusive power to choose. On a failure to elect the latter the Senate elects a Vice-President. Such extraordinary powers given in a contingency which may arise demonstrates that the two bodies were together to ascertain the popular result, then to act separately if the necessity arose.

The two Houses are equal in power. (Article 1, section 1.)

Congress determines the time of choosing the electors and the day on which they give their votes. (Article 2, section 1, clause 3.)

The Senate and House are present when the votes are counted. (Twelfth amendment.) Why are they present? In order that the House may, by its own supervision and count, determine the necessity, if one exists, to elect the President; in order that the Senate may in like manner determine the necessity, if one exists, to elect the Vice-President.

Senators and members are there to protect the interests of their States and people and prevent false counting or fraudulent action. Are they present for no purpose? Are they idle spectators, powerless to prevent a fraud on the people they represent? A power to count the votes, which is the power to direct and control the count, is given to some agency of the Federal Government. If it is given to the President of the Senate, why is not the language "shall open all the certificates and count the votes?" This would be simple and direct as well as conclusive. But the language used gives him power to open certificates and goes no further. The power expressed excludes the granting of the other. He is not even made the presiding officer of the two Houses when they meet. The Senate is there with its presiding officer as a Senate. The House is there with its presiding officer as a House. These officials are there under this clause of the Constitution with equal power, except that the President of the Senate has the custody of and is to open the certificates. A presiding officer for the joint meeting can only be provided by the agreement of the two Houses in advance.

If a President pro tempore of the Senate can "count the vote," does he then exercise his own power or that of the Senate? If the former, an official whom the Senate can at any time displace is in this matter greater than the body that creates him. It follows that if a President pro tempore who will not obey the Senate be in the chair the Senate can remove him and give his place to one who will obey its commands. He thus exercises his own power under the threat of the Senate. Such an independent official would be an absurdity. If it be the power of the Senate which the President pro tempore exercises in counting the vote then it is the Senate that counts the vote and its co-equal body is excluded from participation. No words give such power to the Senate nor can it be implied from the language used. Both Houses are present and both or neither direct the count. It is a strange result too, if the Vice-President, ex officio President of the Senate, shall have independent power in counting the vote while the temporary official has a different hold upon the power. The former might be a safe depositary of this power and a consistent interpretation might be made, but when we find that the language used also clothes an official who is not independent with such power, the argument against its existence is almost conclusive.

The words "all" and "then" in this clause of the Constitution are full of meaning. "Shall open all the certificates and the votes shall then be counted." Quantity of certificates and time of counting are here placed in order. After all are opened counting begins. It is not to open the certificate from one State and dispose of it, the rest remaining meanwhile in the custody of the President. It is not to open one return from a State and withhold another, but it is plain, direct, unambiguous. Open all the certificates, lay them before the two Houses, then the work of counting begins. This plain reading of the language makes the President of the Senate the avenue of communication between the electoral colleges and the tribunal that counts the vote. When his work is completed, the counting, ascertaining, and adjudicating which by the Constitution are devolved upon the two Houses, begins.

The precedents establish the fact that from the foundation of the Government the Senate has recognized the equality of the House and its right and power to aid in counting the vote. With but one exception, from 1789 to 1865, when the joint rule was adopted, the Senate has originated a resolution inviting the House to join in the appointment of a joint committee to propose and report a mode of counting the vote and declaring the result.

In every case but one they have acted concurrently in the appointment of such committee, and acted under the report of such committee in counting the votes. In no instance since 1793 has the President of the Senate counted the vote. This work has invariably been performed by the tellers appointed by the two Houses and under their direction.

The theory that they must both act is fully settled by practice. In every instance the Houses have separated to decide any questions arising in the joint meeting, and thus they fully recognize the equality and independence of the two Houses.

The remaining propositions will be discussed incidentally in what I propose to say in regard to the finality of the action of the returning board of Louisiana and the power to go behind its action either for violation of constitutional law or for fraud and falsehood in its returns.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] in his speech of 7th December says:

The members of the returning board are just as much officers in the performance of a limited judicial duty as your Supreme Court is in a broader one, just as much as a justice of the peace is. The judicial powers and duties of that tribunal must be respected by the tribunals of the United States. The Constitution of the United States declares that the electors shall be elected according to the laws of the States. It is Louisiana that says how her electors shall be elected; it is Texas that says how hers shall be elected; it is Ohio that says how hers shall be elected. The United States have no power to interfere with their laws. Their laws and their tribunals, their mode of returning and contesting have to be regarded. It is by their laws that this case must be decided, and by the laws of Louisiana this returning board is required to pass upon these returns. It has done so, and I feel bound as a man who saw them do it, who witnessed their proceedings, to say that they did it in a manner to demand and require of you the same respect for their decision as would be given to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States. Their decision is final, made so by the law of Louisiana and by the supreme law of the land.

And again upon the 8th:

Their judgment is final, and made so by the laws of Louisiana and by the Constitution of the United States.

There can be no mistaking this language; the broad doctrine is asserted that the returning board of Louisiana is a judicial body, that its powers and duties as such must be respected by us, and that its decrees are final and conclusive. To clothe it in other words, it is that the returning board of Louisiana is a court, that within the sphere of its jurisdiction it is to be respected as a court, and that its judgments and decrees are binding upon all the world. Before we admit the truth of this doctrine and accept the consequences that flow therefrom, it will be wise to learn whence comes the power to transform a board of election officers into a tribunal that is superior as well to the judicial, legislative, and executive officials of its own State as to the universal theory of American election law.

What then is this tribunal, so potent, so sacred, so conclusive? It is created by the Louisiana statute of 1872, in these words:

That five persons, to be elected by the senate from all political parties, shall be the returning officers for all elections in the State, a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum, and have power to make the returns of all elections. In case of any vacancy by death, resignation, or otherwise, by either of the board, then the vacancy shall be filled by the residue of the board of returning officers.

A board gifted with eternal life, and each of its members an official during the term of his natural existence! There is neither limit to their official terms nor responsibility to the people.

The powers of this board are found in sections 2 and 3 of the same statute, as follows:

SEC. 2. Within ten days after the closing of the election, said returning officers shall meet in New Orleans to canvass and compile the statements of votes made by the commissioners of election, and make returns of the election to the secretary of state. They shall continue in session until such returns have been compiled. The presiding officer shall at such meeting open, in the presence of the said returning officers, the statements of the commissioners of election, and the said returning officers shall, from said statements, canvass and compile the returns of the election in duplicate; one copy of such returns they shall file in the office of the secretary of state, and of one copy they shall make public proclamation by printing in the official journal and such other newspapers as they may deem proper, declaring the names of all persons and officers voted for, the number of votes for each person, and the names of the persons who have been duly and lawfully elected. The returns of the elections thus made and promulgated shall be prima facie evidence in all courts of justice and before all civil officers, until set aside after a contest according to law, of the right of any person named therein to hold and exercise the office to which he shall by such return be declared elected.

SEC. 3. That in such canvass and compilation the returning officers shall observe the following order: They shall compile first the statements from all polls or voting-places at which there shall have been a fair, free, and peaceable registration and election. Whenever, from any poll or voting-place, there shall be received the statement of any supervisor of registration or commissioner of election in form as required by section 26 of this act, on affidavit of three or more citizens, of any riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences, which prevented, or tended to prevent, a fair, free, and peaceable vote of all qualified electors entitled to vote at such poll or voting-place, such returning officers shall not canvass, count, or compile the statements of votes from such poll or voting-place until the statements from all other polls or voting-places shall have been canvassed and compiled. The returning officers shall then proceed to investigate the statements of riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences at any such poll or voting-place; and if from the evidence of such statement they shall be convinced that such riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did not materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting-place, or did not prevent a sufficient number of qualified voters thereat from registering or voting to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, said returning officers shall canvass and compile the vote of such poll or voting-place with those previously canvassed and compiled; but if said returning officers shall not be fully satisfied thereof, it shall be their duty to examine further testimony in regard thereto, and to this end they shall have power to send for persons and papers. If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting-place, but shall exclude it from their returns: Provided, That any person interested in said election by reason of being a candidate for office shall be allowed a hearing before said returning officers upon making application within the time allowed for the forwarding of the returns of said election.

The first branch of the power given by these sections, that in section 2, is simply to canvass and compile, a purely ministerial duty, similar to that vested in similar officials in nearly all the States. Section 3, it will be seen, adds to these functions, other and graver duties. By it the board is vested with authority to receive sworn statements of intimidation, &c., to proceed to investigate, to hear testimony, to send for persons and papers, to be convinced, to refuse to canvass and compile, and to exclude returns. Under the ministerial provisions in section 2 the returns made by the board are stated to be what is universally true, but prima facie proof of the right to hold the office until set aside after a contest according to law. Here are all the duties, powers, and sanctions of authority ordinarily given to such officials, and here too is expressed and reserved the right of the law to adjudicate upon their finding.

But when we take up section 3 to learn what powers are given there, we find them to be anomalous, new in character, and foreign to our system. A sworn statement is to be filed. By whom? By the voter to be disfranchised? By the candidate whose rights are to be passed upon? By neither, but by the election officials. The returning board are to proceed to investigate the statements of intimidation, &c., and if from the evidence of such statement they shall be convinced that there was not such intimidation, &c., as to materially change the result of the election, then, and not otherwise, they shall canvass and compile the votes named in the statement. Riot, bloodshed, and murder may surround the election polls, peaceful citizens may be driven from them and the will of the majority be defeated by violence, if the statement of the election officials fails to disclose it, or the board are not convinced by what it contains that such was the fact, the votes are to be counted. True, the proviso to the section with great show of fairness, but in order more effectually to foreclose investigation, provides that a candidate may have a hearing before the board. In that hearing the only instruments of evidence are the statements of the election officers. Such a hearing is a mockery of justice.

These provisions, as I read them, give to the board the power to conclude every one that the election was pure and free and that nothing occurred to materially change the result. If, however, the board is not satisfied that this was the case, then they shall examine further testimony and may send for persons and papers. If they shall then be convinced that intimidation, &c., did occur and did materially interfere with the freedom of the election or prevent sufficient electors from registering and voting to materially change the result, then the vote shall not be canvassed, but shall be excluded from the returns. The statements of the election officers, it will be seen, are still the substantial accusations against the poll, but other testimony may be examined. The board are thus vested with the right to hear the charge, (the statements of the election officers,) to examine witnesses, to send for persons and papers, to be convinced that there was intimidation, to judge of its materiality both as to interfering with the freedom and as to changing the result, and upon such judging to exclude the poll. It must be admitted that these are judicial powers. They vest the tribunal with power to hear something, to judge after hearing, and to execute their judgment. Is it a court or is it a returning board? What do those who sustain its authority claim it to be? On page 175 of Document No. 2, sent to the Senate by the President, I find Judge H. J. Campbell, of the fourth district court, New Orleans, in his letter to Mr. GARFIELD, speaks of it thus:

It will be seen that these five returning officers are neither a canvassing board nor a returning board; and therefore there is no analogy between their powers and functions and those of canvassing boards of other States. These five officers are the returning officers of the State for all elections. There are no returns, and can be none, of any election but the returns which these officers make. In the eye of the law they are present at each poll. * * * It is the returns of these five officers, and these alone, which, under the law, constitute the prima facie evidence of the result of the election. Their power to inquire into and determine the results of violence and intimidation where alleged is not the power of counting out or counting in votes, but the power to decide whether alleged votes are votes or not; it is the power to examine into cases where an election has already been nullified by acts of violence, and so forth, and if the nullity is proved according to law, to ascertain and declare that nullity.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and those who unite with him, in their report in the same document, page 5, speak of it in this language:

Not only is the action of this board independent of the State or national laws, other than those of Louisiana, but its determination of the votes cast and candidates elected is final and substantially conclusive, as appears from a decision of the supreme court of that State, reported in the twenty-fifth volume of the Louisiana Annual Reports, where the court, at page 268, say: "No statute conferring upon the courts the power to try cases of contested elections or title to office authorizes them to revise the action of the returning board. If we were to assume that prerogative, we should have to go still further, and revise the returns of the supervisors of elections, examine the right of voters to vote, and, in short, the courts would become in regard to such cases mere officers for counting, compiling, and reporting election returns. The Legislature has seen proper to lodge the power to decide who has or has not been elected in the returning board.

"It might have conferred that power on the courts, but it did not. Whether the law be good or bad, it is our duty to obey its provisions, and not to legislate."

Great reliance is placed upon this decision of the supreme court. I do not regard it as adding to the value of the powers granted nor giving moral strength to the power assumed. It was delivered by a divided court. The judges assenting to the doctrine were Chief-Justice Ludeling, Justice Taliaferro, and others.

Of the character of at least the head of this court, we may judge by what Mr. Justice Strong, of the Supreme Court of the United States, says, in the opinion of that court in the case of Jackson vs. Ludeling, in 21 Wallace's Reports. At page 621, after describing a combination of which Mr. Ludeling was an active member, he says:

Were there nothing more in this case than is narrated by the brief history thus given, which is uncontradicted, it would be difficult to characterize the transaction as anything less than a great wrong perpetrated by the agency of legal forms.

Again, at pages 628 and 629, after discussing the agreement entered into between "Ludeling, for himself and friends," and J. N. Horne, Judge Strong says:

It is impossible to characterize this agreement as anything else than fraudulent. Its obvious purpose was to remove competition at the sale. It was a flagrant breach of trust on the part of Horne, and it was a fraud in Ludeling with knowledge of the trust. Horne had undertaken to persuade him to violate his instructions and sacrifice the interests of his constituents.

And again, at page 631, after stating the combination to defeat a sale for $550,000 in order that they might buy the property for $50,000, Judge Strong says:

It is impossible to sustain such a transaction. Throughout it was grossly inequitable. Ludeling, it is true, was not a director, but he was a leading member of the combination and its chief agent to carry out its plans. He knew its purposes. He knew its illegality. He had negotiated the surrender of Horne with full knowledge of Horne's breach of trust.

And at page 632—

The defendants can take nothing from such a sale thus made. Were we to sustain it we should sanction a great moral and legal wrong, give encouragement to faithlessness to trusts and confidence reposed, and countenance combinations to wrest by the forms of law from the uninformed and confiding their just rights.

Such is the picture drawn by a just judge of the personal conduct of the head of the court whose decision is relied upon as estopping the people of the United States from an inquiry into the conduct of a returning board in whose action they are all interested. Is it strange that the forms of law are now sought to be used to cover wrong when we regard the mighty interests at stake and the past records of those who wield power in Louisiana?

We are thus brought face to face with the fact that there exists in Louisiana a tribunal which its courts and its laws say has absolute power over the returns of elections, from whose decrees there can be no appeal, over which no court, either of Louisiana or of the United States, has supervisory control, and which can, and in the present issue has, assumed to adjudicate the results of the presidential election. If it be true as asserted by the supreme court of Louisiana that the whole power of the highest legal tribunals in the land is superseded and subordinated by this board, within the spere of its jurisdiction; if it be true that ten thousand citizens can be disfranchised by its decrees without a hearing and without a remedy; if it be true that it is gifted with power not only to try, convict, and punish in their absence those who have been guilty of riot and intimidation, but also those who have neither participated in nor known of its perpetration; if it be true that those whom the people have chosen to fill the offices of the State are concluded without a judicial hearing, and that a candidate for elector of President chosen by an apparent majority can be returned defeated and there is neither a contested election nor a review by judicial authority for his relief, then it is time to inquire as to the grounds of our reliance upon a government of law and to learn whether the guarantees of the Federal Constitution mean what they import.

I cannot agree either that the Louisiana returning board is a court, that its decrees are conclusive, or its judgments final, but I do believe and affirm that its assumed jurisdiction and authority are contrary to the theory of our institutions, anti-American in principle, and that they violate the plain letter of the Federal Constitution. In no other State in the Union are the acts and doings of a returning board held to be of absolute verity and conclusive of their correctness. In every other organization of the kind in the country their duties are held to be ministerial, or, if quasi-judicial functions are vested in them, the right to a review of their adjudications is reserved to the courts of law through a contest, or to some other body vested by law with the power and the means to pass judicially upon the questions involved. Returning officers are mere registers of the popular will expressed under the forms and sanctions of law. If they be constituted also a tribunal of the last resort both as to facts and law, they are vested with power to nullify that will at their pleasure. From being its mere conduits they become its judges and its tyrants. From being the means of its faithful expression they may become the irresponsible agents of falsehood and wrong.

Dare we trust the ballot to the tender mercies of a returning board utterly uncontrolled by the judiciary? Is there safety anywhere if it be not found in this supervisory power? What will become of the sense of security that all feel when our bloodless revolutions have passed that the return is the truth, or the law, wielded by faithful judges, will be invoked by those interested to make it truth? Is this not the very anchor of the election system? Can we dispense with it? Will not the result which the action of this returning board fastens on the country be the entering wedge to our destruction—the leprosy that will infect and taint the whole body? Such an innovation as this, with such results as hinge upon its action, will speedily demonstrate that returning boards, with absolute powers over both law and fact, and the ballot, cannot exist together in a free state.

Upon the faith of the people, upon their implicit and unhesitating confidence in the popular vote as the truthful representative of the popular will, depends the life of our institutions. The theory of our government and the noiseless working of its complex machinery both depend upon the faith we have in this great leading thought. Take from the forms of expression of the popular vote the safeguard and protection of judicial scrutiny, and faith will have departed with them. Political and judicial duties fit but ill upon the same person. The return and the certificate flow from the rapid and superficial count of the returning officer. The tests of their truth and of their effect belong to the slower, cooler, and more cautious methods of the law. The former is prima facie; the latter, when completed, is conclusive. The former accepts for truth that which seems to be truth; the latter receives complaints, hears testimony, deliberates, and judges. The doctrine of the conclusive effect of the judgment of a court finds its reason and its origin in the fact that the party must be heard before he is condemned. This protection has been the property of our race since Magna Charta. To condemn without hearing is tyranny. Nor can it be argued that under this statute those who are judged are given a hearing. Here are none of the vital essentials to such a tribunal as those enumerated by Chief-Justice Waite in the most recent case. Does it anywhere appear "that ample provision has been made for the trial of the contestation before a court of competent jurisdiction; for bringing the party against whom the proceeding is had before the court and notifying him of the case he is required to meet; for giving him an opportunity to be heard in his defence; for the deliberation and judgment of the court; for an appeal from this judgment to the highest court of the State, and for hearing and judgment there? Where are these guarantees of judicial fairness in this case?

The board itself is unfitted by the very character of its composition to give an impartial hearing or a just judgment. The end the law seeks to attain may be a just and proper one, but in seeking it great fundamental rights are destroyed.

> No freeman shall be taken or imprisoned, or disseized of his freehold or liberties or free customs, or be outlawed or exiled, or any otherwise destroyed; nor will we pass upon him or condemn him but by lawful judgment of his peers or by the law of the land.

These rights are as broad as our country. They go with our race into every clime. Their infringement in Louisiana is no more possible than in New York. Freemen cannot be disseized of their liberties, nor condemned but by "the law of the land." "The law of the land" is not a statute of Louisiana repugnant to the theory of law everywhere. Citizens of the United States in every locality are affected by this statute now. Its execution affects us all. Vested by law with conclusive power, this returning board—"this court of the last resort"—sweeps out of existence ten thousand ballots and decides the presidential election. Neither the statute nor the board gives to an elector of the United States chosen by a majority the right to contest for his place. The laws of Louisiana utterly deny this right. No formal petition or complaint, with a specific detail of the wrongs committed; no plaintiff, complainant, or accuser is permitted to tread the portals of this court; no answer under oath or in writing by defendant or accused is demanded; no notice to those chosen by the majority to appear and answer; no compulsory process for the attendance of witnesses; no power to punish for contempt; no right of appeal as to matter of fact; no exception for review of errors in law is given to this "court," whose decrees and edicts are fraught with consequences so momentous to the American people. Such a tribunal is no court. It is a judicial monstrosity. It can give no lawful hearing. Its decrees are not binding. Its judgments are not final. Its construction and powers violate every conception of a court as a place where justice is judicially administered which we entertain as a people. It grasps our rights and destroys them without a hearing.

This law and its creature, the returning board, so far from being in accord with the Constitution of the United States, so far from requiring "from us the same respect for their decisions as would be given to the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States," are at flagrant war with the Constitution, and they only demand from us the seal of our condemnation. They are not only destructive of the theory, but they violate the plain letter of the Federal Constitution. Whatever may have been the rule before the adoption of the fourteenth amendment as to the security and guarantee by the Federal Government in the States of those great rights and privileges which belong to the individual—those which are fundamental in character and accompany a citizen of the United States wherever he may go—there can be no doubt that since its adoption the States are prohibited from either destroying, abridging, or depriving the citizens thereof. The words are:

> No State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States; nor shall any State deprive any person of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law.

Passing by the question arising under the first clause as to what are "privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States," we come to the consideration of the second clause. What is property, within the meaning of this clause? Let us take up the authorities and examine them:

> The truth, however, is, that all incorporeal hereditaments, whether they be immunities, dignities, offices, or franchises, or other rights, are deemed valuable in law. The owners have a legal estate and property in them and legal remedies to support and recover them.—Dartmouth College vs. Woodward, 4 Wheaton.
> The theory upon which our political institutions rest is that all men have certain inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that in the pursuits of happiness all avocations, all honors, all positions are alike open to every one, and that in the protection of these rights all are equal before the law.—Cummings vs. Missouri, 4 Wallace.

That this clause of the Constitution guarantees protection to this form of property is conceded by the Chief-Justice in Kennard vs. Louisiana, 2 Otto, 481:

> "Due process of law," as herein used, imports the same meaning as "the law of the land" in Magna Charta. It means "the law of the particular case in a fair and open trial." "This provision and those as to the administration of justice require that all claims for justice between man and man shall be tried, decided, and enforced by the judicial authority of the State and by due course of law. The design of the Constitution is to exclude arbitrary power from every branch of the Government, and there would be no exclusion of it if the rescripts or decrees of the Legislature were allowed to take the form of a statute. It does not mean merely an act of the Legislature, for that would abrogate all restriction on legislative power." It is "not the arbitrary edict of any body of men; not an act of Assembly though it may have all the outward form of a law, but that process by which what one alleges to be his is adjudged not to be his. If this be not so every restriction upon legislative authority would be a vain formula of words, without life or force." It ordinarily implies and includes a complainant, a defendant, and a judge, regular allegations, opportunity to answer, and a trial according to some settled course of judicial proceeding. I cannot persuade myself that a judge of elections or a board of election officers constituted under State laws is such a tribunal. (per Strong, J., in 53 Pennsylvania Reports, 117.) By "the law of the land" is most clearly intended the general law which hears before it condemns, which proceeds upon inquiry and renders judgment only after trial. "Due process of law" as defined by the Chief-Justice in Kennard vs. Louisiana is "the due course of legal proceedings according to those rules and forms which have been established for the protection of private rights."

We search in vain through the statute that gives life and power to the returning board of Louisiana for the qualities that all of these authorities as well as common right make vital to its validity. It is not a judicial tribunal nor a place where justice can be judicially administered. Its decrees affecting the right of property, of liberty, or of life are void. Its assumed authority to pass judicially upon the right of any candidate for office is baseless. Much more is it impotent when its void decrees are hurled at an official whose place affects the machinery of the Federal Government. A candidate for elector of the United States is by the plain terms of the Constitution entitled to be judicially heard, to have his day in court, to have process for his witnesses, to be judged according to "due process of law," before his office is given to another. Here is none of these. The State of Louisiana through her statutes and by her courts seeks to deprive a citizen of the United States of his property without due process of law. In this she comes in conflict not only with the universal law controlling returning boards and with the right of every citizen of the Republic, but also with the supreme law of the land. It results that her statutes give no vigor to the action of the board they create, that their decrees are not binding nor their judgments final.

The argument resolves itself into this proposition: If a citizen of Pennsylvania and of the United States removes to Louisiana, on compliance with its laws he becomes a voter and a citizen thereof and may be chosen an elector of the United States. As such, if, under the provisions of this statute, he were deprived of enough votes to reduce his majority to a minority, it would be an abridgment of his privileges as a citizen of the United States, for his right to the office unless deprived thereof by due process of law—which this statute is not—would be clear; or it may be stated thus: honors and offices are property. The right to own and hold property is an inalienable one. It belongs to every citizen of the United States. He cannot be deprived of his property save by "due process of law." A citizen of Pennsylvania going to Louisiana takes with him this right. Upon compliance with the laws of Louisiana he may become a voter and a candidate for elector. If he obtains a majority of votes he is entitled to the office unless deprived of it by due process of law. A contested election is that process. This statute denies this right, refuses a contest, and judges without hearing. It is therefore in conflict with the Constitution and void. The citizen of Louisiana who is a citizen of the United States is in the same attitude and has the same rights.

If the office of elector for President of the United States finds its origin in the Federal Constitution, and did not exist without it, then the right to be chosen in accordance with its provisions is a "privilege and immunity" of a citizen of the United States, and this, too, although we concede that the States have exclusive power in their appointment. They could not appoint an alien, yet no prohibition thereof appears in the text. If we concede, too, that "privileges and immunities" within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment are "only those rights which arise out of the nature and essential character of the National Government, the provisions of its Constitution, its laws, and its treaties," still the right of a candidate for elector to be protected within the States by the guarantees of the Constitution must exist in regard to such a case or they are valueless. If in those things which pertain to the very existence of the Federal Government those privileges and immunities may be disregarded by the States, then they mean nothing. One of these guarantees is "due process of law." The State of Louisiana has made and now attempts to enforce a law which abridges this right and thus violates the plain terms of the clause "no State shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States."

It is said that fraud and wrong, riot, murder, and intimidation, exist in Louisiana and her law-making power must be permitted to use extraordinary remedies to suppress these. We need not inquire how the machinery created by these laws is used, nor whence proceed the ills complained of. Arbitrary power is no corrective for these evils. The remedy is worse than the disease. There is force and vigor enough in the legal remedies which are sanctioned by the organic law when they are administered and enforced by authority that moves with the dignity and power of the majority of the people to suppress every wrong and sustain every right.

Fraudulent voting, false returns, violence, intimidation, and all the other evils that afflict Louisiana in her elections come to us frequently in the North, but the remedy for these is not found in the disfranchisement of masses of men without a hearing, nor in the arbitrary exercise of judicial power by an irresponsible tribunal. The polls are purged, fraudulent votes rejected, returns coerced to speak the truth, the merits found, mere irregularities overlooked, and precincts thrown out when utter and willful violation of law is shown, but these results are reached through legal processes, sanctioned by constitutional authority and sustained and approved by the popular will. In these processes and in the forms of judicial inquiry alone, of which complaint and answer, a day of hearing and an actual hearing are always a part, is found the basis of our faith that the popular vote is the truthful exponent of the popular will. Take these away from popular institutions and you will have substituted arbitrary power for a government of law.

Standing upon the threshold of the second century of the Republic with the retrospect in our possession by which to gauge the future, with the plain proof that the power exists to successfully base popular institutions upon a free ballot if popular faith and legal scrutiny be its accompaniment, we should be faithless to our highest duty if we did not, by every means given us to use, compel the returns from every State to speak the truth; if we did not, in the exercise of our undoubted right "to count the vote," apply the tests of judicial scrutiny and of honest methods to the tortuous ways of partisan returning boards; if we did not, in all that pertains to Federal organism and Federal machinery, produce strict conformity to the Federal Constitution and purge and winnow the material returned until the people in every section recognized and admitted the legitimate results that had been produced by a pure and free ballot.

It is said that this action of the returning board is the action of a State vested by the Constitution with exclusive power over the subject-matter, and that we are bound by it. It is to be remembered that it is not the Constitution that gives force to the certificate of the executive authority, but an act of Congress; that the Government of the United States, under its own power, makes this a mode of proof of due appointment of electors by the State, and that a careful examination of that statute will show that its provisions are mainly directory in this regard. If it were a part of the requirements of the Constitution and made imperative on the Legislature of the States in creating their mode of appointment, a different question might arise; as it is, it is our own requirement, and is to be held, like all other directory statutes, to effectuate justice and right, and not to shield fraud and wrong. At the count of votes in 1873 the two Houses went behind this certificate in the Louisiana case, examined other testimony, and rejected the votes, and in the same year the certificate of the secretary of state of Texas (and not that of the governor) was adjudged sufficient, and the votes of the State received and counted.

If it be intended by this declaration, that we are bound by this action of a State, to recognize and count a false and fraudulent return simply because it comes covered with the insignia thereof, I cannot assent. This matter concerns all sections of the Republic. It is our right and our duty to protect our people from fraud and wrong, let it come from whence it may. We can and may and ought to administer the Federal Government in all matters affecting it, with purity. Falsehood and fraud affecting it ought to find neither protection nor tolerance in any of its departments.

In the adjudication of the weighty questions that now confront us fraud spoils everything it touches. The broad seal of the State is crumbled into dust as against the great interests designed to be defrauded. Every transaction in which it mingles, every return based upon it, is defiled by its contagious touch. Why should it find shelter in the highest representative tribunal of the Republic. This is the last place on earth where it ought to find refuge. No rescripts of a State Legislature, no decree of a returning board, no judgment of a State court can or ought to protect it here. Whenever and wherever it is detected, whenever and wherever the test of truth judicially applied drags it into light, its disguises vanish, its repulsive form stands exposed, and its condemnation follows.

That "the king can do no wrong" is a maxim of the English law. Pym and Hampden, in bold assertion of the rights of their countrymen, held that this king was he who ruled according to law. The ideal king—the majesty of law—the crystallized thought of ages, based upon common right, common justice, and common sense, they declared, was the real king, and the talent, intrepidity, and courage of these tribunes of the people riveted their thought upon the minds of Englishmen. The denial of this idea has cost one English king his head, another his crown, and a third the fairest colonies he possessed. For more than two centuries it has been the vital essence of English and American liberty. The state—the successor to the king—is not its organism, its seal, its territory, its legislature, or its constitution; but it is its people, their rights, their privileges, their immunities, and their happiness. The will of that people expressed through lawful and constitutional forms is the voice of the state, and forms and seals and papers fade away before the right, the power, and the duty that exist here to learn what it is, to judicially determine it, to obey its commands, and to register it as final.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I have been prepared for some time to discuss the Louisiana case referred to now by my friend from Pennsylvania, [Mr. WALLACE,] in which discussion I shall be able to show by testimony of the clearest character, from officers of the Army, officers of the State, white men and black men, and by conceded, plain, and historical facts, that the case of intimidation in Louisiana not only demanded but made it the imperative duty of the returning officers to reject the votes of certain parishes. I have deferred entering into that discussion until the committees sent to Louisiana should return. I have, however, the published proceedings before the committees both of the House and of the Senate; I have kept my eye upon them and kept up with them, and I am prepared to show by the accumulated testimony before those committees that the evidence before the returning board is substantially sustained. Still I have been disposed to let the matter go over until that testimony was reported to us. Now the Senator from Pennsylvania comes here and assumes as a conceded or proven fact that this returning board was guilty of fraud and he calls upon both Houses of Congress to do what the law does not give them the power to do. The Constitution does not give them the power to sit in judgment and review the action of the returning board.

I rose simply to give notice that on the pending question upon the reference of the resolution offered by the Senator from Pennsylvania to the committee having charge of this subject, on to-morrow (because I take it the Senate is not in a condition to care to hear me to-day) I will take up the case of Louisiana and show the Senator from Pennsylvania by actual proven testimony, taken according to the law of Louisiana, what the condition of affairs down there is which he is called upon to defend and maintain, and to show upon what ground he now charges officers sworn under the law to do a particular duty with violating their office, being guilty of fraud, &c. I will do that to-morrow if it is the pleasure of the Senate to hear me. In the mean time I ask that the resolution go over until to-morrow.

Mr. WALLACE. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me, I will state that I answered the argument of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] in which the distinct assertion was made that fraud cannot be inquired into. I have not investigated the question of fact in the slightest degree, but simply considered the position taken by the Senator from Iowa in his speech one day last week, that we cannot go behind the returns and investigate fraud. I have discussed no facts in the case.

Mr. SHERMAN. I had not the pleasure of hearing all the Senator from Pennsylvania said. I came in toward the latter part of his speech, but I will look over it to-morrow. It does seem to me that Senators must see that while we are not endeavoring to press this matter forward, the question of fraud, force, and violence in Louisiana cannot be discussed on one side alone. I have, with a good deal of impatience, read in the newspapers, especially in some of the New York papers, allegation made in regard to facts in Louisiana which are perfectly false and wrong, and I am prepared upon my oath and honor as a Senator, upon the proven testimony which I will read to you and which I think will be believed by the Senate and the country, that in Louisiana there were fraud, violence, murder, and wrong sufficient to justify this returning board in rejecting, and to make it their imperative duty to reject, the vote of that State. I do believe that if the whole body of that testimony taken on both sides could be read to an intelligent jury, North or South, there is not a jury but what would decide that an election thus tainted with force and violence should be rejected entirely; and, if the law of Louisiana was silent about it, it would defeat the vote of Louisiana from playing any part in this election. But for the action of the returning board and but for the action of the people of Louisiana and the State of Louisiana in providing a remedy for these wrongs, the whole vote of the State of Louisiana ought to be rejected as a body on account of wrongs and fraud. If it were not for the law which they themselves made which provides a means of expurgating the fraud and the violence, the State of Louisiana ought not to be counted on either side. Under that law, which has been observed in all its details by these returning officers, upon evidence sworn to before them and now before us and printed by us, they have acted as they considered it to be their duty to act in expurgating from the body of the returns certain election polls where this fraud and violence prevailed so as to change the result of the election; and, when the question comes up as to the truth or right of their finding, it seems to me that this can be made plain to the Senate. I will let the matter go over until to-morrow, and I will look over the Senator's speech. I do not want to rush into this debate prematurely; but I do not wish facts to be assumed and inferences drawn unfounded, as I think, upon testimony known to me personally.

Mr. BOGY. I will suggest that the argument which the Senator from Ohio proposes to make to-morrow be postponed until the testimony which I had the honor to present to the Senate a few days ago be printed. I think I shall be prepared to show, when the time comes, that the testimony which was presented here coming from the President was a partial statement, and that a majority of that testimony has since that time been flatly contradicted by testimony taken before the congressional committees in Louisiana. I think I shall be prepared to show, when the time comes, that the most important testimony of the commanding officers there does not appear in the report made by the Senator from Ohio. Major Bascom was commanding officer in the parish of East Feliciana and he gave his testimony at length, yet his testimony does not appear in that report. The testimony taken by the persons who were sent there by the President of the United States is a report of one side only. I presented a few days ago the testimony taken by the gentlemen who were sent there on the other side of this political question, and that testimony I think will be printed in a few days. When it is printed I think I shall be prepared to show that, although the election in Louisana was not as peaceful and as orderly as it might have been, yet most of the disorders were forced upon that people, not by the democratic party, but by the republican party, at the head of whom stood the governor of the State himself; that he was the instigator of more than one-half of all the troubles that took place in Louisiana; and I think I shall be prepared to show that most of the testimony which has been taken and presented here by the Senator from Ohio was taken without the sanction of law at all, in violation of law nine-tenths of it; affidavits made in the custom-house at New Orleans by parties who since that time have come before the committees there and have stated under oath that the affidavits purporting to be made by them were not made by them and that they are false. If you will wait until both sides of this question can be presented to the Senate and the country, I shall with my feeble ability try to present the other side of that question, and I hope that any discussion will be postponed until that time comes. I shall feel it my duty when that testimony is printed and placed before the country also to give my views upon the subject; but I hope that all these discussions will be postponed until we have both sides of the case and the entire testimony; and I think this will not be long. It was some days ago that I presented the testimony, and it must soon be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish to make a correction of one statement of the Senator in justice not only to the democratic committee but in justice to the republicans who were there as witnesses in Louisiana. They took no testimony; the democratic committee took no testimony. They disavowed that. They took none whatever. They heard statements, as we did, of the witnesses on both sides; but I feel bound for them to say that they took no testimony at all. My friend from Missouri left before, I think, the taking of testimony commenced. I am not sure about that, however. It is but due to them, as well as to myself and others, to state that we took no testimony whatever. The parties were represented, the electors on one side and the other were represented by counsel, and they took testimony; we took none. That ought to be kept in mind all the time. We were both there as spectators. I respected their opinions, respected their judgment. I have never said anything discourteous to them.

The allegation that we have presented an ex-parte statement in one sense is true. We tried, however, to get all sides and bring them here. We tried every means we could to get the other side here, but could not do it. They had the same means of furnishing copies of their depositions that we had, and they would have been printed long ago; but, strange to say, although we returned here, I think, about the 6th day of December and presented the testimony that we had, the whole of it, here to the Senate, yet the testimony on the other side was not presented here until the day before yesterday, if I remember—one month after ours was in print. Yet I did not hurry the matter and did not complain about it. My friend from Missouri the other day brought in a little package of papers and set it out on his desk, which I supposed was the body of the testimony; but it seems there was a great mass of it. There was no objection to the printing of all that was introduced.

In regard to the testimony of Major Bascom, that was taken on the other side, and I tried very hard to get it, although I know something of it. The testimony of Lieutenant Brooke, of Hayes, and of nearly all the officers in command in the disputed districts is furnished by us. The testimony of Major Bascom is not. I should be very glad to have it, and when it is printed I may have occasion to refer to it. There is no contradiction in the testimony.

As to the allegation now made by the Senator that these depositions of ours were disproved by testimony taken before the committee of our friend and colleague the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. HOWE,] he is mistaken. That testimony is being printed now pretty fully in the Saint Louis Republican and I suppose in the democratic papers as well. I have read it as it comes out. It substantially sustains the testimony before the returning board. Indeed a letter could be produced here which contains the statement of the chairman of the committee that in the main, with some reasonable differences arising from the mode of examination, &c., the testimony is the same on these leading points.

Now, sir, you will not see any substantial difference from the case made before the returning board on which they acted and the testimony produced before our committee. Whether there is or is not, the main question is whether upon the testimony before that returning board they were justified in doing what they did. It is not whether new testimony has been gotten up since, manufactured, or created, although I am willing to take it either on the testimony now taken by both committees or the testimony before the returning board. The question is whether, on the testimony before the returning board, there is reasonable ground for the charge that they were guilty of corruption and fraud in making their return. That is the charge. Was there any reasonable ground in the testimony of intimidation, violence, &c., to justify their action under the law, as proven before that board? That is the question; and upon that question I am willing to meet the Senator from Missouri; but until that question is debated, until we can have a right to present it to the Senate, I must insist that no man's judgment shall be precluded, that no man's opinion shall be settled by ex parte statements made by those who are probably not so familiar with the testimony as I am. Take the whole when it comes presented by whoever will present it, and you will find the simple fact that in a large portion of the State of Louisiana there was a degree of terror, violence, fraud, and intimidation most painful to hear of, most terrible to have enacted in the presence of a presidential election, and fatal will it be. I might quote the language of the petition which was read to you this morning, signed by Mr. Pendleton and other distinguished citizens of Cincinnati; fatal will it be to any administration to come into power and to take the presidential chair with their garments stained with the blood of their fellow-citizens; and yet that will be precisely the case if it is by Louisiana. If Louisiana elects a democratic President his garments will be stained with the blood of innocent victims, and there can be no doubt about that.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, this discussion was forced prematurely by the speech made by the Senator from Ohio when he presented the testimony taken by one side in that State. He now states that those persons who acted with him took no testimony, and that the persons who were sent there by the democratic party took no testimony. That may in some sense be correct, but it is not substantially so. Testimony was taken by one side and by the other. Whether the Senator from Ohio is on one side or not, there were two sides to the question, and he himself only reported here one side. Which side did he report? He reported the testimony taken by the persons who were trying to sustain the action of the returning board, and he made a speech at the time which I suppose forced the discussion before this body prematurely; forced me, before the testimony was presented to us, to reply to his speech sustaining the action of the board from beginning to end, giving it a character which I and others believe it was not entitled to, claiming for that board jurisdiction to try a question which in accordance with law it is not entitled to try, and fortifying it in every way. Thus he has made it necessary for us to reply to the speech made by him. He has forced that discussion on us before we are ready. He has attempted to place before the country as a fact that the election in Louisiana was one scene of blood and murder and intimidation. I shall be able to show that, although there was much intimidation and a good deal of improper conduct in that election, nevertheless nine-tenths of it has been manufactured since the election. I shall be prepared to show that which he has never yet denied, that all the testimony taken by the returning board was taken without authority of law. Persons found in the gutters and purlieus and infamous places of New Orleans were brought there as witnesses to attack the votes of persons in distant parishes. I shall be prepared to show that Mr. Kellogg and Mr. Packard themselves filed affidavits there which can be proven to the whole world to be false from one end to the other. They state that as a fact in those affidavits which the world knows were never facts within their knowledge, and my friend from Ohio must know that to be so. We attempted to co-operate with him in New Orleans. I was there myself. We wrote to those gentlemen a kind, courteous letter, asking that both delegations should come together and see that there was a fair, honest count by the returning board; but our approaches were repelled. We returned a second time, and were thrown off again.

Now we are told by the gentleman that he made an effort to obtain the testimony taken on our side, denying at the same time that there are two sides to the question; and yet there was testimony taken on our side, or taken on the side of the people, in opposition to the perjured villains who were there before the returning board as witnesses. We did not produce copies of the testimony then. Why? While the testimony on our side was being copied for the gentleman and his associates, as I understand at the public expense, and ready from day to day to be handed to them, ours was refused, and at our own expense, exceeding a thousand dollars, we were compelled to have that testimony copied, and were subjected all the time to delays and many hinderances, while they met with nothing of the kind; and the day that he left New Orleans he was ready to carry with him his side of the testimony, when ours could not be copied, and it took a month to copy it, and some portions of it cannot be copied even to this day. We had to do it at private expense.

Now, sir, this debate is rather irregular. I repeat what I said a while ago, it has been forced upon the country and forced upon the Senate by the course pursued by the Senator from Ohio. The time has not yet come; we are not yet ready to do justice to the subject. Let us have the testimony on both sides; and if it be true that the election in Louisiana was carried in the way stated by the Senator from Ohio, it was not a fair election and it should not be considered. An election held in that way certainly should not make a President for the people of the United States; there I agree with him. We shall be prepared to show that the intimidation, the violence, the wrong-doings there were in most cases the acts of the men to whose benefit this investigation has resulted.

But, sir, let this question be postponed until we are prepared to meet it. I am not here to make assertions contradicting the assertions made by the Senator from Ohio. I desire no such position. When I speak upon the subject I want to speak with the facts before me. I pretend to know nothing of my own knowledge of the condition of Louisiana. What knowledge I have I shall gather from these reports and the little information which I obtained when I was there. When all the evidence is laid before the Senate, I shall be prepared to give my views upon that subject, and till that time comes, in my opinion, the discussion ought to be postponed.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have only one remark to make in reply to the observations made by the Senator that the copying done on the part of the republican electors was at the public expense. I am quite sure the Senator must be mistaken about that. He cannot know about it, and I am quite sure it was not so.

Mr. BOGY. I will state this fact: I am assured by a private letter—of course I am not authorized to mention the gentleman's name—and also by a gentleman who was in the city of Washington a short time ago, that as the testimony was given on the side represented by the Senator it was copied, copied by the clerks of the returning board, while our side was not at all copied, and hence the reason for the delay. Of course I do not state that as of my own knowledge; but I am so assured by gentlemen of standing, some of whom were in the city of Washington, and others have written to me that such is the fact. I will not state it as a matter within my own knowledge; yet I have no doubt it is so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know about what the returning board did. When the Senator says "public expense," if he means the expense of the United States, I know it was not at the expense of the United States. I have no doubt that the clerks of the returning board did copy more or less of this testimony; how much I do not know. As I understood, it was copied at the expense of the electors and at the expense of Packard, the candidate for governor. No Government officer, so far as I know, contributed to it, and no public expense was incurred in copying this testimony; but, on the contrary, we tried to get it all, on both sides; but the testimony taken on the part of the democratic electors was within their control and within their power until the very day we adjourned.

Mr. President, I might here refer to another thing Some of the New York papers have said that we were there at the public expense. My friend from Missouri would not make any such statement as that. The gentlemen on neither side were there at the public expense. We paid our own expenses, and paid them honestly out of our own pockets. But some of the newspapers charge that we were paid out of the public crib; that the Secretary of the Treasury paid us our expenses, and all that absurd sort of stuff. As a matter of course, I would not deem it necessary to contradict it here, but that the honorable Senator himself says this copying was done at the public expense. So far as I know, there was no advantage shown by the returning officers to either side of the controversy. I saw nothing of the kind, or that would indicate anything of that kind; certainly nothing of that kind came to my knowledge, and it would not receive my assent.

Mr. BOGY. "The public expense" means this: I am informed that the testimony taken by the republican electors, as the Senator calls them, was regularly and duly copied, while the testimony taken by the other side, the democratic electors, was not. I am furthermore informed that the testimony was not within their control. When given to the returning board it was a part of the archives of the returning board and they could not get it, and they have not been able to get some of it to this day, as I am informed. Therefore, whether done at public expense or not, the republican side of the question met with all the facilities, and by some hocus-pocus their testimony was found to be transcribed, which hocus-pocus did not apply to our side of the question. That is all. Where the money came from, whether my friend paid part of it or not I do not know, but I state the fact to be as I have because I am informed that such is the fact; we could not get our testimony, while they got theirs.

Mr. SHERMAN. One more remark. There was no pretense of this kind made by the gentlemen of whom we asked copies of the testimony. They did not say anything of the kind; did not pretend that they could not get copies of that testimony. They could have got them. The testimony was in their possession, under their control. When we asked for copies they did not say "We could not get copies of the testimony; you have had advantages which we have not had." No such remark as that was made in reply. They simply said, "We prefer to communicate that testimony to the public at large in a different way." Therefore the pretense that there was any advantage in copying testimony given to one side or the other is an entire mistake. Both parties could copy the testimony, and we secured our copy through the interested parties, the governor-elect of the State of Louisiana on the republican ticket and the counsel and agents of the republican electors.

Mr. BOGY. There seems to be no end to this thing. The Senator from Ohio states that the gentlemen on my side declined to publish testimony and gave no such reason as I have stated. That is so. The democratic gentlemen who were in New Orleans had made an application at the outset to co-operate with the republican gentlemen who were there, and they had been repelled. That was the end of any co-operation between them by the action of the republicans themselves.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask that the matter lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. BOGY. Why not let it lie over until the testimony is printed?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will see.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to have a short executive session.

Mr. INGALLS. I withdraw my motion for that purpose.

Mr. BRIGHT introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4330) providing for the free coinage of silver dollars, and for making the same a legal tender; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BRIGHT. I move that bill be referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I make the point of order on that reference of this bill, and I wish to call the attention of the Speaker to Rule 148, which I ask the Clerk to read. The point I make is that under the rules the bill, instead of being referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining, should be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The Clerk read as follows:

148. An additional standing committee shall be appointed at the commencement of each Congress whose duties shall continue until the first session of the ensuing Congress, to consist of seven members, to be entitled a "Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures;" and to this committee shall be referred all bills, resolutions, and communications to the House upon that subject.—January 21, 1864; March 2, 1867.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The point I make is that under the rules the bill must be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures; and, further, that it requires a suspension of the rules to refer it to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for the majority of the House to refer a bill wherever they wish.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Then I move the bill be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Maryland for that purpose.

Mr. BRIGHT. I desire to make an inquiry——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. Let us know the subject-matter of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read the bill in extenso.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I ask now that Rule 153 be read, as it relates to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

The Clerk read as follows:

153. It shall be the duty of the Committee on Mines and Mining to consider all subjects relating to mines and mining that may be referred to them, and to report their opinion thereon, together with such propositions relative thereto as may seem to them expedient.—December 19, 1865.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order, which seems to be made by the gentleman from Maryland that this bill should be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, believing that it is competent for a majority of the House to give whatever reference they may deem necessary.

Mr. KASSON Let me have a single word on this subject.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. The language of Rule 148 is so imperative I wish to to call the attention of the Speaker to it——

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not understand that this subject is open to debate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that debate upon the question of reference is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to speak to the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. KASSON. The resolution originally appointing the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures is one which I had the honor to introduce several Congresses ago, with the express object of securing a committee that should keep up the traditions of the House upon the subject of coinage; not at all with so much reference to legal tender-quality, &c., as to the shape of the coin, the quantity of metal, the quantity of alloy, its relations to the coins of other countries, and all those various subjects that are connected with any order of Congress relating to the coined money of the United States. The language in which the resolution is drawn is imperative. Rule 148, providing for the appointment of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, says:

And to this committee shall be referred all bills, resolutions, and communications to the House upon that subject.

This bill expressly relates to the subject of the coinage of the silver dollar. If it related to mines and mining, by opposing any regulation or provision covering that subject, there would be presented to the House the alternative of two committees that might have jurisdiction. No such alternative is presented here as between the Committe on Mines and Mining and the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. The alternative presented is the Committee of Ways and Means; for the bill provides that the silver dollar shall be a legal tender in payment of debts, &c., to be received by the United States. I admit that the House of Representatives might, by a simple majority, refer to either of the committees which had jurisdiction either of the subjects embraced in the bill. But when the language of the rule to which I refer is imperative, the bill in one respect at least should be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. There is nothing in it relating to Mines and Mining.

My point is, therefore, that without suspending the rules by a two-thirds vote we cannot get rid of Rule 148 so as to refer the bill to the Committee on Mines and Mining, although we might if the question were as to a reference to the Committee of Ways and Means. I desire to preserve the jurisdiction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures. It is a very important committee, and ought to take charge of all matters relating to coinage, or else be relieved of all jurisdiction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, without expressing any opinion as to the propriety of reference to one committee or another, recognizes that to the House in the past has always been left the control of the reference of a bill when such reference has been a matter of dispute.

Mr. FORT. I desire to inquire if it has not been the universal custom of this House to allow a gentleman to send his bill to whatever appropriate committee he desires?

The SPEAKER. Not that the Chair knows of.

Mr. FORT. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Committee on Mines and Mining did consider a bill similar to this, did report it to the House, and that the House did act upon it. It occurs to me that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] ought not be compelled to send his bill to a committee which he has reason to know is not kindly disposed toward it.

The SPEAKER. Perhaps the reference of the bill to which the gentleman from Illinois alludes was not disputed.

Mr. BRIGHT rose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has ruled that debate is not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I do not propose to debate the question. I desire, however, that I may have the ear of the Chair for a moment in relation to the construction of the two rules which are involved in the controversy as to the reference of this bill.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to make a point of order?

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman if he desires to make a point of order. He has not the power to recognize him otherwise.

Mr. BRIGHT. I wish to make a point of order as to the construction of these rules. I apprehend that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] has mistaken the contents of the bill. I maintain that it is competent to refer it to either one of these committees; that either committee would have jurisdiction; that it is a case of concurrent jurisdiction; and that, being a case of concurrent jurisdiction, it would be entirely proper that it should be referred to either committee. That being so I suppose that it would be at the election of the member introducing a bill, or if not at his election, at the election of the House, to give it such direction to such committee as would be most friendly to the measure introduced. I have no idea, Mr. Speaker, of introducing the bill and sending it to a slaughter-house where it has already been decided unfavorably upon.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate, and debate is not in order.

Mr. BRIGHT. I have said all I wish to say.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] which is that this bill be referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, instead of to the Committee on Mines and Mining, as indicated by the gentleman who introduced the bill.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were ayes—60, noes 90.

DEFAULTING COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I move to so suspend the rules as that the House shall adopt the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas on the 13th day of March, 1876, the following resolution was passed by this House, to wit:

"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, requested to state to this House the actual balance due from collectors of internal revenue who are not now in office since the organization of that bureau; that the names of such defaulting collectors be given with the amount due from each, and the total amount due from all of those who are in default; that he also inform this House of the names of the defaulting collectors who have been sued, with the date of the suit, together with the date of resignation of the defaulting collectors, and the name of the President by whom and the time when appointed;"

And whereas the said Secretary of the Treasury has failed to answer said resolution: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the said Secretary of the Treasury be directed by this House to make answer to said resolution.

Mr. HOAR. Let that resolution be referred to a committee to ascertain the correctness of the allegations therein set forth.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. I understand that the information called for by the resolution referred to came in answer to another resolution.

Mr. KASSON. It was answered in another form.

Mr. SOUTHARD. There was some information given in answer to a resolution of the Senate; which information was never printed, and therefore has never come into the possession of the House.

Mr. KASSON. I know that I received the information called for in another form. The Secretary to whom the resolution refers is not now in office.

Mr. HOAR. It is an attack on Secretary Bristow, without any opportunity for him to reply.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. On that I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 127, nays 68, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Ainsworth, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Banning, Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

COMMON-SCHOOL EDUCATION.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask consent to offer a resolution to which I think there will be no objection. It merely directs a committee to make an inquiry, which I think is perfectly proper.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Education and Labor be and are instructed to ascertain whether in any one or more States an equal opportunity for common-school education, including school privileges for equal time, is secured to colored and white children; and, if not, that said committee report such bill as may be proper to enforce the Constitution in this respect.

Mr. KNOTT. I object.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I move, then, to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules,

The SPEAKER said: In the opinion of the Chair two-thirds have not voted in the affirmative.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 119, nays 79, not voting 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ainsworth, Bagby, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bradley, William R. Brown, Buckner, Horatio C. DISTRICT POLICE BOARD.

Mr. BUCKNER. I move to suspend the rules to pass a bill, which I send to the Clerk, to abolish the board of commissioners of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia and to transfer its powers to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read. It abolishes the board of commissioners of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and provides that all the powers and duties now exercised by the board and the members thereof be transferred to the commissioners of the District of Columbia and their successors, who shall have authority to employ such officers and agents and to adopt such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into execution the powers and duties imposed upon said police board by existing laws.

Mr. MONROE. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. MONROE. I do not propose to engage in debate, but merely to ask whether this bill is offered under a suspension of the rules?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. MONROE. I would ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] whether he has any objection to having the bill come up for consideration?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio suggests that the motion be modified so as to suspend the rules for the purpose of considering the bill.

Mr. BUCKNER. I prefer to have it put on its passage at once.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not observe that the bill contains any limitation as to the number of officers and agents that may be appointed.

Mr. BUCKNER. That will be regulated by exising laws.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the last clause of the bill be read again.

Mr. MONROE. I merely wish to say to my friend from Missouri that this is a new subject to me, and I wanted to hear him explain briefly why the measure was offered, as I am altogether in the dark in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. No debate is in order except by unanimous consent. The bill will be again read.

The Clerk again read the bill.

The question being taken on the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill it was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

So the bill (H. R. No. 4350) was passed.

POLITICAL DISABILITY OF ELECTORS.

Mr. KASSON submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the select committee on the powers and privileges of the House of Representatives in respect to the counting of the electoral votes be instructed to inquire into and report whether any electoral vote or votes were cast by persons under the disability imposed by section 3 of article 14 of the amendments of the Federal Constitution; and, if so, what action shall be taken thereon; and that they have power to send for persons and papers and take testimony.

Mr. HEWITT, of New York. I thought that had been referred to the committee.

Mr. KASSON. It is because it is not covered by previous resolutions I now submit it for adoption.

There was no objection, and the resolution was adopted.

LOCATION OF TROOPS.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and is hereby, directed to inquire and report to this House the present strength, location, and occupation of the troops of the United States Army; how many are being used upon the frontier, how many in the Southern States, and how many in and around Washington; when the troops were ordered to Washington, the nature of their orders, by whom made, and the purpose for which they are or have been ordered here. Said committee be, and are hereby, authorized to send for persons and papers.

Mr. CONGER. I object.

Mr. THROCKMORTON. Then I move to suspend the rules and adopt the resolution.

Mr. CONGER. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 123, noes 67.

Mr. BANNING demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 130, nays 84, not voting 75; as follows:

WASHINGTON MONUMENT.

Mr. DURHAM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the joint commission appointed to direct and supervise the continuation of the construction of the Washington National Monument be requested to inform this House how far they have progressed in the examination of the foundation of the monument, what has been or will be the cost of said examination, and when they expect to complete the same, so as to resume the work in the construction of the monument.

CLAIMS FOR WAR LOSSES.

Mr. HUNTER. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas, on the 18th day of December, 1876, the following preamble and resolution passed this House by a vote of 152 yeas to 63 nays, to wit:

"Whereas fears have been and still are entertained by the people of the United States that Congress may at some time in the future pass laws by which the Government of the United States may be compelled to pay a large amount for damages that were incurred during the late war by persons residing within the States that were then in rebellion against the United States: Therefore, in order to allay such fears and prevent the payment of such claims,

"Be it resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to report to this House within twenty days, and permission is hereby given for that purpose, an amendment of the Constitution of the United States in substance as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"No claim shall ever hereafter be allowed or paid by the United States, in the shape of damages or otherwise, for any kind of property, real or personal, used, consumed, injured, or destroyed by United States troops, or by or through any officers, civil or military, acting under or by authority of the United States, or from any other cause whatever, during the suppression of the late rebellion in any of the States that were in rebellion against the Government of the United States; or, for any property used, consumed, injured, or destroyed during such rebellion outside of said States that were in rebellion, and which belonged to persons residing within such States that were in rebellion, unless the persons owning the property so used, consumed, injured, or destroyed were during all the time of such rebellion loyal to the Government of the United States and gave neither aid nor encouragement to the enemy."

And whereas said twenty days mentioned in said resolution expired on the 7th day of the present month, and said Committee on the Judiciary has failed to report an amendment to the Constitution, as instructed by this House in said resolution so to do within said twenty days: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That said Committee on the Judiciary be required to report within two days from this date an amendment to the Constitution as above provided for in said resolution, and permission to report the same is hereby given.

Mr. REAGAN. I object. I would inquire whether the main purpose of this is not covered by the latter clause, and whether it is not meant by that to decide existing lawsuits and confiscate property not otherwise confiscated under the law?

Mr. HUNTER. I object to debate, and move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted.

Mr. PAGE demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 126, nays 72, not voting 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adams, George A. Bagley, John H. Bagley, jr., John H. Baker, Ballou, Banks, Bell, Bradley, William R. Brown, Horatio C. So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. PAGE stated that Mr. WOODBURN was absent by leave of the House, and if present would have voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

RIGHTS OF STATES AND TERRITORIES.

Mr. MILLS. I move that the rules be suspended and that the resolution which I send to the desk be adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

"Resolved, That the maintenance inviolate of the rights of the States, and especially the right of each State to order and control its own domestic institutions according to its own judgment exclusively, is essential to the balance of power on which the operation and endurance of our political fabric depend, and we denounce the lawless invasion by armed force of the soil of any State or Territory, no matter under what pretext, as among the gravest of crimes."

Mr. HOAR. That is an absolute denial of all the recent amendments to the Constitution.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DURHAM. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to make an inquiry. Does the resolution contain the words "subject to the Federal Constitution?"

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. KASSON. I merely desire to make an inquiry in regard to the language of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. KASSON. Did the Clerk read the words "subject to the Federal Constitution?"

The SPEAKER. Those words are not in the resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. To enable us to commemorate the 8th of January, a historical day, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. MILLS. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on that motion. Let us vote on this resolution.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we should adjourn at an early hour on this historical day.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 73, noes 102.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for tellers.

On the question of ordering tellers there were—ayes 33; more than one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. MILLS were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 67, noes 95.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution offered by the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask that the resolution may be again read.

The resolution was again read.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 105, nays 83, not voting 101; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ainsworth, Ashe, Atkins, Bagby, John H. Bagley, jr., Bland, Blount, Boone, Bradford, Bright, John Young Brown, Buckner, Cabell, John H. Caldwell, William P. So (two-thirds not having voted in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the roll-call,

Mr. GAUSE stated that his colleague from Arkansas [Mr. GUNTER] was absent on account of the illness of a friend, having been just called to his bedside. If present he would have voted "ay."

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

WAITING-ORDERS PAY.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported back, with an amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4125) to appropriate waiting-orders pay to those officers of the United States Navy whose pay was affected by the general order of the Secretary of the Navy No. 216 and to repeal secting 1442 of the Revised Statutes; and moved that the bill and amendment and the report of the committee thereon be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I am also instructed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to move that the rules be so suspended that the bill (H. R. No. 4125) may be in order as an amendment to the naval appropriation bill when that bill shall be under consideration in Committee of the Whole. I make that motion.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

APPOINTMENT OF A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER announced that he had appointed the following as the committee called for under the resolution of the House to-day with reference to the police commissioners of the District of Columbia:

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GIBSON, by unanimous consent, leave was granted for the withdrawal from the files of the House, under the rules of the House, of the papers accompanying the bill for the relief of William W. Handlin.

The question was then taken on Mr. HOLMAN's motion; and there were—ayes 108, noes 41.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at three o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, January 9, 1877.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KERNAN. I desire to make a correction in the proceedings of the Committee on Privileges and Elections of Saturday as reported in the New York Times of Sunday. In speaking of the witness Runyon the report states:

He also declined to tell who came to his office and ordered him to draw the check.

I am represented as then having made this statement:

Senator KERNAN stated that he, as counsel for the witness, and as a member of the committee before which witness was testifying, would advise the witness to answer the question.

That statement is erroneous. I certainly was not counsel for the witness in any sense, and never saw him before he came before the committee and never had a word of conversation with him there except as a witness upon the stand. What did occur before the committee and what I did say is shown by the report of the stenographer of the committee, as follows:

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, I insist on an answer.

The CHAIRMAN. I will state, as my view of the law, that it is not a privileged communication, but a matter that the witness is required to answer.

Mr. KERNAN. That is my judgment. I would advise him to answer, both as a lawyer and a member of the committee. I think he should answer as he would if he were before a court in a pending proceeding.

That was the statement which I made. In no sense of the word could I state, nor did I in any sense state, that I was counsel for or of the witness. I desire to correct this inadvertent misstatement, as I assume it to be, which I notice also is in the New York Tribune.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the annual report of the Attorney-General, showing the operations of the Department of Justice for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1876; which was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

CHARLES C. CAMPBELL.

Mr. WRIGHT. At the last session of Congress the Committee on Claims reported favorably the bill (H. R. No. 429) for the relief of Charles C. Campbell, of Washington County, Virginia. That bill is now on the Calendar. I have some additional papers in connection with the bill which I now present and ask that these papers may be referred to the Committee on Claims and that the bill now upon the Calendar may be recommitted to the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The papers will be referred to the Committee on Claims and the bill will be recommitted to the committee, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to present to the Senate a petition from citizens of Massachusetts, very numerously signed by those who have received 4 per cent. interest on the amounts settled by the Geneva award by the judgment of the court of commissioners of Alabama claims under the law passed by Congress. They pray that they may be allowed an additional 2 per cent. and suggest very cogent reasons therefor. I ask that their petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. If the chairman of that committee was here, I should hope he would pardon me for invoking their early attention to the bill from the House contemplating a further distribution of that money. Recognizing as I do the important matters pending before that committee, still the committee can hardly understand the suffering that is experienced every day by those who have sustained losses from the British cruisers, if I may call them so, and the propriety as well as necessity of early action upon that bill. I invoke the consideration of the committee to it, and entreat them to bring it before the Senate at as early a period as possible.

Mr. WRIGHT. In the absence of the chairman of the committee I deem it proper to say to the Senator from Massachusetts, if I can have his attention, that I know the matter to which he refers has received the attention of the committee. We have had no session of the committee scarcely since the matter was brought up, but we are making all the progress possible toward an early disposition of the question to which the Senator refers.

Mr. DAWES. I think the assurance of the Senator from Iowa will very much gratify the petitioners. I trust that his expectations will be early realized and that the bill will be brought before the Senate for consideration at an early day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ALLISON. I present a petition of a large number of settlers, upon what are known as the Des Moines River lands in Iowa, asking Congress to give them relief. This petition sets forth at great length their grievances, showing that by a series of acts of Congress, of the State Legislature of Iowa, and the decision of the Supreme Court, &c., they have been deprived of their homesteads. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they represent that "by acts of Congress granting lands to the State of Oregon to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Dallas City, on the Columbia River, to Fort Boisé, on the Snake River, approved February 25, 1876, and to the Willamette Valley and Cascade Mountain Wagon Road Company, to aid in the construction of a military wagon road from Albany, Oregon, by way of Canyon City, to the eastern boundary of the State, approved October 24, 1866; also to the Oregon Central Military Road Company, to aid in the construction of a wagon road from Eugene City to the eastern boundary of Oregon, in sections, designated by odd numbers, to the extent of three sections in width on each side of the road; that alternate sections, not exceeding ten miles in distance from said road, were by said acts granted to said State of Oregon, and to said companies, from which to select lands in lieu of lands occupied adversely or reserved to the United States." These memorialists further represent that "all the alternate sections within the said region of ten miles distant from said roads, on either side, throughout the entire distance of the same, have been withdrawn, by order of the General Land Office, from settlement and sale, and still continue to be withheld from lawful disposal, to the great injury of the State of Oregon;" and they represent that "said lands are now in the ownership of private companies of capitalists who are not using diligence to secure the selections of the lieu lands to which they are entitled under the provisions of said acts of Congress;" and they pray that "the owners of said lieu lands to which they are entitled and the balance of said alternate sections within said region of ten miles wide from said road be restored to the public land and opened for pre-emption, settlement, and sale by the United States in order to promote the occupancy of the same and the development and prosperity of the State." I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also present a joint resolution adopted by the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, at their recent session, in which they represent in brief that "the American nation is under lasting obligation to those brave defenders of our country who periled their lives in the war with Mexico;" and after making certain other statements on that subject they respectfully request "the passage of a law which shall suitably pension all surviving soldiers of the Mexican war, not heretofore pensioners under previous acts." I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they represent that "there is no harbor or place of refuge for ocean vessels on the Oregon coast, south of Astoria, on the Columbia River." They say, furthermore, that "during the winter months no part of the ocean is more perilous or dangerous to our commerce than this part of the Pacific coast; that vessels caught in the terrible gales and storms which prevail here for a portion of the year are driven about, cast ashore, capsized, or torn to pieces, thereby endangering the lives of many persons and causing great destruction to property." They represent that "these vessels, this property, and these valuable lives could have been saved had there been a port of refuge in which the vessels could have ridden out the storm in safety; that the great loss of life and property caused by the destructive gales, for years past, tells us plainly that we should have protection for our commerce from the General Government." They represent that "our trade and commerce are rapidly increasing, and that this highway upon the ocean is now one of the great highways of the world." They state that "Cape Foulweather, in Oregon, is a suitable point at which to build a breakwater for the protection of ocean vessels; that the favorable location, having a fine, first-class light-house to the north and a third-class light-house to the south, defining its position clearly in the stormiest weather, the superior natural advantages, the abundance of rock and all kinds of material near at hand, required for the work, make Cape Foulweather one of the most economical and available points on the North Pacific coast, embraced within the latitude mentioned, for a place of refuge for shipping during the storms that prevail for so many months on this coast." They make a great many further statements on the subject, and ask an appropriation for a breakwater at that point. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they represent that "by the several acts of Congress in aid of the construction of the Northern Pacific Railway, the Oregon and California Railway, and the Oregon Central Railway, the minimum price of the alternate sections of the public lands by the General Government within the limits of the railroad grants has been increased from $1.25 per acre to $2.50 per acre, while, at the same time, the amount which can be taken by any one has been reduced from one hundred and sixty acres to eighty acres, and by this increase of price and reduction of quantity a great injustice is done to the citizens who desire to become pre-emptors and homestead settlers upon said public lands; that a large proportion of the unsettled lands within said railroad belt is of the character known as grazing lands, which cannot be profitably purchased at $2.50 per acre, nor profitably occupied in quantities limited to eighty acres, and that therefore the sales of said public lands are retarded and the country remains unsettled, to the injury of both the United States and the State of Oregon." They state that "for these reasons the State is embarrassed by the several acts of Congress," &c., and they pray "that the several acts referred to may be amended so as to authorize the sale of said lands at the usual minimum rate, and in quantities of a quarter section to any settler, and that the State may be allowed to select the lands granted her by the several acts of Congress at the minimum price of $1.25 per acre." I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Railroads.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they represent that the Coquille River, in Coos County, Oregon, is greatly in need of improvements, which can only be made by the General Government, and they ask an appropriation for that purpose. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I also present a joint memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon, in which they pray that Congress may so amend the boundary-line act of February 14, 1859, admitting the State of Oregon into the Union, as to conform to the boundary-lines as set forth in the constitution of the State of Oregon. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Territories.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles C. Harris, late of Company A, First Regiment Rhode Island Volunteers, praying compensation for services rendered the United States Government during the late war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed; and he moved that the claim be rejected; which motion was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 565) for the relief of the heirs of Matthew Allison, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT. At the last session of Congress this committee had before it the petition and papers of John Y. Worthington, praying for compensation for wood furnished the United States troops during the late war, and made an adverse report and recommended that the claim be rejected, and that report was sent to the table. Those papers, together with additional testimony, have been sent to the committee at the present session; we have again examined the case and now report it back, and again recommend that the committee be discharged and that the claim be rejected.

Mr. DAVIS. Where is the applicant from?

Mr. WRIGHT. Virginia. I think the Senator from Virginia had the matter in charge.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask that that report lie on the table for the present. I was under the impression, from what I learned, that the additional papers filed in the case completely established it. I should like to look into the matter further and see what the defect was and whether it cannot be remedied. If it can be, I should like to have the claimant get his money.

Mr. WRIGHT. I suggest to my friend that on examination of the case, when he comes to look at the report, he will find that the testimony is quite wanting on one very material point; that is to say, the new testimony did not supply the want on that point, however it may be as to other points. We do not discuss it except as to one point alone.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will lie on the table.

BLANKETS FOR THE DISTRICT REFORM SCHOOL.

Mr. BURNSIDE. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its immediate consideration. It is a short resolution.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver for use of the Reform School of the District of Columbia two hundred Army blankets from any in his custody belonging to the United States.

Mr. DAVIS. I should be glad to hear an explanation of the necessity of this measure.

Mr. BURNSIDE. The necessity for the issue of these blankets is caused by the present cold spell of weather and the lack of bed-clothing, which the officers of the institution have been unable to provide for the inmates. The District of Columbia is taxed to the extent of $2 per head per week for all the inmates of the Reform School; that is the extent of the tax levied upon the District of Columbia, and that is paid out of the treasury of the District. The building and the land upon which the building stands belong to the Government and should be kept in repair by the Government; but sometimes the repairs have been done by the trustees. Now, however, they find themselves without sufficient funds to increase the amount of bed-clothing on hand. They simply ask that Congress shall authorize the Secretary of War to issue two hundred blankets to the trustees for the use of the inmates of the Reform School. The joint resolution passed the House and was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate. That committee has authorized me to make a favorable report upon it. In interviews with the president of the trustees of the Reform School he convinced me and a majority of the members of the committee that there was a necessity for this issue of blankets.

Mr. DAVIS. I should like to ask the Senator by whom the managers of the institution are appointed.

Mr. BURNSIDE. They are appointed by the President of the United States, with the exception of two trustees, one of whom is appointed by the Senate and the other by the House. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] is the trustee on the part of the Senate, and Mr. STEVENSON, of Illinois, is the trustee on the part of the House. The other trustees are citizens of the District, most of whom are known to me to be very highly respectable men, and they are appointed by the President of the United States. Congress annually appropriates $10,000 for the salaries of the officers; and then by the $2 per capita per week for each inmate paid by the District out of the District treasury, and the earnings of the boys, this institution has been able to be carried along and to make all its own repairs without calling on the Government, at any rate for quite a period, for any appropriation for repairs.

Mr. DAVIS. Do I understand the Senator to say that the inmates are now in need of the blankets, and that the officers of the school have made application for them?

Mr. BURNSIDE. Yes, sir; the inmates are now in need of the blankets, and the necessity for them arises from the extraordinarily cold weather.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRINTING OF LOUISIANA TESTIMONY.

Mr. ANTHONY. The Senate passed a resolution directing that the report of the committee consisting of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] and others, on Louisiana affairs, should be printed and that eighteen hundred and fifty extra copies of the same should be printed, and that the publication should be held back until the report of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOGY] and others on the same subject should be presented. But the report presented by the Senator from Missouri doubles the volume of the document; and as the number we can order to be printed is restricted by the sum of $500, it will be impossible to execute the order of the Senate. I am therefore instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer a resolution that of the papers presented by the Senator from Missouri the same number be printed also, so that they will both be printed, but will not both be printed together. If both be printed together, only half the number desired can be printed. This document of a thousand pages, I may say, was set up in the Government Printing Office in three days without at all interfering with the current business of the office, which is very large.

I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That 1,850 copies of the report of Hon L. V. BOGY and others, on the condition of affairs in Louisiana, be printed for the use of the Senate.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1124) to authorize and enable the eastern band of the Cherokee Indians to institute and prosecute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Cherokee Nation; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1125) for the relief of the Pottawatomie Indians; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WATER LINE IN FLORIDA.

Mr. JONES, of Florida, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to communicate to the Senate all information in his possession concerning a water line for transportation from the mouth of Saint Mary's River, between the States of Georgia and Florida through the Okefinokee swamp and through the State of Florida to some suitable point on the Gulf of Mexico, embracing the probable nature and character of such water line, the extent of country and population to be benefited by its construction, and an estimate of the cost of the necessary surveys or examinations thereof.

DISTRICT POLICE COMMISSIONERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill (H. R. No. 4350) to abolish the board of commissioners of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, and to transfer its duties to the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTORAL VOTE OF OREGON—RECUSANT WITNESS.

Mr. MORTON. There is a resolution on the table submitted yesterday by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which ought to be passed to-day. I therefore move to proceed to the consideration of it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, reported yesterday from the Committee on Privileges and Elections:

Resolved, That the President of the Senate issue his warrant, directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, commanding him forthwith to arrest and to bring to the bar of the Senate the body of Enos Runyon, to show cause why he should not be punished for contempt, and in the mean time to keep the said Runyon in his custody to await the further order of the Senate.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, I shall certainly vote for any resolution calculated to enforce an answer to a legitimate inquiry; but as I understand the testimony given before the Committee on Privileges and Elections as read here yesterday, it was manifest that the sum of money sent or proposed to be sent from New York to Oregon had been returned unused and that the transaction there ceased. Now, unless some Senator will state, as we should do in a court of justice, on his reputation as a Senator, that there was good reason to believe that that money was corruptly used, I hardly think we are entitled to inquire into the private business of New York bankers. There is not the slightest allegation anywhere, as far as I have seen, that the money lodged with Martin & Runyon in New York, delivered by them to Dimon, sent by Dimon to Ladd & Bush in Oregon, was ever obtained even for an improper purpose; and certainly there is none that it was used for any improper purpose.

The money was deposited in New York with an agent of Ladd & Bush, of Oregon; Ladd & Bush were notified that that money had been deposited to their credit with Mr. Dimon, and three days afterward the money was restored to Martin & Runyon. Now a witness is asked to tell who deposited that money with him. Is that an inquiry pertinent to this issue which has been submitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections in regard to the casting of the vote of the electors in Oregon? How is it pertinent? Is there any charge that that $8,000 was improperly used? If there is it ought to be made, and I shall vote to ferret it out and to hold up before the country any man who has been guilty of impropriety in attempting to tamper with the electoral votes of the States. But why should we give authority to this committee in a matter not yet alleged to be pertinent to this issue to investigate the private affairs of this banker in New York? Why should the privacy of business be invaded without some charge of corruption on the part of those into whose doors we enter with this penetrating process? Why cover up with a cloud of suspicion a transaction that may be perfectly legitimate and which the parties may have a perfect right to keep from the public gaze? If the inquiry is a pertinent one, if there is an allegation of the fraudulent use of money in Oregon in connection with the inquiry sent to this committee, I shall vote to give any committee power to penetrate the darkest recesses and fathom any such conspiracy against the purity of election. But, Mr. President, until some Senator arises in his place and announces to the Senate that he is on the track of a conspiracy to degrade the election of President of the United States, I must withhold my vote from a resolution of this character.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I did not intend to say anything on this resolution, and I must confess that I am surprised that the honorable Senator from Maryland should take the position he does in reference to this matter and oppose the adoption of this resolution. He insists that there is nothing in the testimony of Mr. Runyon, as presented to the Senate by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which would justify the inference that any money had been improperly used in Oregon, or rather that this money had been improperly used. There are a great many ways of doing a thing besides the way of doing it directly. It has already appeared, and has been published in all the newspapers of the country, and therefore I feel at liberty to speak of it, that a large amount of money was paid to Mr. Cronin in Oregon at or about the time that he was appointed messenger to carry the alleged electoral vote to the President of the Senate. There is no denial of that fact. He admits it himself, testifies to it under oath, that he received in the palm of his hand, in gold coin or its equivalent, checks for gold coin, the sum of $3,000. It does appear from the testimony of Mr. Runyon that the sum of $8,000 in money was at his instance telegraphed by Charles Dimon, of New York, to Ladd & Bush, bankers, at Salem, Oregon, on the day that the votes for President and Vice-President were cast in Salem, Oregon. Mr. Runyon tells the Committee of the Senate that that was not his own business transaction. Although his firm drew the check in favor of Charles Dimon, of Liberty street, for the sum of $8,000, payable to his order, with the understanding, as he testifies, that that money was to be transferred that day by telegraph to Ladd & Bush, in Salem, Oregon, he at the same time testifies that it was not their own transaction, that they had no business transactions with Ladd & Bush. And yet will it be said by the honorable Senator from Maryland that there is no suspicion in that circumstance? Will it be said that this transaction as stated by Mr. Runyon is an ordinary business transaction, one that can look the world in the face, in the open light of day, without any fear or trembling, especially when it appears from that same testimony that the money was to be refunded in a few days, because the Senator will find that he states in substance that he only wanted this money for a few days? Evidently the man who asked to have the $8,000 sent to Ladd & Bush was familiar with the doctrine referred to by Bret Harte when speaking of a certain class he talks about "deeds that were dark and tricks that were vain," or something of that kind; I am not able to quote precisely.

It is evident, Mr. President, from this whole transaction that there was a species of juggling in regard to the transfer of this money, and if this witness is compelled to answer who his customer was, there can be no kind of doubt but that the whole transaction will be presented clearly to the mind of the Senator from Maryland and will satisfy him, as it must satisfy every honest and candid man, that this $8,000, whatever telegram may have come back afterward to replace the money, was telegraphed to Oregon on the 6th of December last for the purpose of being used in some way in connection with the controversy then pending before the governor of that State; and as to who received the money, how it was used, that is another branch of the case to be investigated; but certainly my friend from Maryland, under the circumstances presented by the testimony, will not object that this witness shall be compelled to answer as to the person that authorized the transfer of that money.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, when a tribunal is invested by law with jurisdiction to hear and determine a matter, it is by operation of law invested with all the power necessary to make that jurisdiction effective. Any process necessary to develop the truth is within the power of the tribunal. The general rule of law on the subject is that all witnesses, all testimony that may tend to prove or may be conducive to prove the case in point can be brought by proper process before the tribunal investigating and hearing or determining. Out of this general rule are excepted what are called "privileged communications." Those communications are very few, such as between client and counsel, and husband and wife, and this is based upon a great principle, that the injury to society resulting from laying before the world these confidential communications would be greater than the good resulting from their development. Now, the communications between a banker and his customer, whether they be confidential or otherwise, are not privileged communications; and on another branch of the case which has been much discussed here lately, the communications between a telegraph company and its customers are not privileged communications. If in the investigation of truth it is necessary to bring out what has occurred between a banker and his customer, or between a telegraph operator and his customer, if this tribunal has the jurisdiction to investigate, to hear and determine, it has the power, beyond all question, in law to issue any process necessary to make that jurisdiction effective, and if the party refuses to obey it has the power of arresting and punishing for contempt, the same as a court of justice.

Now, Mr. President, whether the testimony of this witness Runyon proves or conduces to prove the issue is a question for this tribunal to determine; and I, for one, believe that fraud should be ferreted out to the very bottom that if there be any fraud in Oregon or elsewhere in this presidential canvass, the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth should be brought before us for us to determine the amount of fraud, or whether fraud has been committed or not. For these reasons I want this thing probed to the bottom. If this man Runyon has concealed anything that is necessary to come before the Senate in order that we may thoroughly understand the issue which is made in regard to the Oregon matter, let it come, and after the witness shall have been brought before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and his testimony is fully brought out, then the Senate can better determine whether he is concealing anything of importance or not.

For these reasons and for the reason that in every one of these cases, telegraphic and every other kind, I want the whole truth to come out, I shall vote for the resolution.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is quite right, and I entirely agree with him in his disposition and desire to investigate and ferret out fraud. I hope that there is no Senator on this floor who is not anxious to run in the same direction; but I propose, as far as my individual action is concerned, to ferret out fraud decently and in order, and having been educated at the bar I think it is my duty to interpose here when I see a latitude of inquiry which would in my judgment be justified in no court of a respectable character in this country.

One of the most important rules which govern courts in the investigation by evidence of questions brought before them is that the evidence sought to be put in shall be relevant to the issue on trial. That is a cardinal principle, and when you abandon that you get at sea, and you take a roving commission of inquiry and can investigate any subject and to any extent that the mind of the inquirer may carry him.

I do not put my objection to this inquiry upon the ground of any privileged communication. That is entirely a different question and one which in no way affects the issue here. I put my objection upon the ground that this inquiry is not pertinent to the issue involved, that this inquiry is an inquiry probing the private transactions of a banker in New York who in no way has been connected in the testimony with Cronin, the messenger who brought the electoral vote from Oregon; and according to my recollection of his testimony as I read it in the morning papers, Cronin testified that he was paid his expenses, $3,000, he a lawyer in some practice in Oregon, and he was paid by money raised by subscription by gentlemen in Oregon.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator is mistaken entirely about that.

Mr. MITCHELL. He did not say that.

Mr. WHYTE. I give his statement from what I gather from the papers.

Mr. MORTON. Cronin was paid $2,000 out of the $3,000 by a draft on Charles Dimon, in the city of New York. That Charles Dimon was the recipient of this eight-thousand-dollar check. I do not care about going into this, but if the Senator wants me to show that this is pertinent to the issue, I think I shall do it from the testimony already here; but I do not care about that; I do not want to go into it now.

Mr. WHYTE. If the Senator from Indiana will state what I have never seen stated before in regard to Cronin's testimony, that a part of this money was obtained from Dimon, I withdraw all objection.

Mr. MORTON. He swore expressly to a draft on Dimon; and Mr. Dimon yesterday himself swore that he paid Cronin a draft for the amount of $2,000.

Mr. WHYTE. Then I withdraw all objection. This is the first time I ever heard it.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I do not oppose the passage of this resolution. I want that to be understood. Cronin's statement was that he ought to be paid $3,000 for coming here, which was the substance of his testimony. I ask the chairman's attention to see that I state the facts aright. Cronin stated that after he was appointed there was a talk about his expenses; that it was talked that they would raise the money there by subscription. He heard mentioned one or two who it was thought would subscribe. He was to leave on a Saturday. He states that on Friday the chairman of the State committee stated to him that they had raised $2,800, and he said, "I will pay my own expenses unless you pay the $3,000." Bellinger called him into the banker's and stated they had $2,800, and then he signed with Bellinger a note for $200, which Bellinger said they would pay, which was discounted, and made up the $3,000. That is the substance of what he did say. That was all he knew about it. He said he took drafts for $2,100 or $2,200 on New York from the bankers Ladd & Tilton. Mr. Dimon was examined yesterday. That is where the Senator from Indiana gets what he states about the draft for $2,000, and I will state the substance of that to the Senate.

Mr. Dimon yesterday testifies as this witness Runyon does, as you will find on page 7 of the report, that he telegraphed to Ladd & Bush, December 6, about the deposit of the $8,000. He got back a telegram from them, dated December 9, telling him to return the money deposited to the parties who deposited it, and that he did return, all but $2.75 paid for the telegram, to Martin & Runyon on the 11th of December. So that the $8,000, on the testimony of both Runyon and Dimon, so far as that is concerned, seems never to have been used in Oregon or anywhere else. It was returned to Martin & Runyon.

He did further testify, as the chairman states, that there is a house of A. E. and C. E. Tilton in New York and he, Dimon, attends to their money matters in some way; he is the acting man, and the correspondent of two banking houses in Oregon, Ladd & Bush of Salem and Ladd & Tilton of Portland. They draw on him from time to time and the drafts are paid, they keeping the account good by remitting funds or furnishing funds. Mr. Dimon was asked if he had not paid since the 6th of December a draft to the order of Mr. Cronin drawn by one of these houses in Oregon. He said he had. They asked him first if he knew Mr. Cronin or had ever seen him. He said he had not, but he had paid a draft drawn by one of these houses payable to his order for $2,000 and paid it to a firm in New York who presented it to him. I believe that was the statement of Mr. Dimon about that draft in substance. You have the evidence of both Mr. Cronin and the other gentleman that this $8,000 was not used. If you look on page 7 of the report you will see how Mr. Runyon gives it, that Dimon did telegraph out and got a telegraph back to return the $8,000, and he then wrote to Martin & Runyon and paid back the money, the $8,000. It is quite obvious that this money, on this evidence, was not used in any way, because it was paid back to the firm of Martin & Runyon by Dimon on the 11th of December.

When this question came up in committee (as will be seen on page 2) the other members of the committee expressed themselves, and I did so also, that Runyon should answer. It will be borne in mind that all this evidence as to the return of the $8,000 has come out since. As I said in committee, if the chairman who is conducting this investigation believes it material to the question under investigation that this witness should state who his customer was, I thought he ought to do it. I say so still.

I only rose to state the facts as I understand them, what the evidence shows this transaction about this two-thousand-dollar draft was. I have intended to state it accurately, and I trust I have done so.

Mr. MORTON. I did not intend to say a word about this matter at this time; but in reply to my colleague on the committee, I must state that while Cronin said there was a talk about getting up a subscription to pay him what according to one expression would be his price for bringing on that vote, yet there was no evidence that any subscription was taken or that a dollar was contributed in Oregon for the purpose, so far as I remember, and I do not believe there was. But the evidence of Cronin showed that the chairman of the democratic committee of Oregon took him to the bank and there he was paid the $3,000. He got one draft for $2,000 on this Charles Dimon in the city of New York; he got another draft I think on San Francisco; and then there was $200 lacking. It is not necessary now to argue inferences, but the inference was that $2,800 exhausted the fund and then they made up the $200 by giving a joint note with a promise on the part of the chairman of the committee that he would pay the note for $200. That draft of $2,000 was paid by Charles Dimon in New York. Charles Dimon was the recipient of the check given by Martin & Runyon for $8,000. It is true that he stated that he was telegraphed from Oregon to return that money on the 11th of December; but that is only evidence (although we have not perhaps got to that point yet) that some other arrangement was made for the $8,000 because the $2,000 was undoubtedly paid out of it, I think so far as we have gone.

Now, Mr. President, the purpose in getting at the name of the person who procured this check of Martin & Runyon will be very apparent by stating another fact. Mr. Runyon refused to give his name. A person came to him and procured him to draw a check payable to Charles Dimon for $8,000. He first made the check payable to Ladd & Bush, Salem, Oregon, at the Bank of North America. Dimon came to see him and told him the check in that form would not do. Mr. Dimon told him he must make the check payable to him in the city of New York, and the check was made payable in that form. We asked Mr. Runyon to give the name of the person who procured this check to be drawn. He declined to do it, putting it upon the ground that he was a customer, and that bankers did not divulge the names of customers. He was advised by the committee, including the Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] that it was his duty to answer, but he persisted in refusing to do it. The testimony showed that Mr. Runyon took his partner, Mr. Martin, to a lawyer by the name of Harrison on Thursday afternoon and consulted Mr. Harrison about this matter of appearing before the committee. It turned out that Mr. Harrison either came over with Mr. Martin here or was coming anyhow. I think he said he was coming anyhow; but at any rate he came over with Mr. Martin and was with him during the day. Mr. Harrison was called, and he testified that he was a stranger to Martin and Runyon, but they came there on Thursday to consult him, and he testified that a person had called upon him in an earlier part of the day and had informed him, if I remember the testimony correctly, that Martin and Runyon would consult him about this business.

Mr. MITCHELL. That a person would call.

Mr. MORTON. Perhaps he did not mention the name of Martin & Runyon, but a person had called to advise him that other persons would call to consult him about this business before this committee. Mr. Harrison was asked who this person was, and he at first declined to give the name, but after some parley, saying he did not want to get into an issue with the committee, he would give the name, and he gave the name of William T. Pelton, the secretary of the democratic national committee. Mr. Runyon was subsequently recalled and he was asked if Mr. Pelton was the person who procured him to advance the check, and he said he was not. So it seems that there was another person still in the transaction.

Now, Mr. President, without undertaking to state here other reasons that the committee have for believing this testimony important, it seems to me that what is already elicited shows very clearly its importance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. MORTON. I ask to have this question taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to continuing the consideration of this resolution? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WHYTE. There is evidently a discrepancy between the members of the committee as to the actual testimony that has been given. When I was on my feet before I understood that Cronin had said that he had drawn a draft upon this man Dimon and that Dimon had paid it.

Mr. MORTON. No, he did not draw it himself.

Mr. WHYTE. That was the way I understood it when it was stated while I was on my feet before, and that induced me to waver in my objection to this proposition; because that seemed to me a direct draft from Cronin upon Dimon. It now turns out that it was a draft drawn by Ladd & Bush, the bankers in Oregon, upon their correspondent, Dimon, in the city of New York.

Mr. MORTON. My friend does not state the point at all. Mr. Bellinger, chairman of the democratic committee in Oregon, went with Cronin to the bank and procured the bank to give its draft to Cronin for $2,000 payable by Dimon to Cronin, Cronin indorsed that and forwarded it, and it was paid by Dimon.

Mr. WHYTE. That is it exactly. Dimon is the agent of Ladd & Bush in the city of New York. Ladd & Bush are the bankers in Salem, Oregon. For Mr. Cronin's convenience they give him a draft upon Dimon, their agent in the city of New York, for $2,800. What has that got to do with the $8,000 that was returned upon the 11th day of December? What has that to do with this other transaction with which Martin & Runyon had no connection whatever? The transaction of Cronin with Ladd & Bush and Ladd & Bush's transaction with Dimon, what had they to do with Martin & Runyon and the $8,000 transaction in New York?

Mr. MORTON. If my friend will let us have the testimony we shall probably show him. But he requires us to show in advance what the testimony would be. It is the very thing we are trying to get at. There is a connection there, and a very delicate one. That is obvious. We are trying to show what it is; but my friend wants to withhold the testimony and require us to state in advance what it is.

Mr. WHYTE. Mr. President, that is the rule in courts of justice, that when you want to make an inquiry not palpably pertinent to the issue, the honor of the counsel is asked by the court, whether, upon his personal honor, he will follow it up and connect the parties with the is sueon trial. That is the rule of courts of justice. No man's private affairs are dragged into the court unless counsel conducting the cause will state to the court that that which is not clear will be made clear by connecting links of testimony they have in their possession.

I merely wished to state these facts before the Senate and before the country, and I have done them with any objection I have offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

COUNTING OF ELECTORAL VOTE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will call up the unfinished business, which is the resolution submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] yesterday to instruct the special committee on counting the electoral vote for President and Vice-President to inquire and report upon certain propositions in connection therewith, and on which the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, the constant reference to the case of Louisiana whenever debate in any form arises on the presidential election shows the controlling importance of the electoral vote of that State. The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALLACE] in discussing the pending resolution says:

> The remaining propositions will be discussed incidentally in what I propose to say in regard to the finality of the action of the returning board of Louisiana and the power to go behind its action either for violation of constitutional law or for fraud and falsehood in its returns.

He then proceeds to state his view of the action of that returning board to sustain these dogmas:

> III. The power to ascertain who has been elected President and Vice-President of the United States by counting the electoral vote is a quasi-judicial one, and carries with it the right to inquire and decide what are votes.
> IV. This power is in the two Houses acting concurrently as independent bodies.
> V. Each House may examine both facts and law to enable it to determine these questions:
>
> * * * * * * *
> VIII. No electoral vote can be counted without the concurrence of both Houses.

He contends not only that the two Houses of Congress without a previous law on the subject in a quasi-judicial way may revise, change, reject, or manipulate the returns of the electoral vote of a State, but that either House may do so; that either House may determine the law and the facts, and that without the concurrence of both Houses no electoral vote shall be counted. And the case of Louisiana is cited and commented upon as one that will justify the exercise of this extraordinary power. This strange doctrine of the power of a single House of Congress to defeat or supervise the vote of a State comes from a party that claims to be the custodian of the rights of the States. No provision of the Constitution of the United States is quoted as granting such a power, except that the formal count of the vote of the States must be in the presence of both Houses. There is no pretense of an affirmative power given to either House, but it is inferred from their mere presence. I have read a great deal about express and implied powers derived from the Constitution, or rather from that clause of the Constitution giving to Congress the power to make all laws necessary to carry into execution express powers; but to infer a power for a single House of Congress to revise, reject, or change the vote of a State for President from the clause making its presence necessary in the count carries the doctrine of implied powers far beyond what the most extreme Federalist ever dreamed.

But, sir, waiving this question, I am tired of hearing the action of the returning board of Louisiana arraigned as false or fraudulent, and therefore I propose now to discuss the general question whether the evidence before the board of returning officers of Louisiana was sufficient to convince honest men that at the recent election in that State for presidential electors there was intimidation of the kind and to the extent contemplated by the law of that State to justify the returning board in the forum of conscience and honesty in excluding from their returns the votes of a large number of polling-places where the intimidation materially changed the result of the election. I have already sufficiently discussed the legal aspects of this election. In the letter to the President signed by me with others, and in the debate that followed its presentation to the Senate, the laws of Louisiana were fully set out, and the authority of this board was shown to be full and its finding conclusive until set aside after a contest according to law. The electors certified as elected have met and recorded their votes for Governor Hayes as President of the United States, and Mr. Wheeler as Vice-President, and their votes are duly authenticated by the governor and the secretary of state of Louisiana under the great seal of that State, and have been delivered to your presiding officer. By the law of the case the action of that returning board is entitled to the same faith and credit that you give to the return of any officer of any State, or to the judgment of any court of the United States, and upon it Governor Hayes and Mr. Wheeler are legally entitled to the vote of Louisiana for President and Vice-President.

But, sir, while insisting upon the legality of this vote and its binding operation upon us, I do admit that at the bar of public opinion something more is needed than to show that an act was legally done. It must be rightly done; and especially must this be so where it involves the election of a President of the United States. It must rest upon the broadest principles of honesty and justice. Other titles may be doubted, but this title like the virtue of Cæsar's wife should be free from suspicion. If Governor Hayes is returned elected wrongfully he can gain no honor from even so high an office. If Governor Hayes is not only legally but rightly elected by the vote of Louisiana cast according to the laws of Louisiana, he can no more refuse or avoid the performance of the duties of President of the United States than he could shrink from the protection of his wife, his children, and his house. And, mark it, gentlemen, though you know he has not unduly struggled for this office nor purchased it, yet if it has been rightly conferred upon him in the mode provided by the Constitution he will exercise its powers. He is not to be tricked out of it nor bullied by menaces or threats. If there is any way in which an honest dispute about this matter can be settled it is the duty of Congress to point it out; and I, for one, in the effort to find a legal, just, and peaceful solution will listen to every proposition and yield to any one that I consider fair and right. In the mean time I wish to present you the case of Louisiana before the returning officers of that State, as it appeared to me, a deeply interested spectator who was convinced that Governor Hayes is not only entitled to that vote by legal forms but also in honor and conscience.

The whole case turns upon this clause of the act of 1872:

If, after such examination, the said returning officers shall be convinced that said riot, tumult, acts of violence, intimidation, armed disturbance, bribery, or corrupt influences did materially interfere with the purity and freedom of the election at such poll or voting-place, or did prevent a sufficient number of the qualified electors thereat from registering and voting to materially change the result of the election, then the said returning officers shall not canvass or compile the statement of the votes of such poll or voting-place, but shall exclude it from their returns.

The returning officers did find that intimidation materially interfered with the purity and freedom of the elections at certain polls or voting-places and did exclude them from their returns. The only question we have to deal with in this appeal to public opinion is, was the evidence sufficient to convince fair, honest-minded men of the existence of such intimidation, or, rather, was the evidence of intimidation so weak as to raise the presumption that they acted corruptly or dishonestly? The law presumes that an officer will discharge his duty, and upon this presumption all official acts, whether ministerial or judicial, rest. If I was debating this matter solely on legal presumptions I could rest here; for there is not in the whole case a single scrap of evidence that the members of the returning board acted either corruptly or in willful disregard of the rights of others. The temptation was all the other way. The local returns, including the intimidated districts, showed a majority for the Tilden electors. Every motive that could influence a corrupt or a weak man would lead the board to decide in favor of those returns. Wealth, social influence, their personal safety and convenience, all tempted them in that direction. They were all property-holders, and all but one natives of Louisiana, and he was a native of Virginia, but a planter in Louisiana for forty years. There was nothing to lead them to decide in favor of the republican electors except the plain mandate of the law, that if they were convinced of the truth of alleged facts they must do so. They were republicans, it is true, elected by a republican senate, but when selected were of differing parties; but the returning officers of all the States are open to the same objection. It is generally true that the political opinions of returning officers are in harmony with the prevailing party in the State.

The testimony before them must be examined in the light of all the historical facts in the history of Louisiana, and the well-known facts of intimidation in adjoining States. The only question before them was intimidation, the nature and extent of it. Upon this question they had the fullest information, not only from testimony, but from their personal knowledge of what occurred at this election and previous elections in the State. This was not the first case of intimidation or of unlawful voting, violence, and wholesale election frauds in Louisiana. They were selected by the senate of the State after these frauds and wrongs had become historical, and to act under the law carefully framed, with ample powers to enable them to prevent the success of such crimes. The law itself plainly recognized a state of society where such frauds have been practiced. The democratic party in 1872 had acted upon this law. Subsequently this board had been organized, and in 1874 the present returning officers had acted upon this same law. It is said they then exceeded their powers and abused their trusts, and had been reproached for this by a congressional committee. Now the precise extent to which reproof went was that they had exceeded their powers in throwing out the returns of polling-places in cases where they were not accompanied by the certificate of the supervisor that tumult, violence, or intimidation had prevailed at the election. They admitted proof of the intimidation without the formal allegation of it required by the law. Even as to this error it was conceded that the returning officers had followed the precedent set by the democratic returning board of 1872; and Mr. HOAR in his report says:

We have no doubt that they (the returning officers) believed they were defending the people of Louisiana against a fraud on their constitutional rights.

This reduces the offense of the returning officers to an honest error in the construction of a law, upon which they followed a previous democratic construction. That these returning officers had good ground for their finding on the facts in 1874 is shown by the actual result of the election this year as compared with the result in the parishes terrorized and bull-dozed in 1874.

I have here the vote of that year as claimed by the democratic State committee, contrasted with the vote of 1876, as admitted by the same committee. I find that in ten parishes that were disputed in 1874 and charged to have been controlled by fraud, the republican vote in 1874 was 10,813, and the democratic vote 14,491. In those same parishes this year there was on all hands conceded to be a fair and honest election, and this year with a fair election there were 17,001 republican votes cast and 14,315 democratic votes cast. The democratic majority in 1874 in those ten parishes was 3,678, and this year in those same parishes, by a fair vote, the republican majority was 2,686, making a net republican gain of 6,364. This is the vote in detail:

Comparative vote, by parishes, for the years 1874 and 1876.

Parishes.	Vote of 1874.		Vote of 1876.
	Republican.	Democratic.	Republican.	Democratic.
Avoyelles	1,153	1,239	1,504	1,470
Bossier	1,077	1,020	1,724	880
Caddo	1,570	2,155	2,630	1,716
De Soto	216	1,259	901	1,314
Iberia	1,077	1,247	1,453	1,240
La Fourche	1,846	1,905	1,882	1,875
Nachitoches	1,577	1,554	2,099	1,761
Rapides	1,232	1,584	1,729	1,639
Saint Martin	704	921	1,110	1,032
Terre Bonne	361	1,607	1,969	1,388
Ten parishes	10,813	14,491	17,001	14,315

Democratic majority in 1874	3,678
Republican majority in 1876	2,686
Net republican gain	6,364

This comparison shows that while the returning officers may in 1874–'75 have mistaken the law in acting without a formal protest, they did not mistake the facts; and the truth is that these men knowing the facts in 1874 decided rightly, though perhaps not legally, and that is clearly proven by the subsequent election in 1876, when in every one of these parishes their decision was shown to have been correct by the actual result of a peaceful and fair election.

These same officers, familiar with the law and all the prior historical facts, entered upon the discharge of a public duty. Now, what are those historic facts that throw light upon their action? Louisiana has been the scene of greater crimes against the elective franchise than any other State in the Union. The Plaquemine frauds in 1844 are notorious. Hundreds if not thousands of men were gathered up from the boats and wharves at New Orleans, and on the day of election were taken and landed at different points in the parish of Plaquemines, lying along the river, and there voted and counted in open violation of law. The leaders in this fraud lost neither social position nor political influence, but were advanced to the highest honors of the State. One of them having been subsequently a Senator of the United States.

If the presidential election in 1844 had depended upon the vote of Louisiana, we would have had the precise case now before us. The frauds this year are as plain and palpable, with added violence and crime, as were the Plaquemine frauds in 1844, now universally admitted and spoken of in New Orleans and everywhere as part of the undisputed history of those times.

Again, during the existence of the know-nothing party, from 1854 to 1860, there were many cases of riot, intimidation, murder, and violence of a kindred character to these we are now to deal with. Then they were aimed at persons of foreign birth and Catholics; now they are aimed at negroes. The same spirit of violence prevailed then against a large class of the people of Louisiana on account of their religion as now prevails against a great class and a large majority of the people of Louisiana on account of their color.

And so again in 1866, 1870, 1872, and 1874 the elections were preceded by crimes and riots, tumults and intimidation of the most frightful character, during which it is officially stated that two thousand people were murdered. The general statement of these historical facts is contained in many reports to each House, and notably in the report of Mr. HOAR already referred to, and in speeches by the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.] In 1872 the confusion and uncertainty about the election were so great that a committee of this body recommended that the whole election be set aside, and that a fair election be conducted under the authority of the National Government. I voted for that proposition, and now deeply regret that the policy recommended by that committee was not acquiesced in by both parties, so that we could have tested once for all whether it was possible to hold a fair and honest election in Louisiana. It may be said that for thirty years election frauds have been the rule and not the exception in some places in Louisiana. Nowhere were the Ku-Klux outrages more violent. The events with which we are about to deal are but a part of the same general intimidation known as the Ku-Klux outrages, and more recently the "Mississippi plan." It was this state of facts known to everyone that caused the Legislature of Louisiana to invest in their returning board extraordinary powers; and it was in the light of these historical facts that they were authorized to reject the vote at every polling-precinct where intimidation changed the result of the election.

And here it is material for us to know what are the nature and extent of the intimidation that would justify the throwing out a poll. It is not what would intimidate you; it is not what would intimidate an equal number of Anglo-Saxons, accustomed to vote and to maintain their right to vote. We know very well the effect of force and violence; of lawless marching in armed array by bands of men without color of authority, invading our homes and firesides, insulting our wives and children. Such lawless forays would arouse a fierce resistence even if aimed against a small minority of white people of our race. Every impulse of our nature, every dictate of our manhood, and the express authority of written law, as well as of common law of self-defense, would cause us to seize the gun, the knife, and the faggot, and with hue and cry to pursue and punish such an invasion of our rights, and, if persisted in, would stain the infected region with the blood of both parties. Instead of forays you would have civil war. And, sir, such a scene as is depicted by a single one of these witnesses, in one of the Northern States, could not occur without creating not bloodshed on one side alone but wholesale war and strife.

But this intimidation was aimed at a race lately held as slaves; and the question is what effect such intimidation would have upon them. It was no less a crime to intimidate the humblest and feeblest of these freedmen in the exercise of their legal rights. It was a worse crime, for it was committed without fear of punishment or retaliation. It is a crime not only of violence but of cowardice. And, sir, my honored friend Reverdy Johnson, now no more, never uttered a more truthful word than he did in an expression made by him in one of the trials of the Ku Klux in South Carolina. It was no less a crime because it was committed without fear of punishment. Nor is it necessary to show that this intimidation extended to murder and whipping, but only that it was sufficient to deter legal voters from exercising their right to vote; because the law is clear that if these returning officers felt that the evidence was sufficient to prove intimidation, sufficient to change the result or to deter men from voting, they were bound to exclude the vote of that polling-precinct.

EAST BATON ROUGE.

We come now directly to the testimony taken as to this election. And let me at the outset correct the impression that this is a mass of ex parte affidavits. This is not true, for a majority of it was taken upon interrogatories in strict accordance with the law of Louisiana, and as if to be used in the highest courts of that State. The most of it is of facts of public notoriety, not controverted. Much of it is by officers of the Army whose statements import absolute verity. The affidavits generally were filed in aid of supervisors' statements to give jurisdiction, and, though no doubt true, are not material, or are so corroborated as to be conclusive proof. Upon minor points of detail there may be disputes, but the main facts I will state are historically true.

The first deposition I refer to is that of Lieutenant-Colonel Brooks, of the United States Army, who was in command of the military district of Baton Rouge, including the parishes of East and West Feliciana, East Baton Rouge, and several other parishes. His deposition was formally taken. I read the fourth interrogatory and the reply:

Interrogatory 4. Are you acquainted with the condition of the territory within your command as to peace and order during the political campaign just ended? If so, state fully all about it.

To fourth interrogatory. I am. In the parishes of Louisiana there was a complete system or organization of the white or democratic party, which had the effect of terrorizing the blacks. This was especially the case in the parishes of East Feliciana and East Baton Rouge, the blacks of which came to me in large numbers, telling me of threats made and acts committed which caused them to fear the consequences of any free political action on their part. The threats were as follows: Discharge, bodily injury, and in some cases extending to death, in case they (the blacks) did not joint democratic clubs and vote the democratic ticket. I have been told by many black men of both of these parishes that, during the winter and spring last past, many of these people had been killed and beaten by parties to them unknown, who came in the night, disguised and armed, in squads numbering from ten to fifty, who would surround a cabin, take the man out, and either beat or kill him. This occurred so frequently that they (the blacks) often for weeks at a time slept in the woods away from their houses. I became satisfied, from the frequency and similarity of these reports, that this was the fact.

* * * * * * *

About the 1st of September, a man named Paul Johnson was taken from his home at night by a body of armed and disguised men. He has, I understand, never been seen since. This was told me by his father, who said he saw the disguised party at the house, and traced them to a point on the Comite, where he averred many other men had been taken in a like manner, and never heard of alive afterward. The old man was very much frightened, and feared that he would be visited in a like manner soon. Shortly after the 1st of September a man named Monroe Beacham, or Measham, disappeared under similar circumstances. Johnson lived near Atkinson's Store, near the East Feliciana line. Beacham, or Measham, lived near a place called Redwood. I have seen men with what appeared to me to be marks of a rope around their necks and on their wrists, and which they told me were such—made by men placing a rope around their necks or wrists, and tying the other end to a pommel of a saddle, starting off at too brisk a pace for them to keep up, which caused the rope to mark them very decidedly. There were two or three of these cases. The names of the men I do not now recollect. I sent them, in most cases, to the sheriff of the parish of East Baton Rouge, with their complaints. As to peace and order, and obedience to law, I do not think there was much in the back part of the parish of East Baton Rouge, or anywhere in the parish of East Feliciana. This is based, of course, on what information I could get of the people of those parishes, and the officers of my command away from my own station at Baton Rouge. Many democrats in the town of Baton Rouge, I do not now recall their names, admitted on more than one occasion to me that many violent acts were being done in the "back country" which they did not approve of. The organization of the democratic clubs partook of—as far as I could judge and observe—a military character.

Interrogatory 5. In your opinion, could all those qualified to vote in the parishes of Louisiana within the bounds of your command cast, in the last election, their ballots according to their choice, without fear of violence or injury in so doing? If so, state fully in what parishes or parts of parishes this condition existed.

To fifth interrogatory. In East Baton Rouge Parish, in the town of Baton Rouge, and the two wards next below the town on the river, I do not think there was any reason why a voter could not vote as he chose. In what is called the back country, which includes the balance of the parish, I believe, I think the system of threats, whippings, and killing, which has existed for the past ten months, has so completely terrified the timid blacks that but few of them would vote as they pleased. As to the fact of many black men having been killed by unknown persons, I would say that I know such to be the case from an examination of the reports of the inquests held by the coroner of the parish, which inquests did not cover all the cases of men found dead, for the reason—given by the coroner to me in person—that he had been notified to hold no more inquests in the country, by threats of violence to himself if he did so.

In East Feliciana Parish the record of the vote cast for the republican ticket would seem to indicate a complete terrorism on the part of the republicans of that parish. My own judgment, based upon the information received from a large number of black voters of that parish, is that the threats made and the acts committed by the whites against the blacks, or in other words, by the democrats against the black republicans, were of such a nature and of such form as to deter the republicans from voting as they chose, or at all.

Mr. President, I will only add that this is the testimony of an officer of high rank in the Army, and he was cross-examined; his testimony is given at page 542 at length, much longer than I have read. He refers also to what is told him by the coroner of the parish, and I will now read the testimony of Benjamin Morgan, coroner of the parish of East Baton Rouge, in connection with the testimony of Colonel Brooks, found on page 271:

Benjamin Morgan, being sworn, says: I am the coroner of the parish of East Baton Rouge, and am also a duly qualified elector of said parish, and was, on the 13th of April, 1876, occupying the same position. I was informed on the morning of the 13th of April, 1876, that two men had been killed in the tenth ward, and that I was wanted to hold an inquest. I took a man by the name of Garrett Smith with me, and went out there; when about twelve miles from Baton Rouge, on Joor's roads, I found the body of Jerry Myers hanging by the neck, dead; I collected a jury and cut him down. I hereby attach a report of the finding of the jury. The evidence showed the deed had been committed by a party of armed bull-dozers, who hung him, in my opinion, because he was a republican. I then started toward the house of the deceased, and when within a little more than a hundred yards of the house I found the body of Samuel Myers, the son of the elder Myers, who was hung. He had been shot in the back with six balls, in the back of the head with two balls, and was dead. From the evidence I found he had been killed by the same band of bull-dozers who had hung his father, and, in my opinion, for the reason that he was an outspoken republican. Both the deceased were honest, hard-working farmers; neither of them held any office, and had for the last five years past the first bale of cotton on the market in the parish. I attach also the finding of the jury in the case of the younger Myers. On the 17th of the same month I received a letter through the post-office from the captain of the regulators, which I attach hereto; it speaks for itself. After the letter I was afraid to hold any more inquests for fear my life would would be taken, although many others were killed in the parish in the same way and for the same reason—because they were republicans. There was a continued reign of terror from that time up to the present, and no republican in the entire parish but what feared his life would be taken if he was known to be a republican.

* * * * * * *

I herewith attach many other findings of the coroner's jury of persons who came to a violent death, and on whose bodies I held an inquest prior to the time I was notified by the bull-dozers that I would be killed if I held any more, or made any more reports in my official capacity.

I will now read the notice that was served on the coroner, which put a stop to these inquests.

Mr. BOGY. What date?

Mr. SHERMAN. They do not date their papers; you will find it on the next page, however:

Mr. BEN. MORGAN, Coroner:

You will please bear in mind that your absence is required in the country, and I further inform you that if you are caught therein any more, your fate shall be as those you came to hold your inquests over.

Yours truly, CAPTAIN OF REGULATORS.

Thereupon the coroner stopped holding inquests. September was the time he testifies that he stopped holding inquests. Here is the grim record in this printed document of eleven inquests held prior to the time the inquests were put a stop to by this notice in that year. Here follow in the document the official inquests of Jerry Myers, Samuel Myers, Taylor Hackings, George Washington, Johnson Stewart, Hugh Tuqua, Major Selve, Charley Robertson, Lizzie Richmond, Bristow Harrison, and Henderson Pointer. After that, according to the testimony of Mr. Morgan, there were six or seven homicides in that parish, and he did not hold any inquests because he had had that notice that he must not.

Now, Mr. President, I will read the affidavit of Charles Coleman, a negro man and the father-in-law of Major Selve, who was one of the men over whom Morgan held an inquest, and, although he is a negro, you will find, I think, on hearing his testimony, that you would believe it in any court of justice over which you ever presided, [Mr. WRIGHT in the chair.] This testimony is on page 277.

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Charles Coleman, who, being duly sworn, deposes and says he lived in the parish of East Baton Rouge for the last ten years, and still lives there, and that he is a qualified elector of said parish. Resides in the fourth ward. That on or about the 4th day of January, 1876, a body of armed white democrats came in the night-time, about 12 o'clock, and took Major Selve, my son-in-law, out of my house and hung him on a gum-tree inside of Mr. Alexander's gate, about seventy-five yards from my door. They left him hanging and came back and told me that he was dead. I asked them what he (Selve) had done. They said it was none of my business. When they came in the house for Selve they asked me for him. I did not tell them where he was. They struck me over the head with a pistol three times, and had a shot-gun leveled at the side of my head while two of them held me by the collar.

Just then one of them, who had a rope, called out, "Here he is," and the men seized Selve and putting the rope around Selve's neck they dragged him out. I followed them out in the road and begged for his life. They said, "We have got him, and we are going to execute our law."

When they had come back to the house and told me Selve was dead, I told I would leave; then they said if I did I had better leave the country: that if I would go to work and clear up my ground and make a good crop like I always did, I could stay there. I am certain that my son-in-law was hung because he meddled in politics and was a republican.

That on or about the 26th day of August I went into town and got tickets and held a meeting to elect delegates to the parish convention, which was called for the 2d September. William Wood went and helped me hold the meeting. After the democrats found out that I had held meeting and attended the parish convention, they accused me of having been a delegate to the republican convention, and I denied having had anything to do with it, because from the threats which were made I was afraid of being killed; and they said, "If it is so, old fellow, you had better look out." They told me that the only way to prove to them that it was not so was for me to join the democratic club and vote the democratic ticket. They also said that every man who voted the republican ticket must leave or six feet of rope would stretch him. I then joined the democratic club of the fourth ward, and other colored men did the same thing, and we all voted the democratic ticket against our will and through fear, and about two weeks after the election they called a meeting in the fourth ward and wanted the colored men to swear that they voted the democratic ticket of their own free will and accord. I went off in the woods to keep from taking this oath; that in the fourth ward of said parish there was a general reign of terror, and I do not know of more than two colored men who voted the democratic ticket from choice and of their own free will.

The name of the man who saw his son-in-law barbarously murdered when he begged for his life is recorded for Mr. Tilden, and his vote is counted for Mr. Tilden, forced, I suppose, by a kind of bull-dozing that we can scarcely have any conception of, and I believe there is no man who will call in question the testimony of this witness.

Mr. BOGY. I will.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is the trouble. Although here was the dead body of his son-in-law, here was the fact that he had been actually forced to vote the democratic ticket. Yet when called upon to commit perjury before God, he fled to the woods rather than commit this additional offense; and they say he is not to be believed! Mr. President, there is the trouble. You cannot make the people of the United States believe these things, because they cannot believe that such atrocities can be committed; and yet the testimony of this witness is true before God.

Mr. WITHERS. In your opinion.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no opinion about it.

Mr. WITHERS. You know it yourself, do you?

Mr. SHERMAN. I know it by witnesses, as I should in rendering a verdict on testimony that was uncontradicted.

Mr. BOGY. It is positively contradicted by other testimony.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will go on. I will now give you the testimony of F. A. Culver, an intelligent witnesss who was examined and cross-examined as supervisor of registration in the parish of East Baton Rouge. He says:

To the third interrogatory: There was violence and intimidation at polls Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, and 14. Intimidation and violence had to be resorted to in order to reduce the republican vote so that the regulators or bull-dozers who were organized in the interest of the democratic party could carry the election in favor of the nominees of said party. These bands of regulators, or bull-dozers, rode through the parish nightly, visiting the houses of colored republicans, hanging, shooting, and whipping them, striking terror into their hearts, with a view of inducing them to vote the democratic ticket or to flee their homes.

Answer to cross-interrogatory 2. I became possessed of the knowledge given in my answer to third direct interrogatory by personal observation and by reports coming to me in my official capacity, from facts of public notoriety, and from information received from individuals. I cannot state any further specific acts of violence and intimidation, names, polls, or dates than I have already given in my direct examination. I knew that there was bull-dozing from general notoriety, from information derived from individuals, from seeing some of these sufferers by bull-dozing and hearing their statements. It was my duty officially to make myself acquainted with the general condition of the parish, so as to guide myself in the location of polls, the appointment of commissioners, and in the general conduct of the election, so as to bring as full and free a vote of all the people as was possible under the circumstances.

I now read you part of the deposition of L. C. Le Sage, a native-born citizen of Baton Rouge, whose intelligence and activity are shown by his testimony. He is a white man, and until the recent election a democrat:

Answer to the second interrogatory. I was in the parish of East Baton Rouge during the election and I know the manner and conduct of the election, and I did know the state of the parish as to peace and order prior to and during the election. That in the late political canvass I was employed as a clerk of supervisor of election during the day of election. I acted as United States supervisor of election, and was on duty all day from five a. m. to ten p. m. That the total registered vote of that parish is 5,267, of which only 1,867 are white. That during the last six months an organized system of intimidation has prevailed throughout the parish, and that acts of violence, riot, and disturbances have been resorted to by armed bodies of men styling themselves bull-dozers and regulators, which has tended to prevent, and has prevented, a fair, free, and peaceable election and a full vote of all the qualified electors of said parish. Such violence, riots, and disturbances, of such a nature as to materially change the result of the election, did occur The following are the facts: A large number of colored voters personally known to me, who have heretofore voted the republican ticket, were compelled to join democratic clubs and pledge themselves to vote the democratic ticket in order to save their lives. A large number of colored voters were compelled to give their registration certificates to the democrats. These persons had heretofore always voted the republican ticket, but surrendered their certificates in order to save their lives or escape bodily harm. Among the number of men killed for being republicans was William Y. Payne, who was hung by the regulators or bull-dozers for having participated in a republican nominating convention; he was secretary of the third ward republican club and had been a republican leader for several years. Mr. Jackson, who was president of the third ward republican club, was forced to leave the ward to save his life. Mr. Simms was forced to vote the democratic ticket to save his life. Mr. Beecher was hung for attending a republican meeting. Mr. Robinson left his employer and his ward to vote the republican ticket for fear that he would be hung, as his brother was a few months before, if he refused to vote the democratic ticket.

On the 4th day of November, 1876, I attended an appointed meeting of republicans in the tenth ward in said parish. Soon after my arrival a body of armed democrats came to the meeting and frightened and intimidated the republicans and entirely broke up the meeting, and then followed the said speakers to the twelfth ward, where another meeting had been appointed, and by threats and intimidation broke up the meeting at that ward. By these demonstrations of armed men, and by other like bodies of armed men, republican meetings were broken up and republicans were prevented from attending the public meetings of their party throughout the parish from time to time during the whole campaign. Armed bodies of men visited the houses of colored republicans, telling them that if they (the republicans) did not vote the democratic ticket they would be killed or subjected to great bodily harm. From time to time, throughout the past year, nearly all the parish or ward officers have been compelled to flee the parish or submit to have their legal authority overridden. In the case of George P. Davis, the parish judge, who was obliged to leave the parish to save his life, I believe that he would have been killed if he had staid in the parish five minutes longer. The order to him to leave was from a meeting of white-leaguers of the parish of East Baton Rouge, of which the president was John S. Dougherty. The committee appointed by said meeting to wait on Davis was J. W. Dupré, John Lamon, Andrew Jackson. They stated that it was an impossibility to keep the crowd back any longer, and advised him to leave town immediately. In the eleventh ward Joseph Johnson, the constable of that ward, was shot and his house burned over his body. Isidore Herron, justice of the peace of the third ward, was terribly whipped and beaten by the regulators, composed of a body of armed democrats.

Answer to the third interrogatory. They have uniformly voted the republican ticket; that I have never known ten colored men to vote democratic ticket, unless they were compelled to do so. I know this from the fact that I have belonged to the democratic party, electioneered for them, and found it an impossibility to vote over one man in the parish, and then it cost more than the man was worth.

Answer to the fourth interrogatory. On the day of election at the poll located at Murphy's school-house, in the first ward of said parish, the two republican commissioners of election assigned to that poll, and duly qualified to perform their duties in that capacity, presented themselves at that poll in due time, and before the hour of six o'clock a. m., were then and there turned out of the poll by a body of white democrats, who took possession of the poll, and caused two democratic commissioners to be sworn in their place, and, when they were remonstrated with by me, ordered me to leave the polls. I believe that from the action of the democrats at that poll there were prevented from voting about two hundred republicans. At the third ward poll the deputy United States marshal, Jacob Shields, reported to me in the city of Baton Rouge, driven from the poll by one A. L. Duncan and others, who used violence against him. While I was canvassing the parish, during the two weeks before the election, many colored men complained to me that it would be impossible to vote on election day, because they had been threatened with death if they voted the republican ticket, although they were republicans, and wanted to vote the republican ticket.

The cross-examination of this witness makes his testimony more specific:

Answer to third cross-interrogatory. In my answer to that question my statements are from information received, except where I have stated otherwise, excepting in the case of George P. Davis, who was driven away, as the democrats have admitted to me, for being the brains of the republican party. I know no other cause alleged for this violence.

Answer to fourth cross-interrogatory. In my answer to this interrogatory, my statements are from information received, except where otherwise stated. Never heard any other reasons except that they were republicans. I do know that it was on account of their politics and color, from the fact that I never heard of any white or colored democrats being molested in their rights, and that it is always a republican that is killed.

Answer to fifth cross-interrogatory. I know it from the fact that while I was canvassing the parish an armed body of men came to the meetings and followed me and the speakers; that the colored men ran to the woods and hid for fear of their lives, knowing that if these men found them at the meetings, if they did not kill them there, they would hereafter. It is impossible for me to enumerate the names of the persons whom I have known thus to be frightened.

Answer to sixth cross-interrogatory. The process of reasoning is this fact. In the third ward there have been numerous murders and outrages committed on colored voters because they were republicans. In the fourth ward, the same organization of bull-dozers as in the third ward ran the machine. In the fifth ward there were as many murders as in the third or fourth. In the tenth ward there were even more, because it is settled up by a set of hyenas any way. In the seventh, the machine has been run by the Haralson boys, and that state of terror and fear prevailing among the colored people that none of them dare come up and vote the republican ticket. In the sixth ward there is a crowd of young bloods, who have been running through that ward in the night-time, going to colored men's houses and calling them out, shooting them, and abusing them to that extent that most of them have taken to the woods and failed to gather their crops, for fear of being killed.

I have thus given you as to the parish of East Baton Rouge the formal testimony of an officer of the Army, the official action of the coroner of the parish, and the testimony of two general officers of the election. I could supplement this by other testimony of the painful details of these and other outrages that establish beyond question the proof of organized intimidation by the democratic party so complete, successful, and revolting that no wonder quiet men hesitate to believe by reason of the atrocity of these crimes.

Turn now to the adjoining parishes of East and West Feliciana.

In East Feliciana Parish at the recent election not one republican vote was cast, though the parish contains over 3,000 voters, of whom over two-thirds were colored. At the last election in 1874 the republican vote was 1,688 and the democratic was 847. The causes of this remarkable result are proven as clearly as human testimony can prove anything, in the evidence printed from pages 223 to 258.

I will first read you the testimony of Thomas H. Jenks, a white resident in that parish since 1869, formerly a tax-collector and apparently an intelligent and credible man. He says in reply to a general interrogatory as to witnessing acts of extreme violence to colored people in that parish since August, 1875:

Answer. In August, 1875, a colored man named Jerry Norman was shot while at church by a band of regulators. In September, 1875, Joseph Johnson, colored, was shot and killed by the regulators in the town of Jackson. In same month a colored man, name unknown, was shot and killed by the regulators on Chaney plantation, northeast of Clinton. In same month York Nelson, young colored boy, was shot and killed in the town of Jackson by said regulators. In October, 1875, a colored man, name unknown, was shot and killed on Mrs. Perkins's plantation, fifteen miles north of Clinton, by a band of regulators. In October, (13th day,) 1875, John Gair, a colored man, was taken from the sheriff's posse by a band of regulators and shot to death, his body being riddled by bullets in the presence of the posse; on the same day a colored girl named Kate Mathews, (commonly called Babe,) a sister-in-law of John Gair's, was taken out of the sheriff's office by a band of regulators, and hung to a tree in the court-house yard. In November, 1875, P. Branch, colored, was shot and killed by a band of regulators. In same month two colored men, names unknown, were shot and killed near Clinton by Lowson Blunt, a well-known white-leaguer. In March, 1876, a colored man, name unknown, was shot and killed in his own house on the Redmond plantation by a band of regulators. Marshall Myer and Webster Dyer was shot in the town of Clinton by the regulators, who dispered the sheriff's posse who attempted to arrest them. Dr. J. D. Wood passed sentence of death upon two young colored girls on the plantation of Mrs. Woodmon, seven miles from Clinton; they were hung by said Wood and about one hundred armed and masked men, which produced miscarriage and death to one of them.

As to acts of lesser violence and the object and motive of them he says:

Answer. I have heard of many instances of colored people being whipped by armed horsemen, who generally rode about at night with masks on their faces, calling themselves regulators or bull-dozers, which became generally known to the colored people, and by which a general state of terror was produced. I have knowledge, from information received, of about fifteen or twenty; the reputed and avowed motives therefor was to intimidate the colored voters and prevent them from voting the republican ticket, and to force them to vote the democratic.

As to the result of this intimidation he says:

Answer. On the 7th day of November, instant, I visited the fifth, seventh, and eighth polls in said parish, heard the democrats tell the colored people that there were no republican tickets, and that they must vote the democratic ticket or not vote at all. This was openly said, and notorious.

* * * * * * *

Answer. I have heard it said by many, and often repeated by the leading democrats, that if any colored man should vote the republican ticket, or attempt to organize the republican party, they should be made to leave the parish, or be whipped severely, and suffer other punishment of an extreme nature; which became generally known, and was notorious.

* * * * * * *

Answer. Generally, the facts before alluded to, with others of a like nature, such as the most brutal and inhuman whipping, and murders inflicted upon the defenseless colored people by the bull-dozers, have caused a fearful state of terrorism, to the extent that they dared not assert their rights as suffragans, and which has, to use their expressions and experiences, reduced them to a condition of slavery more absolute and galling than that from which the late war relieved them.

The proof in detail of many of the outrages sworn to by Mr. Jenks as of general notoriety is here given. The reason why they were not punished he here gives:

Interrogatory 7. When was the last court held in the parish of East Feliciana? Have you any knowledge, or is it notorious, why none have been held? State why not.

Answer. Last court was held October 7, 1875; an armed band of regulators invaded the court-room, interrupted the proceedings, threatened the judge, shot the sheriff, Henry Smith, a colored man, and broke up the session, swearing that no nigger should hold office in the parish; and required and compelled the sheriff aforesaid and T. M. J. Clark, the recorder, a colored man, to flee from the parish, by reason whereof no sessions of the court have been since held—all of which are matters of public notoriety.

I now read you a brief extract from the testimony of Lieutenant Davis, United States Army, stationed at Clinton, the county seat of the parish:

Answer to interrogatory 3. I mean that the conduct of affairs in the parish is very bad; that there was no chance for any one in the parish, unless he happened to be a democrat, whether he wore the blue or not; that the people of the parish were rabid, bitter democrats, and would allow to none to hold opinions contrary to their own; that I have been time after time importuned by colored republicans as regards the affairs of the parish; that I was unable myself to give them the proper protection; that I believe firmly that were they left to themselves to exercise their own free will, the parish would have gone overwhelmingly republican. As to the condition of affairs in the parish, as regards peace and order, everything was quiet, but it is naturally to be supposed that everything would be quiet when every democrat could vote his own ticket, and every republican in the parish (I speak now from my own knowledge) was afraid to vote the way he wished, not only white republicans, but colored.

James E. Anderson, supervisor of registration, makes a "statement," November 10, 1876, at New Orleans, according to the act, saying that it was not affixed to the return when mailed, because he would have been in danger of his life to have done so at that time.

He proves certain facts, as:

A. That in October, 1876, an attempt was made to take his life in the night by parties unknown, as he has reason to believe for the purpose of intimidating and preventing him from the free discharge of his duties as supervisor. He fled the parish, returning November 1, under assurances of safety to himself and the governor.

B. That on Sunday night before the election Lieutenant Davis, of the Thirteenth United States Infantry, was shot at.

C. That it was reported to him that bands of armed men traversed the parish during the period of registration, beating, shooting, and maltreating colored voters unless they promised to vote the democratic ticket.

Thus a belief became general that to vote for any but democratic candidates would jeopardize their lives and safety.

The result was that in the whole parish not one vote was given for the electoral ticket of Hayes and Wheeler; only one vote for them and one for the lieutenant-governor. All the other votes were democratic.

About eighteen hundred were deterred from voting at all; about four hundred led to vote the democratic ticket.

I have now given you the statements of a "carpet-bagger," so called, of an officer of the United States Army, and also of the chief officer of the election. I now give you the evidence of Jared W. Harrell, a planter, born and raised on the place where he lives, now employing fifty men, and who owned before the war as slaves many of the men employed by him:

JARED W. HARRELL. I am a planter in the parish of East Feliciana, seventh ward, and employ fifty colored men. I have often been notified that I must attend democratic meetings and vote the democratic ticket, or I must leave the parish. Many of my hands and those of my neighbors have been cruelly whipped, and others run away from their work because they refused to attend democratic meetings and vote the democratic ticket. My hands were taken from their work and compelled to vote the democratic ticket; many of them I saw deposit democratic ballots, and they told me it was not from choice, but because they had been told that unless they did so they must leave the country.

The democrats would appoint a night for a meeting, and then ride through the country and notify all the colored men and many white men that they must come. My hands would come to me to ask my protection, saying they did not want to attend their meetings or to vote their ticket. I told them on these occasions that I was unable to protect them. This was the case with many of my neighbors, also white planters, but the armed mob were too strong for us, and for us to live in peace and quiet I was compelled to endure whatever they saw fit to do. For the purpose of intimidating me the bull-dozers took one of the women in my house out and whipped her nearly to death. The parties who did it arrested me on the road, armed with shot-guns and pistols, and surrounded and told me they were going to hang me; but I told them I was only one man against a dozen, but if they would let me get my arms I would give them as much satisfaction as they wanted. Their leader told his men to take hold of me and hang me, but I told them to touch me at their peril. They cursed me for a damned nigger-loving radical, but I think they feared to lay hands on me. When they broke into my house, took my servant-woman and stripped her, and beat her most to death, I armed myself and would have resisted, but a band of forty or more surrounded me, and threatened that if I had any of them exposed or attempt to arrest any one for the outrage, they would hang me. I being only one against so many dared not resist, or I would have been killed. They termed me a damned radical scalawag, and said I loved the nigger better than the white man or I would not be a republican. I was born and raised on the place where I now live, and owned many of the hands I now employ before the war. These acts of violence were perpetrated upon all or nearly all the white republican planters in my parish, and it was by this system of intimidation that the democrats carried my parish. Upon a free and fair election my parish would have been republican by at least 1,200, there being upward of 3,000 voters, of whom, without any intimidation, more than 2,100 are republican and less than 900 are democratic.

It is not safe for either a white or a colored man to be a republican in my parish since it has fallen into the control of the bull-dozers; nearly all the democrats are regulators, and as they comprise the majority of the whites of the parish, and are well armed, they keep the colored people in a constant state of terror, and their orders, being issued secretly and enforced in the night, work so strongly upon the superstition of the colored men, that they are worse slaves than if they had masters, being mastered by assassins and ruffians.

After reading the testimony of this witness what necessity is there to pursue the matter further? What a picture of civil society is this. The court overawed by lawless ruffians, the sheriff wounded and a refugee, regulators patrolling at night murdering men and whipping women, threatening alike the owner of the land and the cotton-picker, driving them to the swamp at night while the humble cabin with wife and children are unprotected; and all this to compel them to vote the democratic ticket and elect Samuel J. Tilden President of the United States. Gentlemen, a single case of this kind ought to arouse the fierce resentment of every democrat in the land. Yet this whole parish or county was so overawed or "bull-dozed" that not one republican vote was cast in it, and 1,740 votes were cast for Tilden. Nor were the scenes here depicted confined to this parish nor to a few parishes in Louisiana, but extended to States like Mississippi, whose votes were won by such violence and are now in your keeping, preserved in the sacred urn of the electoral college, to be opened and counted by you for Samuel J. Tilden, when the conviction forced by historical facts rests upon a large portion of our people that it is a result criminally won by processes described by Mr. Harrell which if successful stain republican institutions and enter with their dishonor into the administration that is created by them.

I might go further into the testimony as to East Feliciana, for that already given is corroborated by Glover, Hansbury, Rigby, Brooks, Law Smith, the sheriff of the county, and others, with details unfit to read in this presence. There is one crime already referred to and more fully stated by Sheriff Smith and other witnesses, that, in its atrocity and influence to create terror, demands notice. A Dr. Saunders, of Clinton, who had taken a prominent part in breaking up the district court in October, 1875, a few days afterward, falsely, as is alleged, accused Kate Matthews, a servant in his family, of attempting to poison him. By the most extreme violence, by agencies that surpass the Spanish inquisition, it is said that she made some kind of a confession that implicated John Gair, her brother-in-law, and others. She was hurried to the jail. John Gair was a prominent and active republican living in the adjoining parish of Baton Rouge, an ex-representative, and a man of intelligence, character, and influence. He was arrested, and while being conducted from Baton Rouge to the jail in Clinton he was seized by the regulators and shot dead, and Dr. Saunders participated in this atrocious murder. The same band went to the jail where the girl was imprisoned and hung her in the jail yard. This double murderer is alive and well, practicing his profession of healing the sick, a living libel on the profession he dishonors. My friend from Kentucky [Mr. STEVENSON] says that politics did not enter into this murder. The colored people think it did; and this terrible crime not only intimidated them, but illustrates a state of society which explains how the wholesale intimidation that followed could be successful.

WEST FELICIANA.

Let us now turn to the adjoining parish of West Feliciana. A condensed statement of the testimony as to this parish is contained in pages 10 to 17 of this document to which I refer, but I prefer to read to you extracts of the testimony in the language of the witnesses. The organization, officers, and mode of proceeding of armed bodies of regulators are stated by a large number of witnesses.

I read the testimony of Amy Mitchell:

Answer to interrogatory 2. On the night of the 28th of September last a squad of eight white armed men came to the house owned and occupied by my husband and myself, situated in the third ward, in the parish of West Feliciana, about eight miles from Bayou Sara. They called for my husband, Ike Mitchell by name, who at the time was sick in bed. Before I could open the door sufficiently to see or admit them they pushed it so violently against me as to nearly knock me down. They ordered me to make a light, and upon my telling them that my husband was not in there (he was in an adjoining room) they said, "Hush, you damned liar; he is in here." They said, "We have come here to break up this damned radical hole," and "We have come here to break up this damned Weber hole." They found my husband in the adjoining room, where, after hearing them, he had tried to conceal himself under some loose seed-cotton. They commenced beating him with their pistols, and in the scuffle which ensued got him outside the house, when he was shot three times by one of them whom I recognized as Mr. Charley Barrow. After shooting him, they called to me to come and take the damned son-of-a-bitch in the house, when they rode off, and my husband's sister and myself carried him into the house. We placed him on the bed, where he died about daylight the next morning. They were armed with pistols and guns; either rifles or shot-guns. I recognized Charley Barrow, Robert Wilson, and Jim Dunning as being a part of the squad of eight. Charley Barrow had a handkerchief or towel tied over his face, but it fell off and I saw his features distinctly. I am well acquainted with him, having known him for about seven years. One of the men had a white sheet spread over his horse.

I now read you the testimony of Isaac Vessel:

Answer to interrogatory 2. In the latter part of June last, Gilbert Carter and about a dozen other colored men in our neighborhood, together with myself, proposed to organize a republican club, and met for that purpose one evening at what is called the Flower place. We did not effect an organization that night, but separated to meet again for the same purpose in about two weeks later. The democrats, on hearing of our intentions, congregated, and on the night of July 11 came to the plantation of Charles M. Barrow, about the hour of midnight, and came to my house when I was sleeping and broke open the doors, and awoke me by poking me with their guns. They also went to the house of Gilbert Carter and made him their prisoner. Without giving me an opportunity to dress, they carried me about two hundred yards to where some more of their company were waiting, and where Gilbert Carter was brought; they were about fifty or sixty yards of them; they said that we had got to die that night, and were standing around us in every direction, bellowing that we would certainly be killed. We both made an attempt to escape, when Gilbert Carter was shot to death, pierced by bullets in several places. I ran to a bayou, but being soon almost surrounded, I pulled off my shirt, the only garment I had on, in order to avoid being seen in the darkness, and ran to another bayou, and finally escaped. I went to the house of a friend and obtained some clothing and remained until the next day, when I returned home by a circuitous route, being seen by Charles Barrow. He rode over to where I was. I asked him why they had killed Gilbert and tried to kill me, as I had done nothing. He replied they were after us because of that club we had over at the Flower place. I told him that we had not formed any club, but had only met to take steps to form one, when he said I must acknowledge that we had met and had formed a plan to murder him and his family and other families or I would be killed. I denied any such intention, saying that such a thing was never thought of; but he said that I must acknowledge it if I wanted to live. I consented to anything he might propose in order to save my life.

I now read you the testimony of Riley Norphilas:

To interrogatory 2. The 11th of July last past, about midnight, a body of armed men came to my house, about sixty, as near as I could count. They called out to me some three or four times to come out; then, getting impatient, called again, "Ain't you coming out?" I answered, yes, as soon as I could find my pants. They then said, "If you don't come out we will smoke you out." I went out and there I saw Cody Smith, Mr. Domings, Robert Wilson, Tom West, Charley Barrow, Robert Philips, Hugh Connor, George Townes, Will. Gilmore, Matt. Gilmore, Joe D. Smith, Lewis Smith, Page Barrow, Herman Barrow, and a great many whose names I do not now remember, and some I did not know. All were on horseback and were armed with guns and pistols. They had dismounted. I was accosted at once by Cody Smith, who said, "I want to know all about that club, republican, you have out here that is going to kill the democrats." I told him that was a club I didn't know anything about. He says, "You are a damned liar. You follow us all. We'll get it out of you to-night or we'll kill you." They then got on their horses and made me go with them on foot in their midst, about two hundred and fifty yards from my house, where they came across a big tree. There they made me get upon a horse. Then Tom West said to me, "Now, by G—d, I want you to tell me all you know." I told them I didn't know anything. West said, "Yes, you do, by G—d. Ain't some of you got a rope?" Then Robert Philips spoke up, saying, "Yes, I've got one." He then passed to West a new grass rope that he had tied to his saddle. West immediately put it around my neck, after making the slip-noose, saying, "Now, by G—d, I want you to up and tell us the whole thing. If you don't we'll break your neck to-night." I told them I knew of no club of republicans to kill people. The boys had spoke of having a club meeting, as had always been the case in all election times. Robert Wilson spoke, saying, "O, by G—d, boys, he is trying to dodge us. Break his neck at once and be done with it." Robert Philips then climbed the tree, taking up the end of the rope and fastened it to a limb. Lewis Smith then caught hold of the bridle-rein of the horse I had been placed on and started to lead him from under me. I caught hold of the rein and pulled him back. I begged for a chance to talk. They waited. I told them I did not know of such a club as they spoke of, but if they would turn me loose I would join a democratic club. One of them then said, "Turn him loose. Let him go on home and behave himself and be a good democrat now." They turned me loose.

I have given you the testimony of these negroes as to specific acts of murder and violence. I now give you a part of the affidavit of James H. Morgan, more general in its character, and showing the organization of the regulators and their mode of regulating:

I am a resident voter of ward No. 4, of the parish of West Feliciana. Some time in September or October, 1875, a band of bull-dozers came into Saint Francisville, and by their yelling and hallooing through the streets, and their threats and bad language, put the entire inhabitants in a mortal terror. They had hung John Gair, and were going to hang and shoot other damn radicals and niggers. They came to the house of Senator Webber, and hallooed to him to come out; that they wanted to fix him. They staid all night in town, and by their drunken carousals, firing off their pistols, and abusive threats, they put all the people in a state of excitement. This caused the formation of committees of safety, formed by the planters and their hands. One was formed in my ward, and Mr. Barrow was the president. All the colored men in the ward were asked to sign the rolls, and it was stated that any man who signed could vote as he liked, as it was a non-political organization, whereby all the colored men joined it; and all went well until some time in June, 1876, when some member offered a resolution binding the club to support the democratic ticket. Many of the colored men objected, stating that they were republicans and could not support the democratic party. Mr. Barrow said they must do so, as the people of that parish were tired of the damn radical nigger rule, and that the State must go democratic, if they had to kill all the damn radicals. He thereupon declared the resolution passed, and the colored men, I among the rest, were afraid to make any objection, but at the next meeting few colored men attended. The bull-dozers at once appeared, and among them were many of the white men of the parish. They killed Jack Russell, a colored man; this, accompanied with the threats of the bull-dozers, who warned the colored men that unless they attended the democratic meetings, struck terror to my breast, and that of all others. I at once began to sleep in the woods at night, as did many others, for fear of being killed in my house. This murder was quickly followed by that of Gilbert Carter, Isaac Michell, and Ed. Armstrong, all living in my part of the parish, besides Primus Picket, Juber Johns, and many others, who were shot at Brent Saws. Marsch Gray and others were whipped nearly to death during the same period, from June to the day of election. These acts confirmed my terror and that of other colored men. These acts and raids of the bull-dozers were all in the night-time, and when day returned there would be no traces of them. Many of their men were recognized by me and others as the white residents of our neighborhood; among others, Cortney Smith and Charles Barrows. By these acts of violence, and after repeated warnings, I joined the club and attended the meetings and the democratic speakings. These acts of intimidation caused many colored men to stay away from the polls, and many others were compelled to vote the democratic ticket against their wishes. We had been told that on the day of election there would be a man present at each poll with a spot-book to take down the names of all colored men who voted the republican ticket, and that on the night following, or in a few nights, they would be visited by the bull-dozers, but that those who voted the democratic ticket would be let alone. Sure enough, on the day of election there was a man at our poll with his spot-book, and he called out the name of each man who voted the republican ticket, and said, "Spotted." I saw many colored men who came up with republican tickets drop them when they heard this man calling the names. Some left the polls without voting, others were accosted by democrats and compelled to vote the democratic ticket. Many of these last came to me and said they were afraid to vote as they wanted to—the republican ticket—as the bull-dozers would kill them, but if I could insure them protection they would vote as they wished, but I told them I could not give them any security. There were many voted at this poll who voted the democratic ticket who had no registration papers. I counted twelve or fifteen myself. These men claim they had lost their papers, and made affidavit. If there had been a free, fair, and unintimidated election the republicans would have had a majority of about 250 at my poll, whereas the democrats, by the foregoing intimidation, carried that poll about 70 votes.

I could supplement this testimony by that of a score of witnesses giving specific acts of violence by the regulators. I now read the affidavit of John S. Dula, the parish judge of this parish:

I am parish judge of my parish, (parish of West Feliciana.) For the last year there has been an organized band of white democrats, styling themselves bull-dozers and regulators, who patrolled the entire, and, by threats, acts of violence, and burning houses, have intimidated the colored people to such an extent that few have the hardihood to openly declare themselves republicans. These parties I have seen, and speak of what I know. About a year ago, about the 25th of October, 1875, about 300 regulators, all armed with shot-guns, rifles, and pistols, who I was notified came to demand my resignation as parish judge. About eight o'clock I shut my store and went to the residence of a friend, and shortly afterward they broke into my store, gutted it, and left with a colored man, an acquaintance of mine, a resignation to the governor of my office of judge, and left word that unless I resigned it by the next day at four o'clock they would take my life. I sent them a refusal, and took boat for the city of New Orleans, where I remained for three months. I then returned, and after heard it remarked that the damned radical officials must leave the parish if they value their lives. For the three months just before the election the parish has been patrolled by the bull-dozers. About the 1st of May last, 1876, about fifty or sixty armed democrats rushed into the court-house where I was holding court, and the republican members of the police jury were summoned and commanded to resign at once on pain of death, which they did. There has been several murders within the last three months, one of whom, Isaac Mitchell, a prominent republican, but who was an inoffensive man, and who held no official position, who owned his own farm and worked it, and who attended to his own business, but who refused openly to join the democratic clubs and rebuked colored men who did so. He was taken out of his bed about four o'clock in the night and beat over the head with clubs in the presence of his wife and children, and when nearly dead and stunned was shot and left lying dead in his door-yard. John Russell, another colored republican, who held no official position, worked his own farm, had an excellent reputation, but was too staunch in his political opinions to be induced to join a democratic club—the bull-dozers came to his cabin about the middle of the night and broke open his door. When he heard them coming he jumped into an empty pork-barrel to hide, where he was riddled with bullets and left to his wife and children. A colored boy, Hurd, who refused to join a democratic club, was whipped nearly to death, then turned off and run out of the parish. Hunt Anoth and various others have been whipped and run away. These and similar acts of intimidation have struck terror to the hearts of the colored men of Feliciana, and because they valued the lives of their wives, children, and their own, that they have voted the democratic ticket—not, as many of them said to me, because they wished to do so, but because they had no other alternative.

I now read the deposition of George A. J. Swayze:

Answer to interrogatory 1. My name is George A. J. Swayze; I am 31 years old; I live in the parish of West Feliciana, where I was born and have always lived; I am a deputy sheriff of said parish.

Answer to interrogatory 2. I know that during the year preceding the election the general condition of public affairs was very unsettled throughout the parish in consequence of individuals banding themselves together, and organizing squads or companies, and perpetrating acts of violence and intimidation against the colored people.

Answer to interrogatory 3. For more than a year preceding the election, bands of armed men, styled regulators and bull-dozers, patrolled the parish at intervals, and committed acts of intimidation and violence, ranging from threatenings of punishments, graduating to whippings and hangings, and culminating in the most atrocious and horrid murders. These movements were inaugurated in September, 1875, and were followed at irregular though frequent intervals until the night of the day preceding the election.

Answer to interrogatory 4. The effect of the foregoing was to inaugurate a reign of terror among the colored voters throughout the parish against whom these demonstrations were made, and to whom they were principally confined.

Answer to interrogatory 5. I know that threats conveying the idea of the severest punishment were made against the colored voters to prevent them voting the republican ticket.

Answer to interrogatory 6. The republican party was not permitted to effect an organization throughout the parish. The causes preventing this were the whippings, hangings, and murders inflicted upon the colored men by the bull-dozers and regulators, whose flat was pronounced with especial reference to the prevention of this object on the part of the republican party in the parish.

Answer to interrogatory 7. If the republican party had been permitted to effect an organization in said parish, and if the election had been fair, free, and peaceable, the result would have given a clear majority of over one thousand in favor of the republican party.

I now give you a portion of the testimony of Washington Spooner, a commissioner of the election:

Answer to interrogatory 1. My name is Washington Spooner. I am twenty-seven years old, and I live in the tenth ward, parish of West Feliciana. I was born and raised in said parish, and have lived there all my life, excepting from August, 1863, to January, 1866, during which time I was a soldier in the Federal Army. I am a laboring farmer by occupation.

Answer to interrogatory 2. I know of several acts of intimidation and violence in my neighborhood preceding the election, calculated to prevent a free and fair election.

Answer to interrogatory 3. I know from information received, and as a matter of notoriety, that Jubal Hunt, March Grey, and Ben. Baker were severely whipped at different times in my neighborhood preceding the election. I have no personal knowledge as to the cause therefor, but from general belief can state that in the case of Jubal Hunt, the causes which led to his being whipped were his repeated public avowal of his fidelity to the principles of the republican party, and his determination not to join a democratic club or vote the democratic ticket. The effect of these whippings was to frighten the colored voters of the tenth ward and deter them from organizing republican clubs or voting the republican ticket.

Answer to interrogatory 4. On Sunday night, November 5, instant, a band of about ten armed men rode through the Bush Hill plantation, where I reside. They were armed with pistols, shot-guns, and Winchester rifles. I saw them again the next morning at the store of H. C. Lopez; among them I recognized one Jake Rowe, who was addressed by the others as "Captain." I also recognized John Black, Ben. Cursey, and one Dickerson or Dickam, and Alf. Riley. The effect of this raid was to thoroughly frighten and intimidate the colored voters of the neighborhood.

Answer to interrogatory 5. The colored voters of this neighborhood were repeatedly threatened with violence if they voted the republican ticket. I was warned and threatened by John J. Barrow, democratic candidate for sheriff, that if I voted the republican ticket I should not be permitted to live on the Bush Hill plantation, where I was born, and now reside. H. C. Lopez threatened me that if I voted or any other republican voted the republican ticket, we should be made to leave the parish or be killed.

Answer to interrogatory 6. I was a commissioner of election at the Brick Church poll in the tenth ward.

Answer to interrogatory 7. I saw several white men, all democrats, near and around the polling-places, and inside the church where the polls were held, and the effect of this was to frighten the republican voters, and prevented them from voting the republican ticket.

Answer to interrogatory 8. I am well acquainted in the tenth ward, and know nearly all of the colored voters, and, from intimate relations and conversations with them, I know them nearly all to be republicans, sincerely, conscientiously. I do not know of more than six colored democrats who ever profess to be such among their own rate and color.

Answer to interrogatory 9. The result of the vote at the poll in the tenth ward was 323 democratic votes, and 1 republican vote. In 1874 the result was 99 democratic votes and 167 republican votes.

I will close these extracts from the testimony as to this parish by giving you the sworn statement of E. L. Weber, the supervisor of the election:

E. L. WEBER, being duly sworn, deposes and says that he was the duly appointed and qualified United States supervisor of elections for the parish of West Feliciana, at the general election held 7th November, 1876, and that as such he performed the duties prescribed by law. That from reports made to him and from his personal knowledge he can state the general terrorism which prevailed throughout the parish produced by lawless and defiant acts of armed bodies of men acting avowedly in the interests of the democratic party, and styling themselves regulators and bull-dozers, prevented a fair expression of the popular will excepting at the poll in the first ward, where, by congregating the officials, superinduced by his (affiant's) personal presence, and as an authorized official of the United States, the general condition of terror was so measurably overcome that a tolerable expression of popular sentiment was obtained, and also in the seventh ward, which, by reason of its remote locality and inaccessibility thereto, was relieved from the immediate effects of intimidation of terrorism above alluded to.

At all the other polling-places a price was virtually set upon the heads of republican voters who, in vindication of their principles, voted the ticket of their choice, and every means of cruelty and vindictiveness that suggested themselves to the fiendish iniquity of the bull-dozing democracy were resorted to to prevent and did prevent even a semblance of a fair and a free election.

Affiant knows that the relative strength of the two parties in said parish is at the rate of 4 to 1 in favor of the republican party; that a fair election would and will demonstrate a republican majority of 1,200 in said parish.

I may add that not a single specific statement of fact sworn to by these witnesses was contradicted by any testimony before the returning board.

The result was that at the election on November 6, 1876, there were cast for the republican electors 780 votes; for the democratic electors, 1,246 votes. At the last election before, held in November, 1875, there were cast for the republican ticket 1,358 votes, and for the democratic ticket 501 votes. The registration for 1876 shows a voting population of whites 406; of colored, 2,218.

What honest man can doubt upon the face of these facts that in West Feliciana intimidation, superinduced by violence and most atrocious murders, did so change the result as to make it the plain duty of the returning officers to reject the votes in the polling-places where this intimidation prevailed? And yet they are arraigned as criminals for doing this thing. These night-hawks of crime whose ridings and outrages are here depicted are to be extolled as lawful agencies of a peaceful and fair election, and the chief instruments in the election of a President of the United States.

It should be remembered that the three parishes I have referred to are adjacent to or near the boundary of Mississippi, and that the plan of intimidation or bull-dozing is frequently spoken of as the "Mississippi plan." What that is is known from the evidence and report of the Senate Committee on the election a year ago in that State; and its terrible success is now known at the recent elections. We heard in New Orleans the statements of white men of the highest character and credibility living in Mississippi to facts within their personal knowledge showing the same organized violence and intimidation in Mississippi that I have shown in these border parishes. The Mississippi plan was extended to Louisiana; and that it might be successful in spite of the lawful powers of the returning officers, it was confined to republican parishes where the republicans had a conceded majority. If there the intimidation was practiced, it would at least nullify and destroy the republican majority. That was the Mississippi plan modified so as to nullify the laws of Louisiana. Therefore it was that in forty of the parishes of Louisiana there was a fair and free election, with a full vote and an increased republican majority, thus indicating the current of opinion in that State; but in these three bull-dozed parishes a conceded republican majority of 2,688 at the election in 1874 was changed to an alleged democratic majority of 2,819, a change of over 5,500 in three thinly populated parishes. Can any man doubt but this was caused by intimidation? What other cause can be suggested to produce such a political revolution? Is it that the colored people were persuaded by peaceful argument to change their party? Why did not that argument prevail in the body of the State where the election was peaceable and orderly? Why not in New Orleans where the conceded democratic majority and the weight of wealth and social influence is on the side of the democratic party? No, sir, no! It is an idle pretense that deceives no man in Louisiana. The persuasion the regulators mean is thus described by a colored man: "Ise 'suaded to vote the democratic ticket. Massie 'suaded me. He put a six-shooter at my head and told me to vote the ticket and I did." It is when by such agencies a President is sought to be elected that the whole people should appeal both to the forms and spirit of the law to prevent such a catastrophe.

MOREHOUSE.

We will now turn to Morehouse Parish, in another part of the State, and on the southern border of Arkansas. It is purely an agricultural parish, the parish seat being Bastrop, a small town, the parish containing, in 1875, 12,280 inhabitants, of whom 3,504 were white and 8,775 black. By the registration of 1876 there were 938 white voters and 1,830 black voters.

The testimony as to this parish, on pages from 422 to 459 of this document, shows the same general organization of regulators and bull-dozers and their night-marching, as has already been depicted in the other parishes, but with a less degree of violence and some mitigating features. There was a white lining to the cloud.

It appears that a month or two before the election an armed band of these white democrats, styling themselves bull-dozers, surrounded the house of Dow Hundely at night, and, after some colloquy, they rushed at him, pointing their pistols and knives at him, seized him by the heels and dragged him to the door. They then placed a pistol to his right side and another to his left and a knife to his throat and asked him if he would not rather join the democratic club and vote the democratic ticket than be mobbed, and threatened if he did not do so they would mob him; that they would spare his life then, but if they ever caught him at a radical meeting they would mob him. The same band on the same night visited the house of Dow Hundely's brother-in-law, called him out, and assaulted him and his wife and threatened to mob them if they ever attended republican meetings or took part in politics. Several other colored people, his neighbors, were visited on the same night and abused in order to prevent their attending republican meetings to be held the next day, and threatened if they did so they would be mobbed.

The most hopeful sign that followed this outrage was that within the week after this visit the planters of the tenth ward of that parish signed a protest against the action of the bull-dozers, and agreed to combine among themselves to protect the colored men from the bull-dozers and see that the colored men should have the privilege of voting as they pleased. That in consequence of the action of these planters there was a fair election in that ward, and the colored men were permitted to vote as they desired, and there was an increased republican majority. The testimony of several witnesses corrobbrates this general statement and especially as to the result of the organized action of the white planters against the bull-dozers. But this noble example was not followed in any other ward. If it had been throughout the State, there would be no question as to the vote of Louisiana, simply because the white people had not yet come to the condition to which they must come before they can have peace and order, before property will be worth anything in Louisiana, when the planters and property-holders shall say to these lawless ruffians, "We will shoot you if you invade our homes and our plantations." In this ward I give credit to the brave men, some of whom are democrats, who did combine and sign a paper that if these bull-dozing operations were carried on in that tenth ward they would be met by arms, and thus it was stopped.

In the town of Bastrop the intimidation seemed to be less violent than in other wards. The general purpose of the intimidation in other wards of the parish seemed to be to prevent republican meetings and the organization of republican clubs; but such meetings were held at Bastrop, though, in every case, the republican speakers were grossly insulted, and among them Hon. William H. Hunt, the republican candidate for attorney-general, and Mr. Leonard, the republican candidate for Congress. The speakers were treated with insults and menaces by the democrats, who finally became so riotous and threatening that Lieutenant Mahon, commanding a detachment of United States troops, was forced to interfere to keep the peace. In other wards in this parish the intimidation was entirely successful, but was accompanied with less bloody atrocities than in the Mississippi parishes. The testimony of Henry C. Wright, deputy-sheriff, J. J. Schordt, and William L. Richmond, all of whom were cross-examined, and who were manifestly intelligent and reputable men, give in their testimony an apparently truthful and clear statement of the degree and extent of intimidation in the parish. I will read brief quotations from each of them.

HENRY C. WRIGHT. I am well acquainted with the political sentiments of the voters of my parish; have resided there all my life. The colored voters are in a majority of nearly two to one over the white voters; there are about fifty or sixty white republicans in the parish, and about the number of one hundred colored men who would vote the democratic ticket under a full, fair, and free election. I never saw with my own eyes any armed men patrolling the parish of Morehouse, because my residence is in the town of Bastrop, where I remained nearly all the time pending the late general election; but no fact is better known or more universally conceded than that there were armed bands of white men patrolling the said parish pending the late election, and they were known and designated as bull-dozers. They were universally admitted to be working in the interests of the democratic party.

My name is J. J. Schordt. I am fifty-two years of age. I reside in the parish of Morehouse. I am the postmaster of the town of Bastrop, in said parish. I do know of such armed bands; they were known by the name of bull-dozers.

I would state that on or about the 1st day of October, 1876, at night-time, a large body of men assembled before my dwelling, and by howling and riotous conduct did so terrify the members of my family that my daughter was thrown into a faint, which lasted for about two hours. These men were armed with guns. This was done because I was a republican; and, in my opinion, these men were democrats. On the 13th of October, 1876, the republicans of the parish held their nominating convention, and nominated me for the house of representatives on the parish republican ticket. A few days after receiving the nomination above referred to, a black coffin was placed at my gate, with the following inscription thereon: "Schordt, Murchison, and Ross, this is your box if you do not quit politics!!" On the same day that I received the coffin I was in the town of Bastrop at my office, when several democrats of the parish of Morehouse came into my office, and by hints with hidden meaning and by other means, endeavored to intimidate me, and asked me if I intended to "come down," the meaning of which was, did I intend to accept the nomination on the republican ticket as candidate for the house of representatives; and upon my replying in the affirmative, these democrats, and A. S. Keller in particular, told me that I had better come down. I left the parish on the same day, as I feared I would be killed if I remained any longer.

R. Randall also testifies that—

I know of armed bodies of men who patrolled my parish and who threatened the lives of republicans who attempted to organize republican clubs. I was president of the republican club of the seventh ward, but I was prevented by threats and through fear of bodily harm from calling my club together.

The story of Gus Winfield, to whom no actual violence was done, shows the terror and anxiety caused by the threats of violence:

GUS WINFIELD. I am a resident elector of the first ward, parish of Morehouse; have resided in the parish more than twenty years. About the middle of June, 1876, I heard that a body of regulators were coming to my house to bull-doze me. I told my two brothers and my two cousins who live with me on the same place; we were making a crop together. After a consultation we determined to set up and watch for the bull-dozers. About eleven o'clock p. m., I heard some one riding up the road and we hid ourselves; when, in a few minutes, Mr. Law, a prominent republican, rode up and asked me permission to lay on my gallery until morning, as he was on his way to Shreveport. I told him that I expected the bull-dozers; but he said that they had been after him and that he had given them the slip, and that they would hardly look for him at my house that night. This allayed my fears, partially at least; and when Mr. Law had laid down, I and my party, not being able to sleep, we walked to the church on our place where the colored people were holding church, all of us attending that church usually. Still feeling uneasy in spite of Mr. Law's assurance, we carried our guns with us. We had just arrived at the church and were talking to some of the brethren at the door, when up rode a party of armed democrats, among whom were Mr. Ross and Mr. Griffin. They hailed me and my party and asked us what we were doing with our guns at church. I then told them what I had heard about the regulators. The one who had spoken before told me that they were not after me but after another man. About this time church broke up and many of the congregation went down the road-side by the band of bull-dozers, who rode a little in advance. I and my party came along behind; when the regulators came up to my gate, nine of their number then dismounted in my yard and appeared to be watching for some one. One of the party then fired off his pistol. When I saw this I feared to return to my house, but went through the canes and approached to within fifty yards of my house, when I sat down and watched the party. Within half an hour my brother came down the road and within the gate. One of the band asked him where I was.

He told them he thought I had come down before him. He, being afraid, passed on and into his house. The regulators waited around in my yard until just before day, and then left. The next day about four p. m. a party of four gentlemen drove up to my house in a carriage and stated that they had been told that a party of regulators had called at my house; they stated further that they had come to tell me that the regulators would not disturb me if I did not attempt to organize republican clubs or hold any republican meetings; and we did not dare to hold any meetings in that ward or part of the parish during the entire canvass. We feared that if we attempted to do so we would be ill-used—either killed, or whipped, or driven from our homes. I know of the murder of only one man who was a prominent republican, and that was Mr. Law. But in the adjoining parishes many murders were committed, and every few days we would hear of some being whipped or killed, and for fear the same would be done to colored men in my ward we did not organize clubs to attend meetings. I myself voted the republican ticket, but not until I got permission to do so, and that permission was given to me personally. The bull-dozers patrolled my parish constantly before the election, and by the dread of their presence and of their deeds of blood, the republicans in my ward either refrained from voting at all or voted the democratic ticket, to avoid being cruelly treated.

William L. Richmond testifies:

My name is William L. Richmond; age, thirty-nine years; residence, Morehouse Parish; occupation, planting.

In the ward where I was present during the election of the 7th of November, 1876, the election was measurably free, fair, and full, because the prominent white planters in that ward had resolved, after the outrages on Hundly and Archer, to resist any further visits of the bull-dozers. This was ward 10.

Answer to direct interrogatory 6. I have abundant information, from conversation with the colored people in Morehouse, and from observing the effects, that there were for two months preceding the said election acts of intimidation and violence committed in said parish such as prevented and tended to prevent a free and fair vote of the qualified electors in said parish. I instance the patrolling of the parish by armed men, visiting colored men at their houses at night, beating them, and acts of similar character. I instance, again, the following, on the occasion of a barbecue and political meeting at Oak Ridge, fifth ward, in said parish: About the 1st November preceding the election, I was present canvassing for the office of sheriff on the republican ticket. I was waited upon by friends and told to go away, because democrats had previously notified that I could not electioneer with the colored people, and if I were seen talking with them that I would do it at my own risk. The democrat who told me that said he had been told to do so, (I suppose by the controlling men at the meeting.) I felt that it was not safe for me to remain there, and I went away. Acts like the above caused the republicans to be afraid to organize and canvass the party in Morehouse Parish, and tended to prevent, and did prevent, a free and fair expression of the popular will at the election of the 7th November, 1876.

Answer to cross-interrogatory 1. I have lived in Morehouse for seventeen years. I have been a police juror in said parish, and sheriff, which positions brought me in contact with almost every man of influence in the parish.

Answer to cross-interrogatory 5. If you mean by my own knowledge—my own eyesight—I will answer, the threats made to me at Oak Ridge, as recited in my answer to direct interrogatory 6. If you mean by my personal knowledge, the conviction which results from common report uncontradicted, I will mention the violence done to Dow Hundly and William Archer, and John Kennedy, who were visited at night by armed men known as bull-dozers, and acting in the interest of the democratic party, and who beat and otherwise maltreated the said Hundly, Archer, and Kennedy, who had committed no other known offense than to be republicans. This was done during the late canvass, and, as the bull-dozers said, to prevent them, the said Hundly, Archer, and Kennedy, from attending a political meeting called by me, I being then a candidate for the republican nomination for sheriff. It is but just to say that after the outrage to Hundly, Archer, and Kennedy, the prominent white planters in the tenth ward, the locality where the outrage occurred, took action to prevent the further visits of the bull-dozers, and the consequence was that, at the election on the 7th November, there was some feeling of security in said ward to those who desired to vote the republican ticket. This action was not taken in any other ward in Morehouse, that I know of. There were some other acts of violence and intimidation committed under my own observation, notably, the conduct of the democrats at the republican mass-meeting held at Bastrop in September, when Mr. Packard, Harris, Wharton, and others spoke. Many democrats present acted in such an insulting and menacing manner toward the speakers that there was general apprehension of tumults and riot; this done, too, in presence of many hundreds of colored men. Again, on the 23d of October, when Mr. William H. Hunt, candidate for attorney-general, and others spoke, the conduct of the democrats was insulting, menacing, and finally became so threatening that Lieutenant Mahon, commanding a detachment of United States troops, was compelled to interpose his military authority to prevent a riot and general disturbance of the peace.

This witness is corroborated by many colored people who give specific acts of intimidation in different wards. I will close the extracts of testimony as to this parish by the sworn statement of W. G. Shelton, who was the republican candidate for the Legislature:

W. G. SHELTON, being duly sworn, says that for the six months previous to the general election, held on the 7th of November, 1876, there has been a general reign of terror among the republicans of the parish of Morehouse, and especially those who are colored, caused by armed bodies of democrats, who called themselves bull-dozers, and who threatened, beat, killed, and whipped republicans.

My parish was patrolled by armed bodies of democrats, who made it their business to call on all republicans, and to threaten them with violence unless they joined the democratic clubs and voted the democratic ticket. Their object and aim was to so intimidate the republicans that they would either not vote at all or vote the democratic ticket. The republican majority of this parish, under a free, fair, and peaceable election, is about 600 or 700, but the intimidation and threats used by the armed bodies of democrats or bull-dozers compelled hundreds of colored men to vote the democratic ticket against their will. I was a candidate for the Legislature. I did not make a thorough canvass of the parish, as there was such vindictive feeling among the democrats against republicans that it was unsafe to canvass outside of the large towns. In the first ward there was so much intimidation that colored men who wanted to vote the republican ticket in many instances were either compelled to vote the democratic ticket or not vote at all. In the second ward there were those same unlawful influences and intimidation used, and with the same results.

The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, and ninth wards were carried by the democrats in the same way. In the tenth ward the better class of citizens, after the bull-dozers for some time had overrun the ward, met together and passed resolutions, in which they declared that if the bull-dozers came back there they would meet them with shot-guns and disperse them in this ward. From that time out there were very little, if any, intimidation used, and the result was a large republican majority in that ward for all the republican nominees.

The effect of the bull-dozing in my parish was such that all republicans felt unsafe in speaking their opinions for fear of bodily harm. Many acts of violence occurred and all of this was perpetrated against republicans, and thus inspired all with a feeling that it was only safe to be a democrat, and especially the colored population, who are naturally timid, easily alarmed, were terrorized and compelled to vote a democratic ticket, when their feelings prompted them to vote the republican ticket if there.

One of our school-teachers, who was an outspoken republican, was given twenty-four hours to leave the parish. He knew the feeling among the democrats against any republicans who had the temerity to speak their opinion openly, and he left without any delay. Another school-teacher, a colored man, but a very talented and peaceable citizen, had a coffin left in his school, with a note in it stating that if he staid in the parish he would need it soon. Several other prominent republicans had coffins left at their gates, with notices that they would need a larger one before long unless they changed their principles or residence.

Mr. W. L. Law was shot. He was an open and bold-spoken republican, and such men inspired the colored men of the parish with confidence and courage when alive, while their tragic death struck terror to the colored man's heart; and while such republicans lived he would walk boldly to the front and speak his views; after their sudden and violent death these same colored men would not be heard to express any opinion about politics.

It is manifest this general intimidation was greatly promoted by a fierce and rabid democratic local paper, extracts from which are published in this document, which have all the extravagant fury and exaggeration of Dickens's Mr. Pott of the Eatanswill Gazette. These extracts are contained in the deposition of C. B. Wheeler, for years parish judge of the parish, and the republican candidate for the senate in that district, and who was elected by a majority of about 3,000.

It is manifest in the whole of this testimony that a degree of intimidation, carefully organized, did control the election, and changed a natural and uniform previous republican majority of about 700 at all the elections that had been held in that parish since the negro had a vote to a democratic majority of about 600.

OUACHITA.

I come now to the parish of Ouachita, which, in public estimation, has been considered an extreme example of what is called "bull-dozing." It adjoins Morehouse and is the center of a number of parishes which were largely affected by the violence we are about to consider. Its registered vote for the year 1876 was: white, 992; colored, 2,392. At the election in 1874 the republican vote was 1,694 and the democratic vote 766; and this had been about the proportion of votes since the passage of the fifteenth amendment. According to the returns this year the vote is: republican, 793; democratic; 1,867; making a change of over two thousand votes in the result in a vote cast of about 2,660. The officers of the election, supported by the oaths of witnesses, protest that this result was brought about by intimidation; and that was the only question before the board of returning officers.

It appears that in this parish there was comparative peace and quiet until about the 1st of July, when eight democratic clubs were organized, supported by armed rifle clubs, which were a part of the organized democratic clubs. Soon after they were formed they began to traverse the parish, and confusion, violence, whipping, bloodshed, murder, and shameless brutality commenced and continued until the election and in some instances since. These rifle companies were made up from the different wards and voting-places, and frequently went beyond the limit of their wards. They were armed with guns and pistols, mounted and commanded by regular officers, had all the appointments of military organizations, and frequent meetings. They had no semblance of legal authority, but were simply aids and instruments of the democratic clubs. Democrats alone were members of these clubs. Armed they rode over the parish in the day and night time, more frequently at night. They would fire off their arms, guns and pistols, to create terror and alarm among the negroes. They would halt before and enter at unseasonable hours of the night the houses of the negroes, often committing violence upon the men and women by shooting, whipping, with the accompaniment of profane and abusive language. They demanded that the men should vote the democratic ticket and join the clubs; if they agreed to this demand they were promised protection; if not, they were either threatened with violence or actual violence was inflicted upon them. The testimony to support these statements is so abundant that it is difficult to select from, but may be found printed in this document from pages 330 to 420. This violence was extended not only to the negroes, but to white voters also. J. R. Hall, a planter and justice of the peace for the fourth ward, a republican, but who had taken no active part in politics this year, was waited upon by a committee of democrats about the middle of July, 1876. The purport of their mission was to request him to attend a democratic meeting to be held at Masonic Hall, and to join their rifle company known as the Colony Guards, and in case he refused to do so he would not be considered worthy of their protection, and would be left to protect himself as best he could. He gives the names of the members of the organization, and among them that of Captain Theobalds, who appears frequently as an actor in the terrible scenes which took place in this parish. Mr. Hall, who was examined at considerable length, says the rifle companies were composed of democrats from boys of twelve years old to men of advanced age. Their conduct was of a most shocking character in many instances, especially among the colored people.

They rode frequently all night, visiting plantations, riding through their quarters, demanding admittance into their cabins, riding through their cotton-fields, murdering some, whipping others, and maliciously shooting at and wounding many, commanding them at once to renounce republicans and join the democrats; offering them protection and peace if they did join the democratic party; and if they did not, the assassin's knife, the murderer's pistol, the whipping-post were presented, from which they were told they had no means of escape.

This riding about and other demonstrations caused the colored people to fear that if they did not comply with their demands, they would be murdered, whipped, driven from their homes, have to leave their families and their crops, and could see no escape; concluded at last to join their clubs—their democratic clubs—and if protected at the polls would vote the republican ticket; and if not protected, they would vote with them, through fear of being violently treated after as well as before the election.

Mr. Hall gives also the names of many who were murdered in the parish, and some who were whipped and shot. He was a commissioner of election, and, after it was over, as justice of the peace took upwards of one hundred and seventy-five affidavits, white and colored included, setting forth how these votes were cast, and that he knew many of these affidavits were not taken voluntarily; that some of them he refused to sign knowing the truth was not contained in them; and for this he felt unsafe and left his home.

The assassination of Dr. Dinkgrave, a son-in-law of the chief-justice of the State and among the chief republican leaders, on the 30th of August produced a wide-spread feeling of alarm. N. Blanchard, an intelligent republican justice of the peace of ward 7, after describing the marching and countermarching of hundreds of armed men who rode over the parish in a warlike and threatening manner, says:

This large body of armed horsemen (democrats) rode over the parish in a warlike and threatening manner, swearing that they would carry the parish of Ouachita for the democracy if they had to do it with shot-guns. This conduct greatly intimidated the colored and white republicans, especially occurring immediately after the assassination of Dr. Dinkgrave, which event chilled the hearts of the boldest. When these armed bodies were parading many colored people came to me extremely frightened, thinking they would be killed, and asked me what to do. I advised them to remain quiet and perhaps harm would not befall them. From that time on armed horsemen rode around at night firing off their guns and shooting into the houses of colored republicans, and threatening them in the day-time, saying all the time that they (the democrats) would carry the parish and those who would not join them would not be safe. They promised the republicans that all who joined the democratic clubs would be protected against the bull-dozers, who were all democrats. The threats were so severe that we dared not organize a republican club in ward 7.

He was warned to wind up his business by the 1st of January and leave or "you will go up as many other damned rascals have."

I gave this letter to my merchant, who lives in Trenton, who read and said, "You have been fooling with politics." I then told Tom McGuire, who said that the letter meant trouble. I thanked him for his opinion and left the letter with him. I then told Mr. McGuire that I had never harmed any one, and I thought it very hard that I could not do as I pleased with my own place, and to be treated in this manner for my political opinion. I then promised to vote the democratic ticket, although I could not join their party, and he agreed to see me protected. I accordingly voted the democratic ticket, although against my will, to save my life, being told that I was safe to do so. I own three hundred and thirty acres of land, a good wagon and two yoke of steers, two milk-cows, two horses, ten head of sheep, eleven head of hogs, and plenty of corn and fodder to do me.

Now, I am comfortably fixed in Ouachita Parish, and the democrats are trying to drive me away from my property, and still they seem surprised that colored people do not like their party. I have been living eight years in ward 7, near Trenton, poll 12, and am well acquainted with all the colored voters of that ward, who are largely in the majority, and all republicans. I know that had there been no intimidation the democracy would not have voted twenty colored voters at the poll; that, by the intimidation that resulted from the threats, violence, and bloodshed, the republican party lost 200 votes at that poll.

The assassination of Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave, of Primus Johnson, of James Jackson, of Henry Pinkston, and others. The attempted assassination and shooting of Eaton Logwood, H. W. Burrell, Spencer Dickenson, William Lewis, and Hawkins Jones, the cruel beating of many others, leading republicans, all occurring in a couple of months previous to the election, had the effect of terrifying the republican voters. George Shelton was shot at night by some unknown person in ward 7, it being generally understood that he was shot because of his political opinion, he being a prominent republican. In making this statement, I have only told such truths as are elicited from me by questions. I prefer to leave all untold that I can consistently do, and telling the truth, for I am satisfied that the statements already made by me will endanger my life, should I return to my home at any time. I am satisfied that had there been a free, fair, and peaceable election at poll 1 of ward 1; polls 2 and 3 of ward 2; poll 8 of ward 4; poll 9 of ward 5; polls 10 and 11 of ward 6, and poll 12 of ward 7, that the republicans would have carried the parish of Ouachita by at least 1,000 majority. I close with these few remarks: I have been a citizen of the State of Louisiana twenty-five years. During my slavery or freedom, if any person can bring any blemish on my character, be he white or black, I am willing it should be published to the world.

The witness had, in 1868, been attacked in his own house by disguised men during the night-time. They shot into his house, killed two of his dogs, took a gun away from him, and beat him severely. In consequence of this violence he left that parish and settled in Ouachita. Here is the story of a man once a slave, freed, I believe, before the war, or at least in the process of the war, if I remember his testimony, who gradually accumulated a considerable property. He was driven from once place in Louisiana some years ago, in 1868. In the terrible tragedies of those years he removed to this parish of Ouachita, and there was not a word of reproach against him. He was kindly thought of by the people. Industrious, frugal, and honest, he accumulated a considerable property. This is the simple story of his treatment. He was made to vote the democratic ticket and his vote was recorded for Samuel J. Tilden, but he was made so to vote by means and agencies which are disgraceful to civilization and which I cannot characterize too strongly. Indeed, the story of this poor man, badgered about, driven around, against whom no man could utter a word of reproach, although it had none of the tragic horror of some of these other tales, seemed to me one of the most impressive and pathetic that I heard of in this whole testimony.

I forbear to give the horrible details of the killing of Primus Johnson, Merrimon Rhodes, James Jackson, Ferdinand Binnum, Henry Pinkston, and others, for the details of these atrocities would lead me from the main purpose of the inquiry, as to intimidation in the parish, into disputed details about particular cases. That these men were killed on account of their politics, there can be no doubt whatever. Pinkston owes his death to his cheers and approval of a republican speech at a republican meeting but a few days before his death. He had previously voted a democratic ticket, but had refused to attend the democratic meeting and was a republican. The pretense that he was killed by negroes in consequence of a quarrel with Brooks is entirely rebutted by the circumstances of the case and by the testimony of Cora Williams and others.

No wonder that many men, among them Senators on this floor, repel the idea that this atrocity was committed by white men; but we cannot shield ourselves behind our pride of race. If in any community North or South you allow the worst boys and men to organize into rifle clubs licensed to ride at night disguized in organized, armed bands, free to enter the cabins of either negroes, Indians, or Chinamen, and whip and scourge and terrorize at pleasure without fear of punishment or danger to life or limb, there will be enough to do it, especially if you back them by a party organization like the democratic party. It was done more fearfully in New York City in 1863. It is not the people of the locality that commit the wrong. Theobalds and Saunders can be found anywhere; and when they are instructed to raid to intimidate voters some among them will ravish and kill. Their self-defense will compel all to shield such atrocious criminals, for in the eye of the law all are guilty of rape and murder. The fault lies in those who organized or advised such instruments of intimidation. General Patton and the democratic State committee in Louisiana knew full well in July, 1876, when they issued the confidential circular to the parishes of that State to organize clubs to ride on horseback "for amusement and interesting ceremonies" what would follow such advice. Truly, they said, "Proceedings of this character would impress the negroes with a sense of your united strength." They knew from the acts of the Ku Klux and the White Camelia what organized clubs riding on horseback for amusement meant. They knew that impressing the negroes meant terror, whipping, burglary, violence, murder, and rape. In a few suggestive words they converted the ordinary peaceful meetings and parades of freemen discussing and exercising their rights as freemen into armed and organized rifle clubs of marauders, night-hawks of murder and rape who have committed the offenses of which I in the brief compass of a speech can only give you examples. General Patton and the men who concurred with him are severally guilty of these offenses; and the democratic party and Mr. Tilden himself, if he or it by these crimes secures the vote of Louisiana, are guilty also.

I must return to the actual details in this parish.

W. H. Burwell, an active republican, was shot and captured by one of these bull-dozing companies while on a trip distributing republican tickets and compelled to burn them. Eaton Logwood, a pronounced republican and intelligent man, was shot at his own gate by two masked men, one of whom he recognized as belonging to the bull-dozing companies. Jesse Briggs, an active republican, had to hide up his chimney, and when found had pistols presented to his head and was reminded of the danger of continuing his political operations. Scores of men avoided sleeping in their houses at night to escape the persecutions and violent electioneering practices of these armed bull-dozers.

Upon the general questions I prefer to cite the testimony of Captain Clayton Hale, stationed at Monroe, in command of his company and the post, and who remained there from the 24th of September until after the election. His testimony is quite voluminous and I give brief extracts from it. Numerous cases reported by him are more directly proven by the testimony of other witnesses. He says:

Answer to interrogatory 8. The condition of affairs in Ouachita Parish at the dates referred to in my answer to the seventh interrogatory was very much unsettled. A strong feeling of political bitterness and intolerance was apparent among a large class of white persons, residents of it. Complaints were made to me daily by negroes of being driven from their homes, of being threatened, whipped, and treated with other acts of violence; of their houses invaded at night by masked and armed white men; of visits by committees from democratic clubs, and of notifications from such committees to join democratic clubs within stated periods, under penalty of death. So intense was the manifestation of intolerance and so determined was the threatening attitude of this lawless class of white men that the colored population of the parish seemed to have been reduced to the most abject condition of terror and helplessness. Mounted and armed organizations of white men were formed in different parts of the parish, and the acts and influence of these armed and mounted organizations seemed to have effectually repressed whatever law-abiding sentiment may have heretofore existed in the parish. In consideration of this state of affairs, I deemed it a measure of prudence to send detachments of troops to every republican meeting appointed to be held in remote parts of the parish to preserve the peace and prevent rioting and bloodshed.

Answer to interrogatory 9. I did send a detachment of eight men and a non-commissioned officer, under command of Lieutenant McCawley, to accompany Mr. Hardy, the district attorney pro tempore of Ouachita Parish, to the residence of Eaton Logwood on the night of October 10, ultimo. A murder had been committed on the morning of that day at that place. Primus Johnson (colored) had been shot and killed, and Eaton Logwood, another colored man, had been shot and dangerously wounded. Information of the murder of Johnson, the wounding of Logwood, and that the roads leading to the place were picketed and patrolled by armed men was communicated to me, and, on District-Attorney Hardy announcing his intention to proceed to the place to obtain the declarations of Logwood and other evidence concerning the murder of Johnson and the wounding of Logwood, I considered it my duty to send a detachment with him in order that he might do so in safety.

Answer to interrogatory 11. A number of colored persons residing near the place where Primus Johnson was killed and Eaton Logwood wounded did call upon me after the shooting and sought my advice and protection. They seemed almost paralyzed with terror, and announced, many of them, their intention to leave the country and find some place where they could live with some assurance of not being shot down at any moment.

Answer to interrogatory 12. Very many applications were made to me by colored people for protection. I cannot enumerate the number of such applications, nor by whom nor when made. They were made almost daily. They asked protection by reason of threats of violence having been made, by reason of many murders of colored people having been committed, and by reason of the general feeling of insecurity which seemed to prevail in every part of the parish.

Answer to interrogatory 13. No applications have been made to me for protection against white or colored republicans. It has been stated by white citizens of Ouachita Parish in my presence, in a general way, that republicans have been guilty of many acts of intimidation and violence, but no specific acts were mentioned and no complaints have been made to me by persons suffering by acts of violence at the hands of republicans, white or colored. In my opinion, the republicans of Oachita Parish, white and colored, were too much impressed with the uncertainty of their tenure of life to bring themselves prominently to the notice of democratic rifle companies, which would result from the commission of acts of violence on their part. To the best of my knowledge and belief, none have been committed by them.

Answer to interrogatory 14. I do know of my own knowledge that an attempt was made by persons styling themselves democrats to disturb a republican meeting at Saint James Chapel, in the parish of Ouachita, on the 3d day of November, the particulars of which will be more fully stated in my answers to interrogatories Nos. 18 and 19. Many other acts by persons known as democrats of actual rioting and of attempts to create disturbances have been reported to me at different times.

Answer to interrogatory 15. I do know that an armed body of mounted men, marching as cavalry, was on the roads on the island on the 3d day of November. I was informed at the time that it was a democratic rifle company, commanded by one William T. Theobald, (pronounced Tibbles.) This armed body of men was in attendance at a republican meeting at Saint James Chapel on that date, as will be more fully shown in answers to be given to interrogatories Nos. 18 and 19. Lieutenant Henry M. McCawley, Thirteenth United States Infantry, reported officially to me that the same body of armed men was on the road and in attendance at a republican meeting held at Grody's school-house on the island on the 1st of November. It has also been reported to me by many colored people residing on the island that the same body of mounted and armed men has frequently, during the month of October and in the first days of November, been on different roads in the various portions of the island, and has attacked the houses of many colored people at different times and places, committing acts of murder, violence, and intimidation upon their occupants. * * *

Answer to interrogatory 16. I do most certainly believe that the organization of these armed bodies of men, the patrolling by them of the roads in the different sections of the parish of Ouachita, did have a very decided influence in preventing a fair and free election in that parish on the 7th day of November, 1876.

Answer to interrogatory 18. I was present at a republican meeting held at Saint James Chapel on the island, in Ouachita Parish, on the 3d day of November, 1876; that attempt was made on that occasion by armed white man belonging to Theobald's democratic rifle company to disturb and break up that meeting and intimidate the persons attending it. That the attitude of these men was menacing toward the speakers and toward the colored people in attendance. That I was present, accompanied by an orderly, and had a detachment of United States troops with their arms in stack about one hundred yards distant from the place of meeting. That I was standing on the outskirts of the crowd in attendance, composed largely of colored people, men and women. That Mr. Astwood, the first speaker, had just commenced his address when these persons made a rush for the wagon from which he was speaking, several of them attempting to draw their revolvers while doing so, and all or most of them denouncing his statements as "damned lies," and calling him a "damned liar." That the colored people, men and women, were much alarmed at these hostile demonstrations, the most of them turning to flee from the ground.

Answer to interrogatory 19. I did interfere to preserve order on the occasion referred to in my answer to interrogatory 18. When I saw the crowd of colored people swaying back from the stand of the speaker and heard the angry denunciation by these men of the speaker's statements as "damned lies" and he as a "damned liar," I rushed through the flying crowd of negroes. Springing in front of these men, I pushed them back with my sword from the wagon in which the speaker was standing, admonishing them to discontinue their unlawful attempt at violence; that their language and acts were calculated to produce a breach of the peace, and that I would, if necessary, use the detachment of troops to preserve order and prevent acts of violence on their part. The aspect of affairs was for a few moments very threatening, but quiet was fully restored—these men assuring me that they would refrain from further acts of violence, and that they would not again attempt to interrupt the speaker. After this the meeting was reasonably quiet, these men contenting themselves with denouncing in undertones the statements of the speakers as "damned lies," and conversing with each other. That after the close of the meeting these men mounted their horses, marching in military formation as cavalry from the ground. That from frequent observations of columns of cavalry, I should judge that there were of these men present on that occasion about sixty in number, all of them armed with revolvers belted around their waists, underneath their coats.

The story of Benjamin James, who was examined orally, shows the manner in which the ballot-box was seized, he shot, and the election entirely defeated:

That he is constable of the said ward, and was appointed deputy marshal for poll No. 2 of ward 2, and constable for the supervisor of the election, and as such had charge of the ballot-box; that he lives twelve miles from the poll; that he started for the poll at Filhiol's store with the ballot-box at one o'clock the morning of the 7th of November, 1876, on horseback; that he got about two miles of the way when he was halted at the end of the line by two men, white men. It was a bright moonlight night. They asked me which way I was going. I told them that I was going to Logtown with the box. They said they had better see Mr. Head. They called him, and he answered them. Two others came up who had guns. One was named Cook; I did not know the others. They were all white men. Head then came up and asked me which way I was going. I told him I was going to Logtown with the ballot-box. He told me I could not go yet; wait a while. He asked me what I had in the ballot-box. I said papers; that he knew what was generally put in. He said "Well, you must go down to headquarters to have the ballot-box examined." Head ordered the two young men who came up last to get on their horses and go with affiant to headquarters. They got on their horses with their guns. One had a shot-gun and the other a breech-loader, or something after that pattern. They said "Let us go and all ride off." Some one, after myself and my guard rode off a little ways, said "Hold on." A man named Rills came up and run his hand round my body and said, "Ben., it ain't worth while to take your pistol down there with you," and took it off, and said he would give it back to me when I came back. I said, "Yes, I would have to have it, for I am special constable for that day." He said, "Go ahead; all right." We went on about fifty yards and were again halted by the challenge, "Halt! who comes there?" One of the guards replied "Scott." Then one of the guards went forward and whispered. The challenger said, "Right; pass through." The one who challenged was armed with a gun. We went on and were halted about same distance by two armed men, in same way as before. One of my guards rode ahead and whispered, when the reply was "Right; pass through." We went on about the same distance when we were again halted, and the reply "Scott" made to challenge. One of my guards advanced as before and whispered, and was told "All right; pass on." I was then brought in front of headquarters, being Joe Mitchell's house. We then stopped and got off at the fire. Some men were standing round and some were lying round. All that were up were armed, and arms lying round for those lying down. It was a regular camp. There were to my mind at least seventy-five or eighty armed men there. They whispered some for a while, when one of the company rode off toward Joe Mitchell's house, and left Bucks Mines standing there with me. Joe Mitchell and Bob Endon rode up near where I was. They talked some time. I heard Mitchell say, "All right." Endon then rode off. Mitchell then said, "Boys, get your horses," and came riding up toward me and said to me, "March on down the road." I asked him "Shall I ride or walk?" He said I could do either, and if I did not ride, I could let my pony be there. I whirled off and got about ten steps, and broke off and run. I knew from the conversation among them that they were going to kill me. I ran into the woods, and as soon as I ran they began shooting at me. Job Mitchell rode right after me on his horse, shooting at me with his pistol. I got within forty or fifty feet of Colonel Pargoud's farm, when Mitchell fired his gun at me and shot me in the right arm and broke it. Mitchell was then between the company and me, riding after me, hallooing back to the others not to shoot him, (Mitchell.) This stopped the others firing at me, and it was a shot from Mitchell's gun that hit me. I fell in a ditch and crawled up the bank, then, finding that I could not get on any farther, I gave up. Mitchell rode up and said, "Damn him, I'll fix him." Mitchell got off his horse and came to me on the ditch, run round me and ran the pistol under my head, that is, between my head and the ground, for I was lying helpless, stretched out. When he got it along my temple he fired, aiming to blow my brains out. I then became speechless; after some time I came to. The ball had passed alongside of my temple, and went upward along my head, cutting the temple. He had missed shooting me through the temple from the position of his pistol being alongside of my temple instead of the muzzle being square against it. The shot was aimed to kill me. When I came to, I looked around and found they were all gone. I got up as soon as I could, supporting my wounded arm with my other hand, and walked on toward home. From loss of blood, I fainted. I was bleeding from the temple and the arm, and found that I was also shot through the leg, and one shot taking effect in the back of my head, partially breaking the skull bone, also a shot grazing my side. I fainted after I had traveled about three-quarters of a mile. This was about two o'clock in the morning of the 7th November, 1876.

As a prelude to these atrocities the sheriff of the parish, G. B. Hamlet, who was elected sheriff in 1874 by a majority of over 900, testifies that he had difficulty in discharging the duties of his office after the organization of the rifle companies. Having occasion to apply for a posse to execute process, he was referred to Dr. Aby, who acted as commander-in-chief of the rifle companies:

I went to Dr. Aby, and asked for a posse. He spoke to me in a very harsh manner, saying, "The damned radicals have got in this trouble, and we do not want any of your protection." I informed Dr. Aby that I did not propose to protect any one, knowing from their appearance that they did not need any protection. I made this demand on Dr. Aby for a posse of men to preserve the peace. I was then refused the assistance. I then went to my office and prepared written summons for those men whom I saw armed and mounted to act as my posse. I attempted to serve said summons on the parties to whom they were directed. The parties refused to accept them, saying they were members of the rifle company and not deputy sheriffs. One of these men was T. S. Richmond. Captain William R. Hardy, district attorney pro tempore for the parish of Ouachita, informed me that Mr. A. L. Slack, a prominent lawyer of Ouachita, informed me officially that he was lieutenant of the rifle company, and they would not obey any summons that Hamlet might serve on them. This is the first time that the whites ever refused to act for me as a posse.

Various efforts made by him to enforce process were resisted, and shortly after the murder of Dr. Dinkgrave armed men came into Monroe.

The arrival of the armed men in Monroe did create quite an excitement among the colored republicans. They stacked arms back of the grave-yard where Dr. B. H. Dinkgrave was buried. They came in town in large numbers, walking through the streets. I was informed by some colored people that these men were making threats against the republicans. This is some of their actions that alarmed the republicans.

I was advised to leave the parish by prominent democrats, and was asked not to mention their names. I was also advised by republicans, and I believe that if I had remained in the parish on the night of the 2d of September, and previous to the arrival of the United States troops, I would have been killed. Other republicans left the parish for the same reason.

He closes his testimony with the details of a number of murders, outrages, and wrongs upon republican voters, and says that from his intimate knowledge the election was carried by these acts of intimidation, when, by a free and fair election, the republican majority would have been as large as usual. From the organization of the rifle clubs until the day of election there was no color of authority in this parish of Ouachita except what was exercised by them. No process could be served, no courts could be held, and no crimes could be punished. Of the numberless crimes committed by the members of rifle clubs no one has been, and no one could be, called to account; and the people of Ouachita, both white and black, were as completely overawed during this time as the people of Paris were during the worst days of the French revolution. Strange as it may seem, although these crimes are admitted, no one has been punished for them. The courts were broken up, the juries dispersed, and this overriding force was the only law in these parishes. The worst elements of society were the leading actors in these tragedies, and sober citizens and planters, though ever so much opposed, dared not utter a word of expostulation. To call an election free and peaceable under these circumstances is a libel upon the name, and to count the votes then cast for any man for any office would be a shameless burlesque upon republican institutions.

Perhaps the best illustration of the extent to which this intimidation was carried was the manner in which these rifle companies, these regulators, treated William H. Hunt, who was the candidate of the republican party for the office of attorney-general of the State. He is a prominent citizen of New Orleans, a native of the South, with all his interests and associations there. He canvassed this part of the State and attended two meetings in this parish. I give extracts from his testimony:

To the twelfth interrogatory. I left New Orleans on the evening of the 19th October in company with J. Duvigneaud, esq., for Monroe, Ouachita. The Hon. John Ray met us at the train and accompanied us, and the next morning I was introduced to Mr. O. H. Brewster, who was also on the train. We were all to address a republican meeting at Monroe on the 21st October. On reaching Monroe at dusk, Mr. Duvigneaud and myself went to a hotel. We were called upon in the evening by some eight or ten white republicans, and also by quite a number of colored republicans. They all appeared alarmed for their personal safety, and represented that their lives were in danger on account of their political principles. They stated that Dr. Dinkgrave had been assassinated in the day-time in the public streets of the village several weeks before; that he was an active republican, and had commenced to organize the party when he was killed; that soon after his death bodies of armed men from the neighborhood had ridden through the parish and through the streets of the towns, spreading consternation and alarm among colored and white republicans; that a short time afterward a school-house for colored children had been set on fire and burned, and that this outrage had been followed by the assassination by disguised persons in open day of Primus Johnson and Longwood, two colored men who had entered the school-house near their home, when they were shot; that this act and other deeds of violence and bloodshed had increased the consternation and terror already prevailing among the colored people; that two of Dinkgrave's brothers had fled from Monroe to save their lives; that Hamlet, the sheriff, and several other prominent republicans, had also been obliged to flee; that threatening letters had been written to other republicans who were absent, warning them not to return to the parish; that night-riders were in the habit of visiting the houses of colored republicans, and of committing unprovoked acts of violence upon colored men and their families. It was represented to us that a reign of terror prevailed among the republicans, and especially among the colored people in the town and throughout the entire parish. My intercourse with a large number of persons, both white and colored, satisfied me that the condition of things was as they represented it. On the morning after our arrival grave doubts were expressed by the republicans of the town as to whether the colored people would venture to attend our meeting, although it had been generally announced throughout the parish for some time previous. In spite of these apprehensions, however, a considerable number of people came into the town from the neighborhood. Some difficulty was found in obtaining the proper person to act as president, several persons declining to do so because they feared the consequences of such prominence. At length, Mr. Hardy, the district attorney, consented to preside. The first speaker introduced to the meeting was Judge Leonard, the republican candidate for Congress. He had uttered only a few sentences when he was interrupted by a red-headed ruffian, who stood immediately in front of and below him, as he was speaking from a platform, and calling him a liar. The interruption was not noticed, and Judge Leonard proceeded to deliver another sentence, when the same individual exclaimed, "It's a damned lie," or, "You are a damned liar." Judge L. paused and appealed to the audience, to know whether he was to be insulted in so gross and unprovoked a manner. At this moment, Colonel Frank Stubbs, a democratic gentleman, of Monroe, who was present and whom I knew, came up to the man and took him away.

A short time before the meeting, in riding through the streets of Monroe, I had encountered this same person coming into town on horseback, in company with another, and followed at a little distance by two other horsemen, whom I supposed to be of the same party. Their ruffianly appearance and insolent demeanor in passing me had attracted my observation. I recognized these persons, as I thought, at the time of this interruption, standing with others scattered about the audience, and some one remarked to me upon the stand that there was a company of them there, evidently for the purpose of disturbing the meeting, and so breaking it up. As I saw them from the stand, I believed that such was their purpose. Before I rose to speak Mr. Duvigneaud came to where I was seated, and expressed the same belief, and urged me to be cautious in what I might say, as there were men there armed, apparently ready for violence. Judge Leonard was repeatedly interrupted afterward during his speech, not, however, in the same rude manner. When I rose and had commenced to speak, I saw indications, as I thought, of a purpose to interrupt and intimidate me. I endeavored by a few words to check such demonstrations, however, and was permitted to proceed with my speech, without further molestation. Afterward, Mr. Brewster was interrupted and insulted during the course of his speech by the same person who had insulted Judge Leonard. This person was prevented from pursuing his insults by Lieutenant McCawley, of the United States Army, who induced him to desist and to go away to a distance. The meeting thus terminated without any act of violence. The next morning, I learned that two colored men had been shot on their way home from the meeting an hour or so after it adjourned. One was reported killed, the other wounded. Their offense was that they had attended the meeting. The same man who had insulted Judge Leonard and Mr. Brewster was arrested subsequently, charged with the crime.

The next day we left Monroe to go to Bastrop, in Morehouse Parish, about thirty miles distant. Our road lay through a large tract of country in Ouachita, known as the "island." It is a strongly republican section. Our party consisted of myself, Mr. Duvigneaud, and Mr. Brewster, in one wagon, and Judge Leonard, Mr. Gorham, and a Mr. Taylor, in another. The day was Sunday; the weather was fine, and we drove slowly, stopping very frequently to speak to the colored people, who were generally at home or conversing together on the road-side. Mr. Brewster seemed to know or to be known to nearly every colored man, woman, and child whom we met, and to be received by them with kindness and consideration wherever we went. We must have stopped forty or fifty times on the island; and in every instance we gave notice that a republican meeting was to be held at the Grady school-house on Tuesday morning, at ten o'clock. Wherever we stopped colored people expressed their delight at seeing us; said that they were republicans, and were anxious to attend republican meetings and to be allowed to vote. They seemed depressed by terror; complained of violence committed upon themselves or their neighbors, and that their lives even had been threatened if they attended republican meetings. Some of them wore democratic badges, and said that they had been forced to join democratic clubs for the sake of peace. Many were re-assured by our presence, and upon being promised protection said they would attend the meeting; others, however, still said they were afraid to do so. Numbers declared that they had been afraid to sleep at home for weeks, and others complained of acts of violence inflicted upon them because they had refused to join the clubs and renounce their republicanism.

There were but two or three instances where the men declared themselves to be really democrats.

At Bastrop we addressed a republican meeting the next day, Monday. The meeting was several times interrupted by democrats. In the course of my speech I was insulted publicly by a young man in the audience. After a few words of reproof I was permitted to conclude my speech without further interruption. Mr. Gorham, who followed me, was also interrupted, and weapons were drawn and men jumped upon the speakers' platform, when, by the timely interference of Lieutenant Mahon, United States Army, violence was checked and order restored. This last scene I did not witness myself. I was absent for a short time, and returned just after it occurred. On Tuesday we left Bastrop to return to the Grady school-house, where our meeting had been announced to take place on the island. We were soon stopped on our way by colored people, who came out of their houses and informed us that they were afraid to attend our meeting, because the night before armed men had ridden to their houses and threatened them if they did so; soon we met others returning from the school-house, saying that they had been there and had been driven away by armed white men whom they found there. Many of these Mr. Brewster induced to return or promise to return, assuring them that their fears were groundless, and that we would protect them against harm. It soon became apparent from the alarm prevailing among others whom we continued to meet that such efforts to rally them would be unavailing, and I advised Mr. Brewster to desist from making them. As we turned into a lane leading to the school-house we met four mounted men riding abreast toward us. They were respectably clad, and two of them were recognized by Mr. Brewster as residents in the neighborhood. As they filed past us Mr. Brewster saluted them. They returned his salutation with angry looks only, and rode on in the direction from which we had just come. On our arrival at the school-house we found several white men, six or eight, seated on a log, evidently awaiting us. They received us with lowering looks, and when we alighted from our wagon we became the evident subject of their insulting conversation.

Quite a number of colored persons were in the neighborhood of the school-house, most of them a short distance away. Mr. Brewster spoke with many of them, and so did Mr. Gorham, who had occupied a seat in our wagon from Bastrop. They stated that they had been told before we arrived that there would be no meeting there, but that, on seeing us in the distance, they had awaited our coming. Other colored people continued coming toward the school-house. In the mean time there had been a number of accessions to the party of white men. Many of these appeared to be under great excitement. Mr. Brewster knew two of them, and one of these told him that they were living, as it were, over a keg of gunpowder, which might at any moment explode, and injure God knows who. Another man, named Collins, was introduced to me by Mr. Brewster. He seemed in an extraordinary condition of mental and physical agitation. While I was conversing with him another of the party rudely joined in the conversation. He had a revolver in his belt, which he showed openly. I remarked to Collins that I was sorry to hear reports of disquietude in parts of the State. The man behind me inquired "What parts?" I replied, "In various parts, and I had heard, in Ouachita." His answer was, "It is a damned lie." I told him I had not been conversing with him, but with Mr. Collins, and that I did not desire to be interrupted, and in such language; that I was unused to such interruptions. He answered me rudely, and about this time a colored woman, who had learned my name, called to me and beckoned me aside, with a countenance full of excitement and concern. She begged me to come away from that man, saying that he might take my life, and that he had already threatened to take hers after we left; and she begged me when we should leave to carry her with us, because she considered she would be in danger if left behind. I endeavored to quiet her fears, and while doing so Lieutenant McCawley, of the United States Army, followed by an orderly, was seen approaching us. By the advice of Mr. Duvigneaud and myself, the colored people had been told by Mr. Brewster and Mr. Gorham that they had better go home, because it had been determined to have no meeting. So many people had been sent home before our arrival at the school-house, so many had been prevented from coming by threats, that neighbors and those who were there were so fearful of the consequences to themselves after we left, that we deemed it unsafe to endeavor to hold our meeting with the few remaining about there. Mr. Brewster stating this determination to Collins, the latter expressed himself as greatly relieved at the intelligence. Lieutenant McCawley stated that he was there to preserve the peace, and if we desired to have our meeting, that we should be protected; but we adhered to our determination not to hold it. It appears that some one had applied to the commandant of the troops at Monroe for a guard to be sent to the school-house at 12 o'clock. Not knowing this we had appointed our meeting for 10 o'clock. The guard arrived at ten minutes before noon, and was thus too late to prevent the failure of our meeting. We returned to Ouachita that night, and left the next morning.

This testimony of Mr. Hunt, corroborated as it is by several witnesses and illustrated by proof of the actual crimes and violence committed in that parish, shows that there can be no pretense of a free and fair election. Even the efforts of moderate men to prevent an undue display of violence were controlled by the reckless and desperate ruffians who were enlisted in this work. A community where nearly three to one were blacks; where more than two to one were republicans, was thus overawed and intimidated so that the result of the vote was changed from a republican majority of 700 to a democratic majority of 800. The influence of this intimidation extended in widening circles through the adjoining parishes and affected thousands of votes outside. The story of the murder of Dr. Dinkgrave, Primus Johnson, and others, was carried by rumor and with exaggeration to every cabin in that region, and hundreds who were not in danger fled to the swamps or surrendered their convictions and voted the democratic ticket. It is difficult to define the extent of country to which intimidation would go under such circumstances; for these negroes knew they were unarmed, that any attempt to gather arms would only invite assassination. They were accustomed to obey the authority of the whites, who had intelligence, discipline, and means, while they had nothing but numbers and brute force. It is probable that the lesson taught to the negroes of Ouachita in the recent election will be so ground into them that hereafter such wholesale crime cannot be committed with impunity. The law of self-defense taught to them by the inquiry that they know has been made into these events, will induce such a discipline and organization that it would be very unsafe to repeat these crimes at the same place. It is shown that parishes bull-dozed two years ago this year were allowed to have a free, fair, and peaceable election; and it is probable that these five parishes I have selected as examples will hereafter be free from such intimidation. If they submit a second time to it they do not deserve to be free.

I could extend this inquiry into all the parishes where protests were made and where intimidation was alleged. In some of them it extended only to a single polling place or precinct; in others it affected the regularity of the election. It varied in degree and nature in each parish. I have already given sufficient to show that the intimidation in Louisiana of which the evidence was before the returning board, upon which alone they could act, was of so overwhelming and criminal a character that honest men sworn to act upon this testimony could not do otherwise than as the members of this board have done. As to the particular polls that were excluded or admitted, as to the details which entered into their final decision, I have no means of knowing; but before God and man, with this testimony before me, with the knowledge acquired of the history of Louisiana in my place here in the Senate and from my visit to New Orleans, I would consider any man forsworn who could say that in these parishes there was a free and honest election. In this country, where our institutions rest entirely upon popular suffrage; where the freedom of election is the corner-stone of every part of our system, a crime which strikes at these foundations ought to be resisted by every man of every party. It cannot be denied that of late years an election fraud is not regarded in the same light that it was years ago, and that many men thoughtlessly ridicule and smile at all complaints against election frauds. This is no doubt caused by the success of such frauds in Louisiana, notably in the case of New York in 1868, and especially throughout the Southern States, where this intimidation now has been organized and has been successful for a number of years. But the very moment this system extends to other parts of this country, and poisons the elections in the Northern and Western States, then our Government is at an end. No system like ours can survive the general feeling that the elections are controlled by fraud or force. More or less influence of a doubtful or improper character will enter into every election. This is unavoidable from the imperfections of human nature; but when this fraud assumes the form of wholesale ballot-box stuffing, or palpable, open frauds, sufficiently great to control an election; or worse, when it assumes the form of murder, whipping, violence, and outrage, then the sooner the system is abandoned the better. Law-abiding men and property-holders would rather submit to a regular, orderly, despotic government than to a government where the worst and lowest elements of human society control all the powers of the government. It is not a question that we can evade or avoid; but we ought, without distinction of party, with a firm hand and determined purpose, resist every organized effort of fraud, or violence, or intimidation at elections. It is for this reason that I would regard the election of Mr. Tilden by the direct operation of these terrible crimes as the greatest misfortune that could befall our country. Ten thousand times better for all of us, and for future ages, would it be had he been elected by an undisputed majority and an overwhelming vote. I do not fear him or his four years' influence as President; but I do fear the means by which he has been elected, if elected at all. His election by such agencies will be the beginning of the end; for if he may be elected by such means, then any man hereafter, by the use of great sums of money, or by appeals to the prejudices of race, or by the jealousies of religious sects, or by the natural division between nationalities, may hope by similar crimes to destroy our country by a war of factions.

Our only safety is in a fair election and in honest and prompt acquiescence in the result of such an election. There is nowhere among the American people a general disposition to resist the election of either Governor Tilden or Governor Hayes, if fairly elected. I know, for the people of Ohio, among whom Governor Hayes was born, that they would resent any advantage obtained by him through means that are dishonest, dishonorable, through violence, fraud, or corruption. We only appeal to the democratic party to act upon the same general principle. If you need the vote of Louisiana to elect Samuel J. Tilden, he is not elected President of the United States. His term of office would be dishonored from the beginning. The blood of hundreds of men would rest upon his skirt and enter into the title of his office. His chief accessories before the fact would be such men as Patton and the democratic committee of Louisiana. His instruments will have been rifle-clubs and raiders, fighting and frightening poor negroes out of their votes. No republican need fear that by standing by the legal judgment of the board of returning officers he wrongs any one, for no honest man can read the facts and evidence without feeling convinced that, if there had been a free and fair election in Louisiana in the fifty-seven parishes of that State, as there was in forty parishes, Governor Hayes would have had a majority of 10,000 votes. We know also that in Mississippi and Alabama and to some extent in Georgia there were influences entering into the election which prevented tens of thousands of republican votes being cast; that from the moral convictions drawn from an examination of election returns the State of Mississippi is now recorded for Governor Tilden, when it should be recorded for Governor Hayes. Governor Hayes has received 4,044,895 votes, and a majority in twenty-two States. He has carried all the States formerly classified as free States, except four. If the apportionment of representation had been based upon the white vote alone, he would have been elected by a large majority of the electoral colleges. That it is also based upon the black vote was only upon the condition and for the reason that the blacks should have the free right to the elective franchise. The Southern States now enjoy political power derived from this condition; they have not complied with it. They are enjoying political power by the fifteenth amendment wrongly and without complying with the conditions upon which it was given. They have the benefit of all this in the electoral colleges. The popular majority claimed for them is made up almost exclusively by the unnatural majorities given in States where they have denied to a greater or less degree to legal voters the elective franchise. They have no just right, according to the forms of law or its spirit, to the votes of Louisiana, South Carolina, and Florida. These votes have been legally cast, by electors duly returned and duly chosen, for Governor Hayes. You cannot reverse this without giving effect to lawless violence and intimidation. You cannot deprive the republican candidates of these electoral votes without defeating the honest choice of the majority of the people of these States.

And now, sir, in conclusion I may be justified in saying a few words partly personal and partly as to the general situation in Louisiana.

Upon our return from New Orleans the gentlemen who were with me and I were charged by partisan papers with all manner of offenses. It was said that our expenses were paid by the Secretary of the Treasury. This is utterly false, but scarcely needs correction in this presence. It was said that I went there for Governor Hayes, to take all advantage in his favor. This is not true. I went at the request of the President, at great personal inconvenience, and from a sense of duty, as if to witness a deed or will or to obey the informal summons of a court. Governor Hayes did not know I was going until I was on the way. It was said we were there as partisans. It is true we are republicans, and I am proud of it; but I did not do an act or utter a word or suggest an idea in aid of the result arrived at by the returning board or of a partisan character. I always favored the utmost publicity consistent with the performance of the duty by the day fixed by law; and considered that my duty was best performed by quiet observance of the proceedings and a candid reading of the testimony and the papers as they became accessible to me. My intercourse with the democratic committee was courteous and friendly.

As to the people of Louisiana, they have my heart-felt sympathy. Gladly would I do anything or vote for any measure that would relieve them from their painful and dangerous condition, with their heavy debt, high taxes, and warring factions. Especially do I sympathize with the owners of the land and the actual tillers of the soil. Every motive of interest and safety demands an alliance between these two elements of society and a war offensive and defensive against all who live by politics alone or who support or encourage fraud or violence. I assure you from what I heard there is a yearning among the poor blacks in Louisiana for order and protection; but it is the yearning almost of despair which when reached will in retaliation overthrow all law. And so with the planters; they have but little care whether it is Tilden or Hayes. They are becoming prosperous. Their crops are good and bear a good price. In the parishes not disturbed by rifle clubs they are getting on good terms with their hands, with mutual profit to both. With the instinct of locality, the love of home, the freedman in a great number of cases clings to the plantation where he was a slave or returns to it after a temporary absence. He either buys or rents a piece of land and cultivates it in severalty. Mutual interests will soon blend these people into harmonious action. And so in New Orleans there was manifestly growing prosperity. The sight of their long wharves and immense piles of cotton bags, and of sugar, molasses, corn, &c., was one of the most cheering possible. The success of the jetty system will enormously increase their commerce. They need nothing but order, protection, and close economy in their local governments to encourage capital, to increase their production, and to place them among the wealthiest communities of the world. From their people I received nothing but courtesy and kindness. They are good-humored and polite, open-hearted and hospitable. To exorcise the demon of discord that has made portions of this State a hell on earth is the noblest object of statesmanship, but the primal principle of this policy must be to make every man secure in his house, his home, his property, and his vote. The success of these crimes would be a fatal step to such a policy. The negro can remember if he cannot read. You must win him by kindness under some other name than that of the democratic party. It so happens that the two candidates for governor were men of mark, ability, and honor. General Nicholls, the democratic candidate, was spoken of as a just, moderate, sensible man, respected by all parties. And so with Mr. Packard. He is an able, strong man, reared in Maine, but a resident of Louisiana for twelve years; married there; and now, with his growing family, he and all he has or hopes for is planted in that soil as firmly as if to the manner born. It would be a calamity and a shame if a contest between such men for such an office should disturb the now growing hopes and industry of the people of Louisiana.

I have expressed my conviction that according to the form and spirit of the law of Louisiana, rightly applied by the returning officers, Governor Hayes and the republican State ticket rightfully received the vote of that State; but while this fact is honestly disputed I will hear and consider any argument, and will so vote as to secure an orderly, peaceful, and legal count of the vote, not only of Louisiana, but of all the disputed States. If in the process of the count preliminary questions arise, I will hope that a fair and summary process will be devised to determine them; and if wrong is done, that a legal process may be devised to try that question before the judicial tribunals. At this time, when our institutions are on trial before mankind, I am proud to recognize the general forbearance of our people and their readiness to acquiesce in any legal result. Let that feeling animate both Houses of Congress and this singularly close presidential election, so often pointed out as the greatest danger to our form of government, will be settled in the quiet acquiescence of the American people.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President——

Mr. BOUTWELL. Does the Senator from Missouri desire to proceed to-night?

Mr. BOGY. No, sir; not at length.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will move then that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BOGY. I would prefer to say a few words first.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I have heard, and indeed I may well say that we have all heard, to-day the most painful and humiliating speech ever made on the floor of the Senate of the United States. I have been amazed for the last two hours at the most singular speech made by the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] A speech of that kind to me is utterly incomprehensible; and if the facts related by him are true, if the social condition of Louisiana is what it has been represented to-day to be, why, sir, we have retrograded back to the darkest ages of barbarism. If the people of Louisiana are the murderers, the villains, and the assassins, and the law-breakers represented here to-day, it is not only a disgrace to that people but to the nation, and a blot upon our history.

But are these things true? That the testimony spoken of by the Senator from Ohio has been taken in New Orleans is beyond all doubt; but that testimony in not one single instance has been taken under the law or sanctioned by the law of Louisiana, and the gentleman, although often asked to reply to that fact, has never yet given a reply to the charge made that there was no law for taking this testimony and which consists of affidavits taken in the city of New Orleans, long after the election, and made by unknown vagabonds and perjured villains, such as you will find in all communities and particularly in large cities, and perhaps more as you approach the hot clime of the tropics than in northern countries—men gathered into the large city of New Orleans from all the different parishes of the State of Louisiana to sign affidavits written for them by men as guilty as the party hired to do the swearing. Nine times out of ten they are not signed by the men who swore to them. You have only their mark.

I do not rise to-day, Mr. President, to reply to the speech of the Senator from Ohio. I rise merely to give expression to the feelings which move me at this time after having heard this most singular and remarkable speech. The testimony taken by the democratic side of this question has just been laid upon our tables. I have not yet had time to examine it. It is my intention to do so, and it is my intention and desire to ask permission of the Senate at a future time to express my views upon this subject. I think it can be shown from what I have read in the testimony taken on the side represented by the Senator from Ohio that in all the parishes of which he has spoken this story of crime and murder can be explained, and that the majority of cases is the result of the peculiar condition of society brought on that State by the fact that a large number of colored people, but recently emancipated from bondage, are not yet in a condition to enjoy in a proper and regulated way the rights which have been secured to them by the amendment to the Constitution.

The condition of Louisiana is bad, and we understand why it is so; the main and great reason is that men have been sent there, like Kellogg and Packard and others, who have no interest there, and had none when they went there, and have none now, and whose only object is to retain office, that they may thereby amass fortunes by a system of recognized robbery. While this State is in the possession of these men, who have appointed all the registrars of registration, all the commissioners of election, all the supervisors of election, and the entire frame-work of government is in their hands, without any limit whatsoever, they should be held responsible to the world for the bad condition of things existing in Louisiana to-day.

The assassinations of Pinkston, of Dinkgrave, and of Gair were not committed for political purposes, but it is well known were committed for other purposes, and by blacks themselves in their quarrels among themselves; and yet we heard to-day from the Senator from Ohio that these assassinations and murders were perpetrated for political purposes. This I deny, and he cannot sustain the correctness of his assertion. Mr. President, it is due to the people of Louisiana and to the people of the United States that these things shall be further and faithfully investigated. I am somewhat acquainted with the people of Louisiana, and I say here, what I know to be true, that they are as law-abiding, as peaceable, as quiet, as virtuous, and as good as any other people in any other State of the Union. The white people of Louisiana are the peers in point of morality and intelligence of the white people of any other State, and yet if what we heard to-day related by the Senator from Ohio be true they are the most abandoned of mankind and are a disgrace to the age and to the nation.

I am perfectly satisfied, and if I were not, no party feeling could induce me to say it, that the democratic party in Louisiana did not commit these outrages. The very circular alluded to by the Senator from Ohio, which has been perverted by him and others, is a document that no party or people should be ashamed of. It is proper. It does not contain any word but what is perfectly proper and could be issued in any State of the Union. Yet efforts have been made to make it appear that that circular was the foundation of the bull-dozing which has taken place in that State. It is a part of the document on our table. I have read it with care, and I stand by every word of it and would put my name to it at any time.

These affidavits were made in the city of New Orleans without authority of law, nine times out of ten by colored people—not that I wish to say on this occasion that the colored people are more given to perjury than the white people; nine times out of ten these affidavits are of colored men brought away from their parishes to the city of New Orleans. There in the custom-house they made their mark to these affidavits, not one of whom could read a word of what had been written for them. And are we to receive that kind of testimony to throw a blot upon the fair fame of the people of the State of Louisiana? Are we to receive that kind of testimony so as to prevent Mr. Tilden from getting the vote of that State? If it be true that the democratic party obtained a majority in Louisiana by the means related by the Senator from Ohio, he ought not to be inaugurated as President; but if that be not true, and by fraud and perjury of all kinds he is robbed of the votes fairly given to him and not given to Hayes, could he, to quote the language of the Senator, afford to accept the position? Yet the effort made there, the effort made here, the effort we have heard to-day, is to wrench from the free voters of the people of Louisiana the free vote which they gave for Tilden, and by this system of fraud, unheard of in the history of the world, transfer it to Hayes. Can Governor Hayes assume the possession of the office of President of the United States by the vote of Louisiana secured to him in this way? Can it be possible that he would consent to this? I have never seen him, and do not know him, but I have heard that he was a gentleman of character and of probity, and I cannot believe that he would be willing to place himself before the world in so disgraceful a position. To obtain power by daring deeds is somewhat respectable, but by fraud it is contemptible.

Mr. President, I now give notice that at a future day, not far ahead, I shall feel it to be my duty, as well as I may be able, to reply to the speech made by the Senator from Ohio. I will examine this testimony with care and all the labor in my power to bestow, and at a proper time, not far ahead, I will ask the permission of the Senate to hear me for a few moments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Before the Senator from Missouri takes his seat I should like to understand better than I am able to from the remarks he has submitted, whether he denies the fact of the crimes as set forth by the Senator from Ohio, or whether, admitting the fact, he explains the commission of those crimes upon other than political grounds?

Mr. BOGY. I shall be able to give to the Senator from Massachusetts a much more intelligent answer when I have carefully examined the testimony; but in the mean time I will say this: Although it may be true that many of these crimes have been perpetrated in Louisiana, in a majority of cases they were perpetrated among and by the colored men themselves. In very few instances, if any, were they brought about by political motives or objects. These men called "regulators" in the State of Louisiana were not political organizations; they were organizations made for self-protection. It can be shown, and will be shown here, that this man Theobald, of whom you have heard to-day, is a gentleman of high standing, and as unwilling to commit murder as the Senator from Massachusetts; and, although it is true that murders have been perpetrated in Louisiana, I say in a majority of cases they arose from the enmities existing between colored men themselves, and owing to the peculiar conditions surrounding them, and not instigated by political motives.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I have only to say that, aggravated as the condition of things is in a criminal aspect in Louisiana and other States, it is some relief, looking to the civilization of those sections, to be told that these crimes proceed from political causes. If they exist there as the normal condition of society, then indeed we have very little to hope from the future; and it is no mitigation of the circumstances connected with these criminal acts to be assured that they do not proceed from political causes. I have no doubt whatever that for the main part they proceed from political causes, and instead of being surprised at the enormity of the array of criminal facts as set forth by the honorable Senator from Ohio, I was in some degree relieved, because my experience in the neighboring State of Mississippi, as set forth in the report made to the Senate at the last session, contains a much more fearful array of crimes attributable to political causes than have been set forth by the honorable Senator from Ohio this morning; and there is hope either that there has been reformation in that section of the country, or that the State of Louisiana is less afflicted with criminal tendencies than the neighboring State of Mississippi.

Mr. BOGY. I will say this with regard to Mississippi, that I have not read the report entirely; I have looked over it more than once; but I believe with regard to Mississippi as I believe with regard to Louisiana that nine-tenths of the testimony taken by the gentleman who went there as a member of the committee (not that I connect him with any fraud or anything of that kind) is greatly exaggerated, and resting generally, only on a bare color of truth. The worst men in the community and in the different counties, and in the different localities, were brought in as witnesses and were instigated to tell the most horrid stories by the villains who surrounded and controlled them. Nineteen times in twenty they are founded in falsehood, and in every case they are exaggerated.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Well, now, Mr. President, the honorable Senator from Missouri speaks from what he calls a repeated examination of this testimony from the State of Mississippi, and I venture to submit to the Senate in qualification of his remark (for I do not wish to hold him to the statement or to the impression which he would have the Senate receive, that he has examined and comprehends the character of this testimony) that if he will read the testimony of Captain William A. Montgomery, of Hinds County, in the State of Mississippi, he will see that he is entirely in error as to the character of the witnesses, the nature of the testimony, and the inferences which we are bound to draw from it. Captain William A. Montgomery is a democrat; he was a captain in the rebel army during the war; he is a planter. He admitted before this committee on cross-examination, he having been brought before the committee upon the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Delaware, [Mr. BAYARD,] that he was commander of five companies of riflemen organized in different precincts in the county of Hinds and that those men were under his command without authority of law; that they were equipped with the best possible arms which modern science had been able to produce, and he said when questioned whether a like organization extended through the whole State, "I don't know about that; I think we are better organized in Hinds and Warren Counties;" indeed, to use his own language, said he, "in some places they are not organized at all; they did not try to carry the election."

What is to be inferred from his admission except that these organizations were for political purposes? And the record in detail of crime is too horrid to be believed of civilized people. If the Indians upon the western frontier, uncivilized as they are, had perpetrated upon the settlers of the borders such crimes as were perpetrated by these armed bands in the State of Mississippi, the whole country would have rallied for the suppression of such warfare and the punishment of those engaged in it; and it will be one of the marvels of history, when it shall carry down to future ages the record of these crimes, that the people of the North, who sacrificed hundreds of thousands of lives and thousands of millions of treasure for the suppression of the rebellion and the emancipation of the slaves, have looked quietly on, in the middle of this nineteenth century, and at the close of the first century of our national existence, upon these crimes. And I have to say of Mississippi that none except democrats were proved to have been engaged in the commission of these crimes, and no party except the democratic party received any advantage from their perpetration.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, it will be one of the marvels of history, to use an expression of the Senator from Massachusetts, that in after ages, when the page of history we are now making is read, for the reader to understand and realize fully the effort now being made by a party in this country and for party purposes to blacken and disgrace one-half of the people of the Confederacy. Sir, these crimes said to have been committed in Mississippi by democrats were not committed by them. The democrats in Mississippi, as elsewhere, are the peers of the republicans all over the United States for morality, for honesty, and for integrity, and they yield nothing to the gentleman from Massachusetts in that respect.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I ask nothing on that score.

Mr. BOGY. They have been compelled to resort to these measures as means of protection against the horrid and infamous governments that were sent there by the gentleman and his friends to rule over them and also to rob them. The government of Governor Ames was a disgrace to the age, not only to the State of Mississippi but a disgrace to the nation, and those men in the spirit of right and in the majesty of their manhood as Americans combined together to vindicate their rights and to protect their property and their lives against this infamous government which had been forced upon them, and today, men may say what they please on the floor of the Senate, there is peace and prosperity, nay more there is freedom in the State of Mississippi, and the black man in that State who is worthy of being respected—and there are many such—is as well respected there and I think more so than he would be in Massachusetts. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Order! Order!

Mr. BOGY. With all the pretenses northern men make of their love for the colored race, the colored man will find his true friends among the southern men and the former slaveholders. With all the appearances of friendship that the Senator from Massachusetts and men like him may profess for the colored men, at heart they hold them at arm's length. They are mighty good voters, and that is all!

Sir, the people of the Southern States are in a peculiar condition and they have been compelled to resort to these peculiar measures for self-protection, as I would without any hesitation, if I lived there, as the men of San Francisco did a few years ago when that great and flourishing city was in the power of a set of ruffians and gamblers and assassins; the American race on the coast of the Pacific rose in their might and drove the assassins from the place. Was that lawful? No; it was not law according to the code; but it was the great American common law that was brought over from England when the old English colonists came to this country, the right of self-protection, the individual right of self-defense. Sir, those people have been driven to it; and it will not do to try to make it appear that they are all murderers and assassins and villains. It will not do, and the people of the United States will not be made to believe it.

Sir, I have felt it to be my duty to examine into these things as well as I could, and I say now that I believe two-thirds of this testimony can be explained, and I furthermore believe the testimony from the State of Mississippi had as little foundation as the testimony taken in the State of Louisiana.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, if I understand the Senator from Missouri, he now admits the facts and justifies it.

Mr. SHERMAN. My friend's speech now is not necessary. Having admitted the facts, having admitted that one portion of the community, a minority, may rise in arms and put down the rule of the majority in this Government of ours, he need not look to the testimony to manufacture or make up a defense. He has admitted a principle which destroys this Government, which if asserted in every State of this Union would destroy the Government in a day. If you admit that a minority of the people, on a pretense of political oppression or the like, can rise in arms in lawless forays, in rifle companies, in organizations such as described by the Senator from Massachusetts, and put down the government of the majority, that is the end of this Government, as a matter of course.

Suppose that were to be applied in New York. Suppose the property-holders of New York should make up their minds that they would not be longer plundered and robbed as they were by Tweed by the hundreds of millions; suppose they should say that they would put down the men without property who had nothing and who did nothing except oppress the property-holders; suppose they should rise in their might, with arms in their hands, organize with money plenty to put down these lawless villains, how soon would the streets of New York be drenched in blood?

Sir, if the Senator from Missouri changes his ground and defends these atrocities, that is one thing. Then we shall know where he stands. If he denies them, we can produce proof piled mountain upon mountain that will make the American people believe that these things exist. If you defend them on the ground that the minority may rise and by organized violence put down the rule of the majority, it is quite different, a different class of arguments come in entirely. It will not do, Mr. President.

By your democratic platform, without quoting the Constitution of the United States, without quoting the law, you promised that these people should have the free right of the franchise. It is written in the very foreground of your claim to popular support this last fall; and, sir, thousands of people in the Northern States, believing that the democratic party would secure to the southern negroes the right to vote, voted the democratic ticket. Tell them now in the language of my honorable friend that these atrocities can be defended, and that these people can be deprived of their right to rule, if they are in the majority, by the shot-gun and the bowie-knife, by the halter and the rifle, and a different state of affairs will reign. You cannot carry a single northern precinct on such a doctrine. They are accustomed to obey the laws, and when the majority pronounces its potent voice, to submit. It will not do.

If you deny the facts that I have given you, we shall listen by the day and try to find additional testimony to satisfy you that what we say is true. If you admit the facts and justify a minority to rise and by such means of violence and wrong to deprive legal voters of the right to vote in violation of the Constitution of the United States, and also of the democratic platforms, then you place yourselves on a different ground, and we may as well understand it.

I did not suppose any one would justify these things; and the issue that I supposed I had with my friend from Missouri was a question of fact, as to whether such enormities existed, whether they were committed by the democratic party to aid in their election. That is a question of fact. I therefore gave you the testimony not of negroes purely, not of these ignorant men. I selected a few negroes only where I thought from the nature of their testimony, corroborated as it was by other witnesses, it would be believed by anybody. I read you the evidence of officers of the Army, white men, men of character, property-holders. If you deny that proof, I have no doubt in a few days we shall furnish you more. When you change the issue and defend these atrocities, it is a much more serious question. Then I tell you there will be no divided North, if a united South should arise, as I know they will not. My honorable friend does not represent them in that particular. I believe that the southern people, especially in the Middle States, from North Carolina clear across, desire peace, quiet, and order, and they have the same interest in it that we have. Therefore they ought to be the last to sit by in silence and hear a partial justification of the atrocities which have been stated.

Mr. BOGY. Mr. President, I am not willing that the Senator from Ohio should place me in a false position. I do not stand here to vindicate crimes said to have been perpetrated in Louisiana. I stand here to deny that those crimes took place. I stand here to say that this testimony was fabricated by villains and bad men in the city of New Orleans and at the custom-house, and that the persons making the affidavits, nineteen times in twenty, could not read one word of what was written and had to make their mark for their names; and that, in many cases, these persons have since denied that they ever made these affidavits. I am not here, either, to say that the minority should govern the majority by force or intimidation or by combination. No such thing. But I do say that, as in Louisiana and Mississippi, where the whites have the majority, with a few black men acting with them, (good men as many of them are,) they have the right to rebel against the government forced upon them by the Federal Government and sustained by the bayonet, as it has been in Louisiana and as it was in Mississippi. The government existing to-day in Louisiana never met the approbation of the Senate of the United States. It was born in fraud and maintained in power by the bayonets of the Army of the United States. The same government, inaugurated years ago in violation of law, is the government yet in force there. I therefore say that when a community of white men of the old Anglo-Saxon race are thus situated they have the right, and it is their duty, to defend themselves in the best way they can; not that the minority should govern the majority, but, when a minority governs a majority and is kept in power by a foreign government and at the point of the bayonet, resistance is a right and a duty.

Our forefathers were rebels against the Crown of England. Why? Because they were oppressed and the army of England was sent to tyrannize over them. They rose in their might and their majesty and threw off the shackles. The same law that applied to them applies to the people of the South to-day. The people of that section are held up here as murderers, as men who are lost to all shame, as if society there had gone back to its primitive disorganized condition. It is no such thing.

The disorders in the Southern States are forced upon them by a foreign government, and it is their right to rise and repel the government if they can. I do not justify the murders in Louisiana; but I do say that they have not been committed by democrats and for political purposes. That I deny. The testimony read by the Senator from Ohio of the officers of the Army of which he speaks does not sustain him at all. He read the testimony of Colonel Brooks. Let every Senator read it for himself, and I assure him he will not find one word of testimony in this affidavit made by Colonel Brooks based on his own knowledge. It is all hearsay; he knows nothing of himself; but the men who did know, General Augur, who knew all about it, Colonel Bascom, who knew also all about it, and the leading military men in Louisiana, were not brought forward to testify, because their testimony would not have suited the purposes of the men who were sent on the republican side; and hence they were not examined. Yes, Major Bascom was examined; but did the Senator from Ohio allude to his testimony? It is in the book lying before me, as I am informed, and I will read it at the proper time. It contradicts, as I am informed, every statement made in regard to the bad condition of East and West Feliciana.

Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss this subject any further. I rose to prevent the Senator from Ohio from placing me in a false position. The illustration which he made of New York was a very unfortunate one for him. The people of New York combined together by mutual agreement outside of the law to protect themselves. They went to work and did combine outside of the law to bring those men to punishment who were robbing them. It was a combination of individuals, of good and true men, who were determined to drive from power the bad men who had taken possession of the treasury of that city and were robbing it of its last dollar. If the Government of the United States had attempted to sustain Tweed as they are sustaining these bad men of the South, the people of New York would have been justified before the whole world in taking the law in their hands and vindicating their rights.

In conclusion, I do not wish to be misunderstood; I am not here to vindicate the violation of law in any way. I am a law-abiding man. I want law enforced and respected always. I am not in favor of regulators; I am not in favor of secret combinations and organizations to vindicate society; but I can well imagine that a condition of things may exist where it would become the duty of good men to combine so as to vindicate their rights and maintain society. That is all I desire to say at this time.

Mr. WHYTE. I desire, for the purpose of preparing the minds of those who want to read the testimony without any partiality or prejudice, to have read the testimony of Jesse Harrison, on page 440, to show the manner in which these affidavits were manufactured, and the influences brought to bear upon the witnesses, and also to exhibit that if it be true what a public calamity it would be if Mr. Packard should leave Louisiana.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE STATE OF LOUISIANA, parish of Orleans:

Personally came and appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Jesse Harrison, a citizen of East Feliciana and State aforesaid, who deposes and says that on the 21st day of November, 1876, in the city of New Orleans, said State, Henry Smith and E. L. Weber, the latter a senator of Louisiana, came to him, deponent, to prevail upon deponent to go before a republican committee and testify that intimidation of the colored voter was practiced by the democratic party in East Feliciana before and on the day of the election held there on the 7th November, 1876; that the republican party was on its last legs and needed such testimony as that of deponent; that the evidence of deponent was worth more to the republican party than that of one hundred white men. Further deposes and says that at the earnest solicitation of said Weber and Smith, that the deponent went to the custom-house on the 12th day of November, 1876, and was introduced to S. B. Packard, and that T. H. Hutton remarked to him, deponent, that it was not becoming for Packard to offer him, deponent, anything in the shape of a bribe to procure evidence to prove intimidation had been resorted to in East Feliciana by the democratic party to influence the colored vote, but that any arrangement made by him, Hutton, would be binding on Packard. Further deposes and says that the said Hutton did then and there tell him, deponent, that if he, deponent, would testify before the republican committee that intimidation had been resorted to by the democratic party to influence the colored vote, that he, the said Hutton, would secure me, deponent, a position worth from seventy-five to one hundred dollars per month; or that if he, deponent, would refrain from giving any testimony detrimental to the republican party before a committee of democrats, that the same position would be secured him; that said conversation occurred in the custom-house, in an office on the left of the main entrance on Canal street, on the second floor; that said conversation was in full hearing of S. B. Packard, republican candidate for governor, in so far as the offer to give deponent the position if he would testify as requested, but toward the latter part of the conversation said Packard turned away and walked off. Further deposes and says that he, deponent, joined the democratic party of his own free will and accord, and that he, deponent, canvassed the parish as a public speaker in the interest of the democratic party, and that in no instance did he, deponent, witness any intimidation of the colored voters by the democrats, but to the contrary saw efforts made by the republicans to prevent the colored voters from voting the democratic ticket. Further deposes and says that he, deponent, and his democratic white friends assured them, the colored voters, that they could vote as they pleased. Further deposes and says that a more peaceable election never took place in the parish of East Feliciana as the one held on the 7th of November, 1876.

Mr. KASSON. I must object to that, as I do not agree to the construction of the existing law.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage, without amendment, of the following bill and joint resolution, namely:

A bill (H. R. No. 4350) to abolish the board of commissioners of the Metropolitan police, and to transfer its duties to the commissioners of the District of Columbia; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 169) authorizing the Secretary of War to supply blankets to the Reform School in the District of Columbia.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Whereas fears are entertained by a large number of American citizens lest there shall not be a peaceful settlement of the questions arising from the late election for President of the United States;

And whereas it pleased the founders of the Republic in ordaining and establishing the Constitution of the United States to make provision for the election of a President of the United States of America;

And whereas the Constitution provides for the counting of the electoral votes and the determining of who is elected President of the United States: Therefore,

Resolved, That any attempt, come from whatever source it may, to prejudice or excite the public mind in advance of the decision of the authority known to and provided for in the Constitution of the United States is unwise, unpatriotic, and full of danger to our free institutions, and that we deprecate all efforts to excite public passions as tending to increase the embarrassment and depression of the business interests of the country, and declare it to be the duty of all good citizens to peaceably and faithfully abide by the results reached in accordance with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I object.

IRWIN B. LINTON.

Mr. CLYMER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Accounts:

REPEAL OF CHECK-STAMP.

Mr. MILLER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means:

Resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing the two-cent stamp-tax on checks, drafts, and orders for the payment of money, and report by bill or otherwise at as early a day as possible.

JUSTIS M'KINSTRY.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish this House with a copy of all the proceedings of the court-martial in the case of Major Justis McKinstry, quartermaster of the United States Army, convened at Saint Louis, Missouri, September 24, 1862.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MEXICAN OUTRAGES.

Mr. SCHLEICHER, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the President be requested to transmit to this House, if in his judgment not incompatible with the good of the public service, copies of such papers in the possession of the State Department and War Department as may refer to the imprisonment and detention by the Mexican authorities at Matamoras of John Jay Smith, an American citizen; and also of the wounding and robbing by Mexican soldiers at New Laredo of Dr. Samuel Huggins, an American citizen.

HENRY A. OLCOTT.

Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution for adoption at this time:

Resolved, That Henry A. Olcott be paid out of the contingent fund of the House the sum of $3.60 per day for services as messenger in the office of the Clerk of the House from and including the 1st day of January ultimo, and until otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. CONGER. I want to know what January the gentleman refers to.

Mr. LANDERS, of Connecticut. Last January. Let the resolution be referred to the Committee of Accounts.

The resolution was referred to the Committee of Accounts.

REPORT ON IMMIGRATION.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, by unanimous consent, submitted a resolution to reprint the report on immigration by Edward Young, chief of the Bureau of Statistics; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Carter, and General Augur, from and at New Orleans, Louisiana, Washington City, D. C., New York City, New York, since the 1st day of September last, at their chamber, in the city of New Orleans, Louisiana, on 26th day of December, 1876, at the hour of twelve o'clock m., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee. William Orton was three times called by the Sergeant-at-Arms, but did not answer.

The following communications were then read:

NEW YORK, December 23.

SIR: Accompanying this I send you a communication made by me this day to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in respect to a paper served upon me and which requires the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives to summon me to appear before your committee at New Orleans on the 26th of December. I do not suppose it is thought that I possess any personal knowledge concerning any of the matters to be investigated by that committee. I am but now recovering from a long and serious illness and my health is in such a state that I could not, without great inconvenience and risk, as well as unnecessary expense to the Government, make so long a journey as that to New Orleans. I trust, therefore, that I may be relieved from personal attendance, and that such report as you may think proper to make to the Speaker of the House may not involve me in a contempt for a failure to appear personally. I possess no knowledge in respect to any matter confided to you for investigation or in respect to the papers which you seek which would be of any value to you if I were there.

I am, very respectfully,

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman, New Orleans, Louisiana.

NEW YORK, December 23, 1876.

SIR: On the 19th day of December a paper (a copy of which is hereto annexed*) was handed to me at Washington, addressed to John G. Thompson, esq., Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger, and signed by you as Speaker, by which paper the said Thompson or his special messenger is commanded to produce at New Orleans before the special committee of the House of Representatives, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, all telegrams in his possession or under his control received or sent by William E. Chandler, Zach. Chandler, J. Don. Cameron, J. M. Edmunds, James Casey, William Pitt Kellogg, S. B. Packard, John F. Casey, J. R. G. Pitkins, Henry C. Dibbell, H. C. Warmoth, George W. Carter, and General Augur, from and at New Orleans, Louisiana, Washington City, D. C., New York since the 1st day of September last. Said paper also appears to require said Thompson to summon me to appear before said select committee at the same time and place, then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee. Assuming that said paper is erroneously supposed to contain some command addressed to me requiring me to produce before said committee telegrams of a like description in my possession or under my control, I beg leave respectfully to inform you that if any such messages have ever existed—of which I have no knowledge—I have had neither personally or officially any possession of them; that I have never had any control over them except as an agent of the Western Union Telegraph Company, through and by the co-operation of subordinate agents; that the Western Union Telegraph Company has, without any knowledge or anticipation on my part, taken from me all power and control over all messages now in the possession of the company. I beg leave, therefore, respectfully to be excused from compliance with the above-mentioned requirement, it never having been at any time since the service of the subpœna, and being not now, in my power to comply with the same.

Very respectfully, &c.

WILLIAM ORTON.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

CITY AND COUNTY OF NEW YORK:

Personally appeared before me, the 23d day of December, 1876, William Orton, to me personally known, who, being duly sworn, deposed that the annexed statement addressed to Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Speaker of the House of Representatives, is true, and that the same is made as and for his return to the certain paper purporting to be a subpœna referred to therein.

W. ARNOUX,
Notary Public, City and County of New York.

(*The paper referred to is the subpœna as given above.)

On motion of Mr. JENKS,

Resolved, That the chairman communicate to the House the failure and refusal of William Orton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to appear and testify and to bring with him all the telegrams in his possession or control, sent or received by the persons named in the subpœna served upon him the said Orton, also as part of said communication the letter of said Orton to the chairman, dated December 15, 1876, and such testimony of E. W. Barnes before the committee as relates to instructions given him, said Barnes, by the said Orton, in relation to the production before the committee of telegrams required to be produced before the committee by said Barnes; the said default, refusal, and instructions to said Barnes, in the opinion of the committee, being in contempt of the process of the House.

Testimony of E. W. Barnes.

E. W. BARNES, manager of the Western Union Telegraph Company, at New Orleans, appeared as a witness before the committee on the 17th day of December, 1876, and, after being duly sworn according to law, was interrogated as follows:

* * * * * * *

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. MORRISON:)

Question. What is your occupation?

Answer. Manager of the Western Union Telegraph in this city.

Q. Have you been subpœnaed to appear before this committee?

A. I have. (Witness produced copy of subpœna.)

Q. Have you in your possession any dispatches sent by or received by the persons named in this subpœna?

A. I presume I have some.

* * * * * * * *

Q. Have you any of those dispatches with you?

A. No. With me; no, sir.

Q. Have you been instructed by the president of the company not to deliver them?

A. Yes, sir. Not directly by the president, but by our general superintendent.

Q. Are your instructions similar to this?

[Letter read to witness from President Orton, of the Western Union Telegraph Company to the chairman, as follows:]

Letter from President Orton, to Hon. W. R. Morrison.

NEW YORK, December 15, 1876.

SIR: Subpœnas have been served upon several employés of this company, directing them to produce before the congressional committee of which you are chairman all messages in possession of the company sent and received by the persons named in the subpœna, during several months of the present year. I have delayed a reply to these demands in the expectation that similar applications would be made by a committee of the Senate also charged with the investigation of matters connected with the presidential election and canvass in several States, so that the action of the company being the same in respect to the messages of both political parties, could not be attributed to a desire to prejudice or promote the interests of either. No subpœnas have yet been served upon us by order of the Senate committee, and as further delay might appear to be a discourtesy to yourself and your committee, it does not seem proper to further postpone the answer. The subpœnas were served before the investigation which the committee had been directed to make was begun, and before evidence had been presented to the committee either that the persons named in the subpœnas had sent any messages whatever, or that any messages sent by them related to the subject-matter of the investigation. It appears to have been assumed that persons holding high official positions under the Federal and State Governments and others prominent in public affairs were in the habit of sending messages by telegraph, and without attempting to ascertain if any of these messages were material to the investigation, the officers and agents of this company have been commanded to lay aside the business in which they are engaged to become spies and detectives upon and informers against the customers who have reposed in us the gravest confidences concerning both their official and their private affairs. I have never believed that the Congress of the United States with this subject fairly before them would permit committees to violate the secrecy of the telegraph in this matter; and it seems to me that the present is an opportunity which it would be unwise to forego for obtaining a decision directly from the Representatives of the people. If the messages of persons connected with one political party are spread before the public, a like course will be taken in respect to those of the other party; both parties, therefore, have the same interests in publishing to the world the secrets of the telegraph offices or of preventing such publicity. It has therefore been decided to decline, very respectfully, to permit the employés of this company to produce before any committee of either House of Congress messages sent or received by the representatives of either the democratic or the republican party—at least until after Congress shall have approved the subpœnas of the committees and directed that their demands be enforced.

I am, with great respect, &c.,

WILLIAM ORTON, President.

Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON,
Chairman, &c., New Orleans, Louisiana.

A. I should have acted on these instructions without any others on this letter to you.

Q. Have you any?

A. I have only instructions from Mr. Orton to do nothing in the matter; that Mr. Orton would relieve me from all responsibility.

* * * * * * *

Q. Then you refuse to produce the telegrams?

A. Yes, sir; I must do so according to my instructions.

* * * * * * *

Q. You answer that you were subpœnaed to appear and produce telegrams sent by and received by parties named in this subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you recollect whether William Pitt Kellogg is named in the subpœna?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. S. B. Packard?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. J. R. G. Pitkin?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Henry C. Dibble?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. H. C. Warmoth and others?

A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HURLBUT:

Q. I understand you were served with a subpœna; at what time?

A. At about two o'clock on the 13th.

Q. Did you report the fact of such service to your superiors?

A. I did.

Q. Have you instructions from your superior officers in the telegraph company not to furnish the messages?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. In obedience to these orders you decline?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you any written instructions—any formal instructions?

A. I have no other instructions than what I have mentioned.

Q. Telegraphic instructions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of that instruction?

A. No, sir; but that is the purport of it, a dispatch from Mr. Orton saying he would assume the responsibility.

The foregoing is a correct transcript of the proceedings of the committee in the matter of the failure and refusal of William Orton, president of the Western Union Telegraph Company, to appear and testify and to bring with him the telegrams in obedience to the subpœna duces tecum served upon him, together with letter of William Orton and such testimony of E. W. Barnes as by resolution and order of the committee I am directed to communicate to the House of Representatives.

WM. R. MORRISON, Chairman.

Attest:
R. W. HUNTER,
Clerk Special Committee.
NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, December 27, 1876.

Mr. HUNTON. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk, and on it demand the previous question.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House issue a writ under his hand and seal, attested by the Clerk, commanding the Sergeant-at-Arms, either by himself or his special deputy or a messenger, to arrest William Orton and bring him without delay to the bar of the House of Representatives, to answer for a breach of its privilege and a contempt of its authority in failing to appear and testify as a witness before the select committee, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. MORRISON is chairman, in obedience to a subpœna commanding him so to do, served upon him the 9th day of December, 1876, and also in refusing to bring before said committee certain papers as by said subpœna he was commanded, and to be dealt with as the law under the facts may require.

Mr. GARFIELD. I should be glad to hear again read the subpœna on which this proceeding is based. I should like also the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] to state precisely what it is that Mr. Orton has refused to produce, so that we may see the scope of the demand made upon him.

Mr. HUNTON. He has refused, as reported by the committee at New Orleans, to obey the orders of the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish the gentleman to tell the House whether any specific telegrams have been pointed out which Mr. Orton is required to bring; or is he required in general to bring all telegrams hat may have been addressed to or sent by certain persons?

Mr. HUNTON. If the gentleman from Ohio had attended to the reading of the report from the committee, he would have discovered that the report discloses the fact that Mr. Orton is commanded to bring certain telegrams.

Mr. GARFIELD. Not certain telegrams, as I understand, but telegrams addressed to or sent by certain individuals.

Mr. HUNTON. Certain telegrams embracing all sent to or received by certain persons in New Orleans.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia precisely this: whether he has in this demand restricted the application of the power to compel an answer, or production of the documents, as it is restricted everywhere by the courts, to papers the existence of which has been established and the character of which he has sufficiently pointed out, so that the specific papers may be identified? Or in this proceeding has Mr. Orton been commanded to produce generally papers the existence of which has not been proved? Is this in the form of a general drag-net, that he shall bring with him any paper that may turn out to exist? I desire in this connection also to ask the gentleman who reports the resolution——

Mr. HAMILTON, of New Jersey. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me a word?

Mr. GARFIELD. Not at present. I have asked the gentleman from Virginia whether the subpœna on which this proceeding has been had is in the same, or similar terms, as the subpœna in the case of Mr. Barnes. That subpœna was a subpœna directing our Sergeant-at-Arms by name to produce the telegrams. If this subpœna is the same, I take it, it will be hardly possible that we should proceed and punish Mr. Orton, or arraign him at our bar for not bringing some documents that another person ought to bring. I wish the gentleman who has offered the resolution to give an explanation as to this.

Mr. BRIGHT. I rise to a question of order. I insist that the gentleman from Ohio, rising to ask a parliamentary inquiry——

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not rise to ask a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BRIGHT. Shall not be permitted to enter upon an argument and to indulge in assumptions that are not warranted.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. I addressed my question to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON.]

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to answering the questions of the gentleman from Ohio. In the first place, the main contempt of this witness reported by the committee at New Orleans is his failure to appear. Now, it does not matter whether the telegrams are described in what the gentleman from Ohio calls a "drag-net" or no. The point is that the witness reported by the committee in New Orleans has refused to appear before that committee in obedience to the mandate of this House. That is quite a sufficient basis on which to found the order contained in the resolution, to arrest the party and bring him to the bar of the House.

In regard to the telegrams and the description contained in the subpœna, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] will read the case of General Babcock, tried in Saint Louis, he will find that the identical question he raises here was raised in that case, and that a decision was given in favor of the validity of the subpœna; so that this is not only proper in parliamentary proceedings, but has been decided to be proper in a court of justice. But I do not understand that an investigating committee of this House, or of any parliamentary body, is tied down to the rules of a court of justice in conducting an investigation; their powers, I conceive, are much larger and more extended.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman allow the resolution to be again read? for I think there is a question which I wish to put to him in connection with it.

The Clerk again read the resolution.

Mr. KASSON. Now, it is in reference to the wording of that resolution that I beg the gentleman from Virginia to give me his attention for a moment. I observe that the contempt is alleged, not alone for the non-appearance of this gentleman as a witness, but the non-production of certain papers. The question, therefore, arises upon the affidavit made by the recusant witness, whether the House ought to adjudge him in contempt. In courts everywhere, if it appears according to the statement of the witness under oath, to the satisfaction of the court, that he was called upon to do something which he had not the power to do, the court did not attach him for contempt for that unless they disbelieved his statement. The affidavit of this recusant witness, which appears in these papers, states that he could not go to New Orleans without danger to his health, and the further statement that he had no such papers as were called for in his possession, and no knowledge of their existence.

I submit to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTON,] therefore, that, when the resolution charges him with contempt in the non-production of papers which he denies the possession of or any knowledge of, he is asking the House practically to adjudge him in contempt for something of the existence of which the House has no evidence.

I agree that his non-appearance before the committee as a witness is sufficient to put him in the position of contempt, and the only question is whether we ought to assume by our resolutions that he is in contempt upon another ground of which we have no other evidence. I am clear that we ought not to adjudge him in contempt for non-production of papers upon the evidence before the House, because he swears expressly that it is beyond his power to produce them.

We may put questions to him when he comes before the committee for the further ascertainment of the facts, but we ought not to say he is in contempt of the House for the non-production of papers when we have no evidence of their existence. I hope, therefore, that the gentleman will limit the charge of contempt to the non-appearance of the witness.

If there is a little doubt about the severity of the illness which he claims prevented him from appearing before the committee, I think he should be brought before the House for his non-appearance; but upon the other point, I should dislike very much to vote for resolutions adjudging him in contempt for the non-production of papers which he asserts he has no control of.

Mr. HUNTON. I do not think there is anything in what has fallen from the gentleman just up to justify a change in the resolution. He admits that the party is in contempt, but he says only on one point, and he makes two excuses for the witness: one is that the witness says to the House and to the committee that he is not in possession of the papers which they want.

Now, if that practice is allowed either in an investigation before this House or in a court of justice, it breaks down both bodies; because if a witness when summoned to produce a paper is allowed himself to write to that committee or to that court that he has not such a paper as they want, then it makes the witness the judge of what papers are material instead of the prosecuting body, the court or the committee.

Mr. KASSON. Allow me right there to say that the committee asked him for certain papers and he denies that he has such papers. Now, in that case, how can we adjudge him in contempt for the non-production of papers not in his possession?

Mr. HUNTON. It was his duty to go before the committee and submit to an examination on that very point, so that the committee might determine that he did not have the papers they wanted, and which he swears are not under his control.

Mr. KASSON. I think the gentleman fails to see my point; it is that we ought not now to judge him in contempt for the non-production of papers of the existence of which we have no evidence.

Mr. HUNTON. Until he appears with the papers or appears and gives a satisfactory excuse for the non-production of the papers, he is in contempt.

Now, sir, upon the question of the health of this witness, I happen to know, Mr. Speaker, that two weeks ago Mr. Orton was in the city of Washington, and while he said he was recovering from a spell of severe illness he was well enough to come from the city of New York here and attend to business here two weeks ago, and he is surely by this time able to appear before the committee at New Orleans. I therefore insist upon the previous question.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Before the previous question is seconded, I should like to hear the subpœna again read.

The Clerk again read the subpœna.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; being upon the adoption of the resolution offered by Mr. HUNTON.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. We may as well have the yeas and nays at once upon the resolution.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a division first.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. O, no. We may just as well have the yeas and nays first as last.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 160, nays 31, not voting 98; as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. GRANT, his Private Secretary.

RECUSANT WITNESSES—RETURNING BOARD OF LOUISIANA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House certain papers in relation to the investigation in Louisiana; which were read in part.

Mr. KASSON, [interrupting the reading.] I think if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HUNTON] has examined these papers carefully, as I have, he has found that the only difference is that each of these gentlemen gave testimony which was necessarily different in some respects but substantially the same. I therefore would suggest to him that, in order to save the time of the House which would be taken up in reading, he ask that all the papers be printed in the RECORD without further reading.

Mr. HUNTON. I have no objection to that, and will ask consent that the order be made.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

The papers were as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LOUISIANA, December 30, 1876.

SIR: I have the honor transmit herewith the statements of so much of the proceedings of the committee as relate to the refusal of J. Madison Wells and Thomas C. Anderson, two of the members of the Louisiana board of returning officers, to produce before the committee certain records and papers which by subpœna duces tecum they were commanded to produce.

These proceedings I am directed to lay before the House of Representatives for its consideration, such refusal being deemed in contempt of its authority.

Said subpœna is in the words and figures following, to wit:

By authority of the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States of America.

To JOHN G. THOMPSON, Esq.,
Sergeant-at-Arms, or his special messenger:

You are hereby commanded to summon J. Madison Wells to be and appear before the Louisiana affairs special committee of the House of Representatives of the United States, of which Hon. WILLIAM R. Baton Rouge, Bossier, Calcasieu, Caldwell, Carroll, Catahoula, Claiborne, Concordia, De Soto, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Franklin, Grant, Iberville, Jefferson, (right and left bank,) Lafayette, Lafourche, Lincoln, Livingston, Madison, Morehouse, Ouachita, Plaquemines, Red River, Richland, Sabine, Saint Charles, Saint Martin, Tangipahoa, Vermillion, Vernon, Washington, Webster, Winn, in their chamber in the city of New Orleans, at Saint Charles Hotel, on Tuesday, December 12, at the hour of one p. m., then and there to testify touching matters of inquiry committed to said committee; and he is not to depart without leave of said committee.

Said J. Madison Wells was called as a witness before the committee on the 12th day of December, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., but did not appear.

One C. S. Abell, secretary of the returning board, presented the following communication:

OFFICE BOARD OF RETURNING OFFICERS,
STATE OF LOUISIANA, SENATE CHAMBER, STATE-HOUSE.
New Orleans, December 12, 1876.

To the honorable chairman and members of the special committee, House of Representatives, United States of America, on Louisiana affairs:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned returning officers of election for the State of Louisiana, on each of whom subpœnæ duces tecum have been served of the same purport as the one annexed, respectfully make the following joint return to these several subpœnas.

A careful examination of these writs discloses that all the papers and documents required to be produced are parts of the records of the office of the returning officers of election for the State of Louisiana, and have reference to the election held in this State on the 7th day of November, 1876, for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States and for other officers, State and national.

These papers, being part of the records of the office of the returning officers of elections for the State of Louisiana, are in possession of the returning officers in their official capacities, a board created by law, and not in their individual capacity. As individuals they have no legal control over them; consequently in their separate individual capacity they have no legal control over them; but answering these writs in their legal capacity as returning officers, they respectfully submit, that the board of returning officers of elections for Louisiana is a body created by the laws of Louisiana, with specific and well-defined duties, partly ministerial and partly quasi-judicial; that their action under the law of their creation is final to the extent provided by the law, and is not subject to review by any State or national tribunal.

The papers and documents called for by the subpœna are parts of the records of the office of the returning officers, and are necessary for the use of the returning officers of elections for Louisiana until they shall close their labor of canvassing and compiling the votes of the election for State and parish officers, held on the 7th November, 1876, which has not yet been completed, and that the returning officers of the election deem it their duty under the law to submit to the General Assembly of the State, upon its assembling on the first Monday of January next, a full and accurate report of their canvass and compilation of the votes, with the reasons for their findings and the evidence upon which such were predicated in order to enable the General Assembly to count the vote for governor and lieutenant-governor in accordance to the requirements of article 48 of the constitution of the State; that for this purpose the original archives of the office of the returning officers of elections must be preserved and cannot be allowed to be removed from the office without authority of the General Assembly. We may remark here that the danger of loss of said papers and documents is illustrated by the fact that the congressional committee sent to Louisiana in 1875 obtained possession of important papers of this office, took them away, and never returned them.

We, in our capacity as returning officers, therefore, respectfully decline producing the original papers called for by the subpœnas for the twofold reason that we deny the authority of the House of Representatives of the United States, or a committee thereof, to inquire into or in any legal manner to review the decision of the returning officers of election of the State of Louisiana, and the public interest of the State requires that these papers and documents should be carefully preserved, and no authority is vested in the returning officers to part with the custody thereof until they shall be delivered to the General Assembly for the purpose above stated.

The undersigned returning officers deem it our duty to enter this our earnest protest against this attempt of a committee of the House of Representatives of the United States to invade the rights of the State by demanding possession of their archives, with a view to review the action of her tribunals without any legal or constitutional right.

It is a fact of public notoriety that during the time the returning officers of elections were canvassing and compiling the votes of the late election for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States committees of both political parties, composed of chosen partisans from other States, were present during the whole time of opening the election returns from the several parishes and taking the evidence on the charges of intimidation and fraud, and were invited by the returning officers to examine the same, and to take copies of any paper or deposition received, of which they liberally availed themselves. This course was recommended in order that the people of the country should have an opportunity of knowing the facts in reference to the election, as a matter of public history.

The returning officers, in order that no fact connected with the late election in this State or the action of the returning officers shall be concealed, but that all the facts shall be placed before the people of the United States as matters of public history, "propose to have copies made and to certify such when made of the entire body of the official papers and evidence, affidavits, depositions, and all else in their possession or control in relation to the recent election, the whole of such papers to be copied and delivered to the committee as soon as the same can be completed."

But as no appropriation has been made by the Legislature, that would enable the returning officers to defray the expenses of making such copies, and as the same are very voluminous and would have to be copied under the supervision of the secretary of the returning officers as a condition-precedent, the congressional committee will be required to provide for the necessary expense of taking such copies.

The returning officers of election for Louisiana respectfully submit the foregoing as their answer to the writs of subpœna duces tecum both in their individual and legal capacities.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. MADISON WELLS.
THO. C. ANDERSON.
G. CASANAVE.
LOUIS M. KENNER.

J. MADISON WELLS appeared as a witness before the committee on the 21st day of December, 1876, and, having been duly sworn, was interrogated as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. MORRISON:)

* * * * * * *

Question. Have you brought with you this morning the returns and original papers for inspection by the committee which we asked for in our subpœna?

Answer. I have not, sir.

Q. I believe you said to us the other day that you would refuse to produce them?

A. Yes, sir; I said that in my letter. I have since gone on and furnished the necessary evidence that the committee required.

Q. You mean you have furnished some copies not certified?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. You refuse to bring the originals here for our inspection?

A. I have no control over them; they belong to the State.

Q. You are a member of the returning board—the president of the board?

A. I am, sir.

Q. Where are those papers?

A. In the State-house.

Q. With your board?

A. They are there, sir. Yes, sir, portions of them are in the vault and some in the room there. Those that are necessary to be copied are being copied in the room there.

Q. They are yet under your control?

A. They are, sir.

On motion of Mr. JENKS,

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee communicate to the House for its consideration the refusal of J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, Gadane Casanave, and Louis M. Kenner, respectively, to produce before the committee for their inspection all returns of elections, all consolidated statements of supervisors of election, all statements of votes and tally-sheets for each polling-place at the late election for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, together with all affidavits, depositions, protests, and other written proof in their possession or under their control, touching the said election in the following parishes: East Baton Rouge, West Baton Rouge, Bossier, Calcasieu, Caldwell, Carroll, Catahoula, Claiborne, Concordia, De Soto, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Franklin, Grant, Iberville, Jefferson, (right and left bank,) La Fayette, La Fourche, Lincoln Livingston, Madison, Morehouse, Ouachita, Plaquemines, Red River, Richland, Sabine, Saint Charles, Saint Martins, Tangipahoa, Vermillion, Vernon, Washington, Webster, Winn; which said several refusals are in contempt of the House.

The foregoing is hereby certified to be a correct statement of the proceedings in the matter of the refusal of J. Madison Wells to produce before the special committee on the Louisiana election the records and papers roquired by the committee to be produced by him.

THOMAS C. ANDERSON appeared as a witness before the committee on the 19th day of December, 1876, and having been duly sworn, was interrogated as follows:

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. MORRISON:)

* * * * * * *

Question. Have you in your possession statements relative to the election commissioners' statements?

Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you them with you?

A. No, sir. They are in the State-house.

Q. You were subpœnaed to bring with you the papers?

A. I was, sir.

Q. You have not brought them?

A. No, sir. In order that you may know my reasons I would ask permission to give you my answer.

Q. You refuse to bring them?

A. The board objects to my bringing them.

Q. Have you made any attempt to bring them here?

A. I said that the members of the board offered objection, and they said they thought it was not advisable to do so; they might be mislaid, and the board are responsible for them. But copies of everything that we had in our possession can be had for this committee, and the clerks are now at work making these copies as rapidly as they possibly can. Eight furnished by this committee and eight furnished by the board.

Q. Did you keep a copy of all protests attached to consolidated returns?

A. In some instances we have had nothing but the consolidated returns. In some places no tally-lists were returned, in some places no polling-lists were returned; hence the necessity for us to inspect the registration.

Q. I would like to know, sir, whether it is your purpose to bring these papers before the committee, or whether it is your purpose to refuse to bring them?

A. The board declines to furnish the registry lists or papers.

Q. Did you take a vote?

A. No, sir, we did not take any formal vote.

Q. You do not intend to bring them?

A. I will furnish you the copies as I promised.

Mr. MORRISON. We have been promised for eight days. We won't get them in time to be of any use to this committee.

A. I presume they will be ready in the course of seven or eight days. It is no small undertaking to copy all these papers. In the five contested parish returns the papers are very voluminous; about one-third or one-half of the whole. I furnished some to Mr. MEADE, who was leaving or going to leave for Shreveport. I gave him a list of the polls rejected.

On motion of Mr JENKS,

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee communicate to the House for its consideration the refusal of J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, Gadane Casanave, and Louis M. Attest:

GEO. M. ADAMS, Clerk.

Said G. Casanave was called as a witness before the committee on the 12th day of December, 1876, at one o'clock p. m., but did not appear.

C. S. Abell, secretary of the returning board, presented the following communication:

OFFICE BOARD OF RETURNING OFFICERS,
STATE OF LOUISIANA, SENATE CHAMBER, STATE HOUSE,
New Orleans, December 12, 1876.

To the honorable chairman and members of the special committee, House of Representatives, United States of America, on Louisiana affairs:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, returning officers of election for the State of Louisiana, on each of whom subpœnæ duces tecum have been served of the same purport as the one annexed, respectfully make the following joint return to these several subpœnas:

A careful examination of these writs discloses that all the papers and documents required to be produced are parts of the records of the office of the returning officers of elections for the State of Louisiana, and have reference to the election held in this State on the 7th day of November, 1876, for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, and for other officers, State and national.

The papers being part of the records of the office of the returning officers in their official capacity, a board created by law, and not in their individual capacity, as individuals they have no legal control over them; consequently in their separate individual capacity they have no legal control over them; but answering these writs in their legal capacity as returning officers they respectfully submit that the board of returning officers of elections for Louisiana is a body created by the laws of Louisiana, with specific and well-defined duties, partly ministerial and partly quasi-judicial; that their action under the law of their creation is final to the extent provided by the law, and is not subject to review by any State or national tribunal.

The papers and documents called for by the subpœnas are parts of the records of the office of the returning officers of elections for Louisiana until they shall close their labors of canvassing and compiling the votes of the election for State and parish officers held on the 7th of November, 1876, which has not yet been completed; and that the returning officers of the election deem it their duty under the law to submit to the General Assembly of the State, upon its assembling on the first Monday of January next, a full and accurate report of their canvass and compilation of the votes, with the reasons of their findings and the evidence upon which such were predicated, in order to enable the General Assembly to count the vote for governor and lieutenant-governor in accordance to the requirements of article 48 of the constitution of the State; that for this purpose the original archives of the office of the returning officers of elections must be preserved, and cannot be allowed to be removed from the office without authority of the General Assembly. We may remark here that the danger of loss of such papers and documents is illustrated by the fact that the congressional committee sent to Louisiana in 1875 obtained possession of important papers of this office, took them away, and never returned them.

We, in our capacity as returning officers, therefore, respectfully decline the original papers called for by the subpœnas for the twofold reason that we deny the authority of the House of Representatives of the United States, or a committee thereof, to inquire into or in any legal manner to review the decision of the returning officers of election of the State of Louisiana, and the public interest of the State requires that these papers and documents should be carefully preserved; and no authority is vested in the returning officers to part with the custody thereof until they shall be delivered to the General Assembly for the purpose above stated.

The undersigned returning officers deem it our duty to enter this our earnest protest against this attempt of a committee of the House of Representatives of the United States to invade the rights of the State by demanding possessions of her archives with a view to review the action of her tribunals without any legal or constitutional right. It is a fact of public notoriety that during the time the returning officers of elections were canvassing and compiling the votes of the late election for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States committees of both political parties, composed of chosen partisans from other States, were present during the whole time of opening the election returns from the several parishes and taking the evidence on the charges of intimidation and fraud, and were invited by the returning officers to examine the same and to take copies of any paper or deposition received, of which they liberally availed themselves. This course was recommended in order that the people of the country should have an opportunity of knowing the facts in reference to the election, as a matter of public history.

The returning officers, in order that no fact connected with the late election in this State or the action of the returning officers shall be concealed, but that all the facts shall be placed before the people of the United States as matters of public history, "propose to have copies made and to certify such when made of the entire body of the official papers and evidence, affidavits, depositions, and all else in their possession or control in relation to the recent election, the whole of such papers to be copied and delivered to the committee as soon as the same can be completed."

But as no appropriation has been made by the Legislature that would enable the returning officers to defray the expenses of making such copies, and as the same are very voluminous and would have to be copied under the supervision of the secretary of the returning officers as a condition-precedent, the congressional committee will be required to provide for the necessary expense of taking such copies.

The returning officers of elections for Louisiana respectfully submit the foregoing as their answer to the writs of subpœna duces tecum, both in their individual and legal capacities.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

J. MADISON WELLS.
THOS. C. ANDERSON.
G. CASANAVE.
LOUIS M. KENNER.

Said G. CASANAVE appeared before the committee as a witness on the 20th day of December, 1876, and having been duly sworn, was interrogated as follows:

* * * * * * *

By the CHAIRMAN, (Mr. MORRISON:)

Question. Have you with you the rejected returns of the supervisors of registration, including the statements of commissioners of election and the papers returned to you?

Answer. We have them at the board.

Q. You have not them with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. You were subpœnaed to produce them, were you not?

A. I believe I was. I believe I read them on the paper.

Q. You have not brought them; do you intend to bring them?

A. I do not know, we can give you a copy, but cannot give you the originals.

Q. You were subpœnaed to bring them with you that we might inspect them; do I understand you that you intend to do it or not—I mean the returns made by the supervisors of registration of the parishes?

A. You want the original papers?

Q. We wanted you to bring them with you that we might inspect them here.

A. I cannot do that without the consent of the board. You may have copies of them.

Q. I am talking about the original papers. Have you considered the question of delivering or bringing with you for our inspection the original papers in your board since you were subpœnaed?

A. No, sir.

Q. I understand you to say you do not intend to bring them?

A. Not the original papers.

Q. Do you refuse to produce before us for our inspection the papers called for in the subpœna; that is, the returns to the board of the supervisors of registration, with the statements of the commissioners of election?

A. You just want to look at them.

Q. I want to know if you refuse to produce them here for our inspection.

A. No, sir, I do not refuse to produce them for your inspection. With the consent of the board I will do it.

Q. When will you bring them to us?

A. As soon as I can get the gentlemen together I will do it.

Q. Did I understand you to say then you have or have not considered that question before your board, or have you had any consultation with any of the members in regard to producing for the inspection of the committee those papers?

A. I have not. I don't know what the others have done. I have been busy for the last few days and have been away from the board; have not been there for eight days now.

Q. You have not yet considered the question whether you will produce the papers?

A. Yes, sir; I told you I had been very busy with my business on the outside; that I have not considered it.

On motion of Mr. JENKS,

Resolved, That the chairman of this committee communicate to the House for its consideration the refusal of J. Madison Wells, Thomas C. Anderson, G. Casanave, and Louis M. Kenner, respectively, to produce before the committee for its inspection all returns of elections, all consolidated returns of supervisors of election, all statements of votes and tally-sheets for each polling-place at the late election for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, together with all affidavits, depositions, protests, and other written proof in their possession or under their control touching the said election in the following parishes: East Baton Rouge, West Baton Rouge, Bossier, Calcasieu, Caldwell, Carroll, Catahoula, Claiborne, Concordia, De Soto, East Feliciana, West Feliciana, Franklin, Grant, Iberville, Jefferson, (right and left bank,) La Fayette, La Fourche, Lincoln, Livingston, Madison, Morehouse, Ouachita, Plaquemines, Red River, Richland, Sabine, Saint Charles, Saint Martin, Tangipahoa, Vermillion, Vernon, Washington, Webster, Winn; which said several refusals are in contempt of the House.

The foregoing is hereby certified to be a correct statement of the proceedings in the matter of the refusal of G. Casanave to produce before the special committee on the Louisiana election the records and papers required by the committee to be produced by him.

OFFICE BOARD OF RETURNING OFFICERS,
STATE OF LOUISIANA, SENATE CHAMBER, STATE-HOUSE,
New Orleans, December 12, 1876.

To the honorable Chairman and Members of the Special Committee House of Representatives, United States of America, on Louisiana Affairs:

GENTLEMEN: The undersigned, returning officers of election for the State of Louisiana, on each of whom subpœnæ duces tecum have been served, of the same purport as the one annexed, respectfully make the following joint return to these several subpœnas: A careful examination of these writs disclose that all the papers and documents required to be produced are parts of the records of the office of the returning officers of elections for the State of Louisiana, and have reference to the election held in this State on the 7th day of November, 1876, for electors for President and Vice-President of the United States, and for other officers, State and national.

These papers, being part of the records of the office of the returning officers of elections for the State of Louisiana, are in possession of the returning officers in their official capacity, a board created by law, and not in their individual capacity; as individuals they have no legal control over them; consequently in their separate individual capacity they have no legal control over them, but answering these writs in their legal capacity as returning officers they respectfully submit:

That the board of returning officers of election for Louisiana is a body created by the laws of Louisiana with specific and well defined duties, partly ministerial and partly quasi judicial; that their action under the laws of their creation is final to the extent provided by the law, and is not subject to review by any State or national tribunal.

We in our capacity as returning officers therefore respectfully decline producing the original papers called for by the subpœnas, for the twofold reason that we deny the authority of the House of Representatives of the United States or a committee thereof to inquire into or in any legal manner to review the decision of the returning officers of elections of the State of Louisiana, and the public interest of the State requires that these papers and documents should be carefully preserved, and no authority is vested in the returning officers to part with the custody thereof until they shall be delivered to the General Assembly for the purpose above stated.

* * * * * * *

By Mr. MORRISON:

Question. Have you with you, Mr. Kenner, the original returns made by the supervisors of registration, with the statements of the commissioners of election? Have you the papers which you were required to produce for the inspection of the committee?

Answer. No, sir; the board answered this honorable committee in a recent communication as regards the papers demanded of the board.

Q. You do not propose then to produce them for the inspection of the committee?

A. We have not had any consultation since this letter was addressed to the honorable committee.

Q. I ask you as regards your purpose.

A. We have not had any conversation about it since the letter was written.

Q. It is now eight or ten days since we subpœnaed you to bring with you the statements made to your board by the supervisors and the statements made by the commissioners to them. These are the papers of which I speak. You have not these papers with you?

A. No, sir.

Q. And as you refer to the reply of Mr. Anderson to my request to bring them, I infer you do not propose to bring them.

A. I do not know what the board intends to do.

Q. Answer whether you do or do not?

A. I could not bring them without consent of the board.

Q. During these eight or ten days have you ever asked for this consent?

A. No, sir; we have never spoken about it.

Q. You sent a communication about the second or third day of the meeting of this committee here stating that you would not produce them, and you must have had some consultation about it, as your name was signed to the communication.

A. We have not had any since then.

The SPEAKER. The regular order being called for, the morning hour now begins at twenty minutes past two o'clock. The business in order is the call of committees for reports, and the call rests with the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. COOK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back adversely the following bills, petitions, &c.; which were respectively laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

The bill (S. No. 828) for the relief of Peter Phillips;

Petition of Lieutenant B. R. Waller, Twentieth Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, for muster and pay;

A bill (H. R. No. 2555) to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the war for the suppression of the rebellion.

VETERANS OF MEXICAN WAR.

Mr. COOK also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it pass, the joint resolution (H. R. No. 173) granting permission to the officers and enlisted men of the Army and Navy to wear the medal badge adopted by the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War, on occasions of ceremony.

The joint resolution was read. It provides that all who served as officers, non-commissioned officers, privates, sailors, marines, or other enlisted men in the regular Army, Navy, volunteer, or militia forces of the United States, during the war with Mexico of 1846, 1847, and 1848, and have been honorably discharged from the service, or remain still in the same, shall be entitled to wear, on occasions of ceremony, the distinctive medal badge struck at the United States Mint in accordance with the design adopted by the National Association of Veterans of the Mexican War, and issued as the insignia of membership in said association.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that under the rules this measure should certainly be in the form of a bill, instead of a joint resolution. It appears to me not to come within that class of legislative enactments which are properly put in the form of joint resolutions.

The SPEAKER. Either form would accomplish the object.

Mr. HOLMAN. But certainly under the rules this should be a bill.

The SPEAKER. As a joint resolution it will require the approval of the President just as much as if it were a bill. Does the gentleman indicate any amendment?

Mr. HOLMAN. Only that under the rules of the House this measure should be a bill. I have no amendment to offer; I only make a suggestion.

Mr. COOK. The Committee on Military Affairs have unanimously approved this resolution in its present form. I ask that it be put on its passage.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COOK moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ARMY COMMISSION.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back joint resolution (S. No. 29) extending the time for the making of a report by the Army commission created by the act of July 24, 1876, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The joint resolution, which was read, provides that the period fixed by the fourth section of the act of July 24, 1876, making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, for the report of the commission named in said section be and is hereby extended to the 29th of January, 1877.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS also, from the same committee, reported back estimate of the treasurer of the Soldiers and Sailors' Orphans' Home for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1878, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which motion was agreed to.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. A. S. WILLIAMS also, from the same committee, made adverse reports in the following cases; which were laid on the table, and ordered to be printed:

Memorial of Albert G. Peabody, jr.;

A bill (H. R. No. 3157) for the relief of Second Lieutenant Lewis Merriam, Fourth Infantry, United States Army; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4171) for the relief of Alonzo W. Baker, late a private of Company A, Twenty-fourth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers.

VANCOUVER WATER COMPANY.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (S. No. 453) to authorize the Vancouver Water Company to lay water-pipes through the Fort Vancouver military reservation, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Vancouver Water Company, a company organized under the laws of Washington Territory, shall be authorized to lay down and keep in repair water-pipes for the conveyance of water through the military reservation of Fort Vancouver in said Territory, to be subject at all times to removal and to all orders and regulations of the War Department.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. JOHN REILLY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRESIDIO LANDS.

Mr. JOHN REILLY, from the same committee, reported back resolutions of the board of supervisors of San Francisco, in relation to the Presidio lands, and moved, as the legislation asked for had already passed the House, that the resolutions be laid on the table; which motion was agreed to.

THEODORE MOSHER, SIGNAL SERVICE.

Mr. BANNING, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4276) to authorize the appointment of a sergeant in the Signal Corps as a second lieutenant in the Army, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the President to appoint, and, by and with the consent of the Senate, to commission Theodore Mosher, jr., sergeant in the Signal Service of the United States, to be a second lieutenant in the Army, to fill any existing vacancy in any regiment, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1218, Revised Regulations; provided that said Mosher shall be duly found and deemed by the President to be otherwise qualified and eligible for such appointment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, should not that bill under the rules have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BANNING. I think not.

The SPEAKER. The bill on its face does not make an appropriation, although ultimately it may involve one, but that appropriation will have to be provided for in the Army appropriation bill. The Chair therefore gives the benefit of the doubt to the soldier.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. While I always sympathize with the Chair in his large-heartedness, yet I make the query because it is in the line of the decisions that we have had on this subject, and I think it would be well to have them carefully considered and followed. The rule says that "anything touching appropriations" shall be first considered in Committee of the Whole, and it seems where we directly incur liability the proposition does touch an appropriation of money, and should therefore have its first consideration in Committee of the Whole. But I do not insist on the point of order.

The SPEAKER The Chair so understood, that the gentleman did not resolutely insist on his point of order. He will, however, take occasion to examine this subject carefully for future action. The Chair sympathizes and harmonizes in judgment with the gentleman from Iowa, that this is merely a mode of escaping what is the clear purpose of the rules.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to be permitted to remark further that I cannot be outdone by the Speaker in generosity toward the soldier.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is quite aware of that fact, and is glad to acknowledge it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BANNING moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BENJAMIN F. REYNOLDS.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 1237) for the relief of Benjamin F. Reynolds, with amendments by the Senate, with the recommendaion that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out the word "first" and insert "twenty-ninth."
In line 7, strike out the word "March" and insert "April."
So that the bill, if amended, will read as follows:
That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Benjamin F. Reynolds, late captain of Company K, Forty-eighth Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, out of any money appropriated or which may hereafter be appropriated for the pay of the Army, a sum equal to the pay and emoluments of a captain of infantry from the 29th day of April, 1864, to the 22d day of May, 1864.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. TERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POINT SAN JOSÉ MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. TERRY, also from the same committee, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 2002, a bill (H. R. No. 4388) for the relief of the former occupants of the present military reservation at Point San José, in the city and county of San Francisco; which was read a first and second time.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to appoint a board of three Army officers, who shall go upon the military reservation at Point San José, in the city of San Francisco, in the State of California, and ascertain and report to the next Congress the facts in relation to—

First. Who were the occupants of any portions of said military reservation at the time the United States took military possession thereof in the year , their heirs, grantees, assigns, or personal representatives.

Second. What improvements had theretofore been erected upon any portions of said military reservation, by whom made, and the cash value of the same at the time of the occupation, and whether these improvements are of value to and have since been used and occupied by the United States.

And to enable the board to properly perform the duties hereby prescribed, they shall have power to send for persons and papers, examine witnesses on oath, and with their report they shall return the evidence taken before them and upon which their report is based. The board shall also be empowered to employ a stenographer.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. As this bill suspends the rules of the House I would like to have it again read.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the substitute or the original bill to be read?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The substitute.

The SPEAKER. It will be read again.

The substitute was again read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Part of the bill suspends the rules of the House, and I reserve my right to object until the gentleman reporting the bill gives the House some reasons why it should pass.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Speaker, this claim has been pending before Congress for many years, and a number of favorable reports have been made both by committees of the House and committees of the Senate. The committees in this case have not gone nearly as far as other committees have gone in favor of these claimants. Instead of reporting a bill making a direct appropriation we have taken what we regard as the best means of getting information upon which the House can safely act by sending a board of Army officers upon the ground to examine the improvements which have been put there; to ascertain whether they have been of value to the United States, and whether the United States have made use of those improvements or not.

The history of the case, in a word, is just this: This reservation was made by the order of President Fillmore, in 1851. The claimants allege that that order or proclamation announcing the reservation was never properly promulgated; that the citizens of San Francisco were in total ignorance of the reservation having been made, went upon the property, and made permanent and valuable improvements, and held it for years, the property in many instances passing from hand to hand by purchase. During the war, I think it was in 1863, this property was taken possession of for the first time by the military authorities of the United States. Now these claimants have asked for payment for the real estate. But the committee repudiate that claim, because the Supreme Court of the United States have held that they never had title to the property; but if they were allowed, in the face of the military authorities there, to make permanent and valuable improvements which the United States are to-day enjoying and occupying by the military, I say it is nothing but justice that these citizens should be paid the value of those improvements. That is the whole object of this substitute. It is to authorize the Secretary of War to appoint a board of officers to go there and examine and report to the next Congress what the facts are, so that Congress may then act intelligently upon it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia a question. There is nothing, as I understand, in this bill that binds Congress to pay the finding of this board of officers.

The SPEAKER. There is in the bill the employment of a stenographer, which requires an appropriation of money.

Mr. TERRY. I did not hear the question of this gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Is there anything in this bill that would bind the next Congress to appropriate anything?

Mr. TERRY. Not at all. We avoid any expense by appointing a board of Army officers who will doubtless be selected on the ground. It would cost nothing but the employment of a stenographer, and if that is made a point against the bill I will move to strike that clause out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will do so.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state also to the gentleman from Virginia that there is a blank which ought to be filled.

Mr. TERRY. We cannot fill that at present. I think it is 1863, but it will be a matter of evidence as to the time at which the military did take possession of Point San José.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HOLMAN,] to strike out the clause empowering the board to employ a stenographer.

Mr. BANNING. I object to that being stricken out.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is not stricken out the point of order will be insisted upon. It is an entirely unnecessary expense.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] reserves points of order upon the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not so understand. Does the gentleman from Iowa still insist upon any point of order?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No; but it is time enough now for anybody else to do it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would so rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall not insist upon the point of order if the stenographer is stricken out.

Mr. TERRY. I agree to striking out the stenographer.

Mr. BURCHARD, of Illinois. The amendment to the bill will not obviate the point of order.

The SPEAKER. But there is no point of order pending against the bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is to strike out the last clause of the bill, which provides for the employment of a stenographer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TERRY moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. H. WOODWARD.

Mr. TERRY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. No. 845) for the relief of W. H. Woodward, of Indianola, Texas.

The bill was read.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I make the point of order that that bill must have its first consideration in the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. TERRY. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order. I will have the report of the Senate upon this bill read, and I think it will satisfy him so thoroughly that he will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I think the bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and the report ordered to be printed.

PENSIONS TO DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. RUSK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (S. No. 234) to allow a pension of $37 per month to soldiers who have lost both an arm and a leg, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The bill was read. It provides that every person entitled to a pension under section 4698 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and who has lost one hand and one foot, shall be entitled to a pension of $37 per month, and that the act shall take effect from and after the 1st of September, 1876.
